My proclamation of the 22d of April 1793 is the index to my plan, sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let us firmly adhere to the principles of neutrality and deal justly and equitably with all foreign nations with malice toward none and friendship for all. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I realize that an adequate speech cannot be made on this subject in any 3 minutes. I started off with the idea in mind of having 20 minutes.

I realize, of course, that this is not a perfect bill that has emanated from any one brain. Much has been said about those who have contributed to the bill. We must not forget the hand of Secretary Cordell Hull and his part in it. Contributions have been made by others, even from the negative side of the subject, and still other contributions will go into the bill before its consideration is completed.

I realize, and I think we all realize, that the foreign policy of the United States is its first line of defense. Nothing is ever lost in an international relations policy by reason of clarity, plain dealing, candor, and a fair way of handling affairs. There are a few things that must be done in carrying out the Nation's foreign policy and there are a few things that we cannot forget, some things about which the United States must say, "This is ours, and we maintain it." That is done here, not as forcibly as it could be done, but as much as is dared to be done. This makes for peace and security, makes for the sort of thing that people understand. Would you rather in your personal affairs deal with a man when you know nothing of what is going on in his heart, or with one who has expressed himself, and you know where he stands? This is the issue: Whether a positive, absolute method of dealing with something set out in metes and bounds that are held up to the Nation shall obtain, or whether there shall be employed a method of inertia, inactivity, and negation. This, as I see it, is the issue here, the only thing on which any great issue has been drawn. So we have here the land of Thomas Jefferson, the country of Stephen Decatur and John Hay, the land in which Monroe laid down his famous doctrine. The policies outlined in the early days were clear enough, were they not? Whenever we have here a measure that can be brought before us that deals in fairness and sets up specific things on which we can put our finger and say, "This is what Uncle Sam will do," do not forget that whenever we move among nations and deal in international relations we always have to deal through the heads of the nation in a moving, changing picture; we must act through proclamation—proclamation by the Nation's head. This is what we are trying to say and do in the powers that are being given to the Chief Executive by this act. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

SELLING ARMS

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, the sole issue, in my judgment, is whether or not the arms embargo shall be continued. That policy was adopted by the almost unanimous action of this Congress 4 years ago.

We are now on the verge, apparently, of another cataclysm. There is a difference of opinion as to whether or not our failure to embargo arms 20 years ago brought us into the World War, but it cannot be successfully denied that we followed then the policy of international law which is now so earnestly urged as the prescription for our economic and international ills. We reelected a President upon the proposition that he kept us out of war; yet within 4 months after that, under this international law that we hear so highly touted now, America went into the war and from the consequences of that holocaust we are still struggling to free ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, 4 years ago this Congress solemnly resolved that we would do away with arms sales in the event of war. I hear it suggested that we leave freedom to the President. We decided after the World War that we would not guarantee the status quo. That was the meaning of the decision of America to stay out of the League of Nations; yet today we are being led toward the holocaust of war, not merely to guarantee the status quo but in order to follow a new and insidious doctrine of collective security which is held by those in high authority.

LIMITING POWERS OF PRESIDENT

We decided to limit the powers of the President and the Secretary of State because they were honest enough to tell us exactly what they believed. They believed that they should unite with the so-called democracies, in which they include Russia, the greatest and most sinister dictatorship on this earth, to prevent other countries from recovering what we ourselves at Versailles condemned as an unwise and unjust treaty—one that deprived great powers of things they should rightly have. Yet today we are being led again to the brink of that abyss. I ask that America stand by the policy solemnly adopted 4 years ago and that we keep America on a peacetime economy.

I recognize the subtle distinctions which may be drawn as to the sale of arms and other implements of war. I agree with all that. One may even point out that this goes to a substantial extent in the direction of that assistance to certain countries that some so much desire. But I say that America can guard its heritage by keeping our economy on a peacetime basis rather than by making America a great arsenal. France and Britain have not the gold to pay for a single year of war. That means we must either extend them credit or take goods in exchange. And all for what? To preserve the status quo that the statesmen of Great Britain themselves admit is utterly indefensible. [Applause.]

WAR OR PEACE?

The question of war or peace vitally concerns every town and every citizen of the United States. It is well that Congress and the country should pause occasionally to consider the direction in which we are being led.

Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland kept out of the World War, although those countries were on the very edge of the abyss with myriad daily contacts with both sides. Keeping America out of war should be much simpler when we contemplate our strength and our resources and the 3,000 miles of ocean that separate us from the scene of conflict.

What mysterious power cultivates so insistently and insidiously the idea that America must necessarily be involved in any future war? That idea is public enemy No. 1 to persuade us immediately to join Europe in choosing sides.

Congress by an overwhelming majority has adopted a certain policy to keep us out of war. Now it is proposed to change that policy in order, as everyone admits, to help one side in what is believed to be an impending conflict. By no stretch of the imagination can that be called neutrality.

WHAT IS THE ISSUE?

The immediate issue is as to what rules the Congress shall lay down for the conduct of our foreign relations in the event of war. At the present time in the event of war the President is obliged to stop all shipment of arms and munitions to any of the belligerents. The President wishes to do away with this limitation and permit belligerents to buy arms and munitions here, providing they pay for them in cash and take them away in other than American ships.

England and France are very much concerned that they shall be able to buy arms and munitions in this country in the event of a European war. The British Navy would presumably control the sea and be able to carry the munitions to Europe; America would thus become a great arsenal for supplying Britain and France.

GOOD BUSINESS OR FOOL'S GOLD

At first flush this seems like a good business proposition. Those who oppose this proposal, however, point out that the gold supplies of Britain and France are now depleted to such an extent that they would be able to pay for these munitions in cash only for a very limited period, even assuming we wanted any more gold. Fool's gold it has well been called. Thereafter we should be obliged to take goods of some character in exchange. This would mean that while we would occupy some Americans in making munitions we would throw other Americans out of employment in the industries affected by the imports from abroad. Gradually our entire economy would become dislocated. America would find itself on a war basis until finally our participation in the war might again seem the only solution of our troubles. Some suggest that this is a part of the plan.

This past week, coincident with the return of the King and Queen to London, it was announced that discussions were underway regarding the refunding of the British debt in order to clear the path for further loans from America.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN TO AMERICA?

Every town in America contributed boys to the last war, and some of them never returned. This will be even more the case in the next war, as the instruments of destruction have so terrifically increased. As we witness the havoc wrought by the last war on our economic structure—with the consequences of which we have been struggling for the past decade—one is compelled to wonder what would be the results upon our economy of embarking in another major war, not with the comparatively puny debts of 1914 but with a national debt now approaching $45,000,000,000.

TWO SIDES

Let us be fair and admit that there are two sides to this argument and that there are many sincere and patriotic Americans ranged on each side.

COLLECTIVE SECURITY

One point of view emphasizes collective security. The advocates of this viewpoint insist that dictatorships are now abroad ravaging the world. The gangster tactics of certain world rulers, it is urged, are more and more evident, and their objectives are becoming clear. Meanwhile the great democracies of the earth, represented by Great Britain and France, find themselves increasingly pressed on every hand with the prospect of a major conflict with the totalitarian powers in Europe and in Asia.

The possibility is persuasively portrayed that Germany, Italy, and Japan may gang up on France and England and destroy the British Empire and then at their leisure move on America. Accordingly, it is urged that it is much more prudent for America to take a hand in the struggle before it is too late and save Great Britain and France from destruction, at least by furnishing arms and ammunition and other supplies, and, if necessary, by armed intervention on the part of the United States.

AN AMERICAN VIEWPOINT

The opponents of collective security argue that the danger of disintegration of the British Empire is greatly exaggerated and that Europe possesses all the forces necessary to curb the totalitarian states. The vast strength of the British Empire, both in men and materials, is pointed out—with almost 50 percent of the resources of the inhabitable globe in the possession of Great Britain and with a navy that dominates the seven seas.

The smaller democracies of Europe are meanwhile in intimate contact with the scene. They remained out of the last war because they did not apparently believe their vital interests to be involved and suffered comparatively little harm. While they individually are of small consequence, they collectively represent a considerable force and also considerable resources. They are far more vitally involved than the United States in the preservation of democracy in Europe and may be depended upon to act when, as, and if they believe democracy is really at stake.

In addition there is Russia with its vast resources and manpower and potentialities of various kinds. There is nothing to indicate that Russia proposes to let Germany, Italy, or Japan become dominant in the world as their ambitions and ideologies clash at a hundred different points, and sooner or later the Russian deluge will let loose. Russia has a variety of vital interests in Europe and in Asia that must inevitably become involved in any major European or Asiatic strife, and Russia may be depended upon to see to it that neither Germany nor Japan become dominant in the world scene.

The British are obviously reluctant to do business with Stalin since he is fully as ruthless a dictator as any ruler in the world. This demonstrates, however, that the problem is not one of ideologies but of the age-old racial and territorial quarrels of Europe and Asia with which America has no primary concern.

Great Britain would very much prefer to do business with the United States. The only difficulty is that we have no vital interests that are immediately involved since our trade stakes in either Asia or Europe are not worth a month of war nor the life of a single American doughboy.

ADEQUATE ARMAMENT

There is a strongly American point of view that desires to see America adequately prepared to protect the American hemisphere north and south against encroachment of any kind and then to bide our time and wait and watch developments across the sea without involving ourselves in entangling alliances or committing ourselves to the course that we shall follow in any circumstances when they arise.

Meanwhile, it will be well for America to give very serious thought to foreign affairs and to the sacrifices that are inevitably involved in any major conflict overseas. Not the last of the sacrifices will be the remnants of our democracy, as America is altogether likely to go totalitarian the day war is declared.

MIND OUR BUSINESS

The President apparently has a Messianic complex to make the world safe for what he terms "democracy," although this includes the most ruthless dictatorship the world has ever seen in Soviet Russia. No challenge of his sincerity is involved in pausing to consider before plunging America into the maelstrom of another war.

America may yet be the "lost horizon" where some semblance of our civilization may be preserved.

The historic policy of America laid down by George Washington is to mind our own business. We violated that principle in the last war and are still struggling with the consequences.

Great Britain has grown great and has contributed greatly to the progress of civilization and the stabilization of society by looking strictly after its own particular interests and not permitting purely sentimental or idealistic considerations to determine its course of action in various portions of the globe.

America may profitably study this example and be sure that the vital interests of America are at stake before we become involved in controversies in other hemispheres.

Let America get ready. Then let America be still. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote against the Bloom bill in its present form. In my opinion, section 4 is at least as objectionable as section 3, which the committee has indicated will be deleted from the bill by a committee amendment. There is little use arguing against the Bloom bill, because, thus far, the arguments advanced in its favor have only been directed toward the bill with the first "whereas" clause and section 16—the repeal clause—included and the rest of the bill entirely eliminated. As to a bill in this form, some very eloquent but somewhat questionable arguments have been made. The chief claim of the proponents of the present bill is that it grants the Executive no powers which he does not already possess under the Constitution. Consequently, to pass the bill, except for the above referred to parts, would be a useless gesture. If this argument of the proponents is so, it is certainly ridiculous for Congress to hand out powers it does not possess to a branch of the Government which already possesses them. If this argument is so, why should Congress assume, or attempt to assume, a responsibility which it does not have when, under the Constitution, it lacks the power to control the incidents of this responsibility? Clearly under this argument this bill rests an unwarranted responsibility on the Congress, while the executive branch retains the complete power which it always has had under the Constitution and always will have unless the Constitution is amended.

On the other hand, if this argument of the proponents is not so, then clearly, by the language of the bill, we are granting extensive powers to the Presidential office. This would be most unfortunate, particularly when we do not know in advance what powers may or may not be necessary and useful under conditions which may or may not materialize in the future.

Whether we hesitate to give or assume to give additional powers to the Presidential office because of doubts as to whether they should be given, or whether we hesitate to transfer those powers because they cast such a tremendous burden and responsibility on the Presidential office, it seems to me that we should vote against this bill.

In conclusion, all I have to say is that no matter what kind of a bill is passed here this afternoon—be it good, bad, or indifferent—it is my hope and prayer that in any event we do not become involved in any foreign wars. We can talk all we want to about what the Congress can do to prevent a war, and what the President can do, and what the Secretary of State can do, but in the last analysis, in my opinion, it is going to depend on the state of mind of the great body of good, sound American citizens. If they do not permit themselves to be swayed by propaganda and hysteria, but continue to view current conditions with their customary good judgment and good sense, this country will not become embroiled in a war. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time remaining on this side.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that if this bill is adopted without the arms embargo and a war breaks out in Europe, we will be in that war following our arms traffic and be sending our youth over there within 6 months. I am also convinced that if we get into another world war, we will come out of that war a bankrupt Nation, win or lose. I am further convinced that if we get into another world war, we will lose our own free institutions and come out of that war either a Fascist or a Communist nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, as I look back over my record of a little more than 6 years in this House, I can recall but few of my votes on important measures which I would now change, regretting the position I took when the bills were up for final passage. One outstanding exception to the record which appears to me fairly satisfactory is the present neutrality law. I voted for it because it seemed to be a solution and we were fascinated by the word "neutrality." It was in the air. Most of us voted for it. Many times I have been sorry that I did so. If I interpret correctly the story of world affairs since the passage of that neutrality legislation, I must conclude that it has offered great encouragement to the aggressor nations, namely Germany, Italy, and Japan. Indeed, as far as shipment of munitions is concerned, we were neutral in the great conflict in Spain and, as a result, the fires of liberty and freedom which were glowing brightly in that country such a short time ago have been extinguished, and today, if reports are true, thousands of the fine patriotic men and women of Spain are facing the firing squads. Yes, we refused to sell arms to a nation begging to buy them, thus remaining "neutral" while helpless, struggling people went down before foreign conquerors, who used the arms and munitions furnished those aggressor nations—Italy and Germany. During all the time the conflict was going on, Italy and Germany denied that their soldiers were, in any numbers, fighting in Spain or that they were furnishing munitions and airplanes. We now have incontrovertible evidence from their own present boasts that what they then said was not the truth. I cannot imagine that any Member of this House wants to see the reign of Hitler further extended throughout Europe, wants to see Hitler "kultur" imposed upon the world.

We know that in our attempt to be neutral, under the present law, China is being slowly conquered in an undeclared war waged by one of the aggressor nations. Genghis Khan and Tamerlane were never, in their most bloody campaigns, more cruel than is the present conqueror of China.

By allowing Japan to buy in our ports the larger portion of the raw materials which they converted into instruments of destruction, we have aided another ruthless aggressor.

No sane, right-minded person wants war. Not a Member of this House would, under any conditions, vote for war if it could possibly be prevented. But, unfortunately, the decision on war may not be made on this floor nor by the Members of this Congress. If we are again forced into a war it will, in all probability, be because of conditions we are helpless to prevent. The question for us to consider is what legislation will be the most valuable in keeping us out of the coming conflict. I think the great majority of the students today freely admit that a great conflict seems imminent, and not because the democracies of western Europe desire it. They know they must defend their own sources of food supplies, and their own shores. They cannot submit to the surrender of further territory, as they have unfortunately done in Austria and Czechoslovakia. When the next great push comes, engineered by Hitler and the group behind him, resistance must be offered by France and England. Further concessions on their part will be a confession of fatal weakness.

This legislation which we are now considering and will finally enact will in all probability be the law by which we shall be governed when the next great conflict comes, whether it is in the immediate future or removed some years. If we can, from their past conduct, forecast the plans of Hitler and Mussolini, then we must conclude that the conflict is inevitable. I am well aware, as we all are, that such a war would result in annihilation of the tangible evidences of great civilizations. Airplanes coming over by thousands, dropping their bombs on Paris, London, and the industrial centers of western democracies, would leave complete wreckage. Of course, if aggression comes, the European democracies must fight back. They cannot surrender achievements of a thousand years and allow Hitler and Mussolini to divide the world between them, reducing proud people to the position of mere slaves and serfs. They must resist strongly with all the modern resources at their command or face horrible consequences—helpless, absolutely helpless, in this day of machinery and chemicals used for destruction of human beings.

There is little chance of a rise of the common people in a rebellion in Italy or Germany. Modern methods of destruction are so ruthless, instruments of war are so terrible and so controlled by governments, and chemicals in quantity are so essential, there is simply no opportunity for those in opposition to tyrants to rise, throw off the yoke, and establish different forms of government. In the centuries of the past, when our ancestors could go into the forests and fashion bows or stout clubs in preparation for a clash with the best-trained troop of despots, there was a possible chance for an uprising, but there is precious little today, in this day of secret police, concentration camps, purges, and mass executions. So if the reign of the aggressors is to be resisted, that resistance must come when the aggressor nations fix the time by making demands to which the western democracies cannot accede. It is my opinion that time would have arrived before this had it not been for the message of our President addressed to Hitler, causing the war vendors of Germany to stop, listen, and consider. They have worked up such a spirit of war, accumulated such a mass of machinery and bombs, and are kept at such fever heat that the slightest incident may push some group over the danger line and then the conflict will be on.

Is any Member of this House so forgetful of the history of civilization as to think we could preserve the neutrality required under the present law if England and France were begging us to sell them guns and airplanes for their defense? If they offer to pledge the balances that they hold in our banks and the last remnants of their gold, can we refuse to make such sales? Should we resist their pleas?

I am for this bill because I have faith that our President is just as desirous of keeping us out of war as is any Member on this floor. I am for this bill because the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, has said publicly that he believes the right to sell arms and munitions of war in case of a conflict would be potent toward peace and not for war. He spent years in this House and in the other body, always honestly in the service of the people, and while I have doubted the wisdom of some of his decisions since he has been Secretary of State, no one doubts his integrity nor his desire to maintain peace and to preserve American institutions.

I am for this bill because it does the very thing public opinion will force us to do should we some day, in the near or distant future, read in the papers that much of London is in ashes and Paris a ruin. The most bitter opponent of this bill could not resist the public indignation which would flame all over our country should this disaster come and this House continue to refuse to send munitions of war to the suffering, bleeding democracies of western Europe. I know many on this floor find much pleasure in bitterly criticizing England and at times she and her statesmen certainly merit the most vehement denunciation. We should not, however, forget that we speak the English language, and that English traditions and English history, with all its mistakes, have been the background from which has come our American institutions. We must acknowledge that our heritage of freedom came largely as a result of their struggles. Sad, indeed, would be the day for America, should Hitler and Mussolini rule supreme and Britannia no longer "rule the waves."

I am for this bill because it is a clear-cut attempt to go just as far back as we can go to the old law of international relations, which is the outgrowth of the customs of the centuries. Time after time, on this floor, I have heard different Members speak bitter words about our entrance into the great World War. I am one who still believes that we went into that war to save civilization from a German peace, and that, while we made tremendous sacrifices of lives and of money and of morale and stability, we did prevent worldwide domination of German militarism in a most terrible form. I believe it would then have been imposed upon the world and that by this time we would have been forced to isolate ourselves from Europe, which would have meant a complete reversal of our economy. Future historians will, I think, give full credit to the heroes of that struggle for saving a civilization which we must now protect by taking a stand through legislation, happily not through warfare.

I do not belong to that class which cries for peace at any price and advocates avoidance of war under any and all conditions. I think one of the worst things that came to America in that trying period of the World War was the sentiment which swept through the land with the expression "We are too proud to fight." It made the German general staff believe that under no condition would we fight. Had England during the last days of July 1914, speaking through Lord Grey, said to the Kaiser: "If you invade France by way of Belgium and make a scrap of paper of that treaty protecting the neutrality of Belgium, and solemnly entered into, then you will meet the full force of the British Empire, for we will be on the side of France," then the Kaiser would never have brought on the World War.

If we pass this neutrality act by a good, strong vote, I believe it will have a deterrent influence on Hitler and Mussolini, as did Roosevelt's letter some weeks ago. If Hitler and Mussolini really know that the factories and farms of America could be used to supply the French and English armies, I believe they will be very reluctant to bring on the conflict. If, on the other hand, this legislation should fail, then the aggressor nations, Germany and Italy and Japan, will believe that our country is so divided there can be no united support for the democracies of the world, and they will be more apt to precipitate the struggle.

I shall vote for the pending bill because I believe it is a war deterrent, because I believe it will do more than any other course we can follow to ward off the continued aggressions of Hitler and Mussolini.

The debate on this neutrality bill is the most interesting and important that has taken place in this House since I have been a Member of it. Many of our keenest and ablest Members have analyzed the situation from every angle, have set forth their views in carefully written and most eloquently spoken words. Those who have been schooled by committee hearings and intensive study have brought to us statements of their conclusions which afford guidance to those of us who have not had the advantages of such stores of information. An old farmer from the mountains of eastern Oregon cannot hope to compete with brilliant colleagues who have taken part in this discussion. Because I do feel so strongly on this matter I have gladly accepted the opportunity to make a few observations which appear to me to be important. I have, since early youth, been an avid reader of history. I taught it for years with enthusiasm which I strove to impart to my students. The import of its lessons has been the theme of my thoughts during long days of riding in the hills of the cattle country. I am now so stirred by those lessons and memories and by the present occasion that I feel impelled to set forth my views in the hope that some younger Member may be moved to more thoughtful consideration of a point of view resulting from long years of study and contemplation. I believe we must now take a stand dictated by reasoning and based upon the teachings of history and our own experience in international affairs.

Yesterday morning the papers carried the information that the British fleet has, under orders, taken the first of its battle-line positions north of Scotland, just as the fleet did in July 1914. The Premier of France announces that there are 3,000,000 heavily armed men on the borders of France, all prepared to jump at the throat of that much-harrassed nation. Every nation of Europe is either mobilized or semi-mobilized. England has moved up war maneuvers from September to August; the very air is charged and supercharged with rumors of war. English boys who are trained aviators sit in their planes all night long near the English Channel, ready to go into the air at a moment's notice to meet in the great "central blue" the enemy planes of the aggressor nations. Truly the conflict so graphically foretold by Tennyson long years ago in his Locksley Hall seems about to occur.

The choice of whether that catastrophe and dread destruction should come is not up to England, nor will the decision be made by Scandinavian nations. Madly ambitious, war-crazed men are again in control of Germany, Italy, and Japan. I firmly believe that the men and women in the homes of those countries do not want to fight, and that if they had a chance to express themselves freely they would overwhelmingly vote against further encroachment or aggression, but citizens of the aggressor nations are mere pawns moved by others, they are as impotent as the clouds that float above them. It would seem to us observers on this side of the Atlantic that Great Britain and France can retreat no further. It would seem that the time for a stand has come, as it came to General Haig when the British Army fought every day and retreated every night, and he issued his now famous order, "We retreat no further, here is where we win or die." The western democracies have allowed aggressor nations to absorb proud Austria, brave and industrious Czechoslovakia, rugged Albania, and patient, long-suffering Spain. The next unholy demand of Hitler is awaited with dread and anxiety. Action would seem to be the only antidote to the ghastly fear which has enveloped Europe.

Should we some morning in the near future read in our papers that much of London and Paris were in ruins and many of their munition factories destroyed, could we justify our course before the eternal bar of history if we then refused to sell airplanes and munitions of war to those bleeding democracies of western Europe? They would be ready to buy them, to pay for them, and transport them across the ocean at their own risk. Do you think we, in the name of humanity, could refuse to open up our almost unlimited resources to the nations of Europe which are today defending the principles of free government? If any act of this Congress can avert the expected conflict, we have no right to withhold it. If any act of ours will strengthen the hands of democracies, we have no right to withhold it. We still have a lingering hope that all nations will realize the utter futility and tragic waste of war and will ultimately join in a federation of the world.

People of all nations know mistakes were made at the conclusion of the Great War, and that "yesterday this day's madness did prepare," but the great majorities are helpless. You and I are privileged to take a stand—to make a definite move toward peace. Upon us rests a burden and an obligation.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOUTON].

Mr. MOUTON. Mr. Chairman, after all the splendid oratorical efforts that have been made by so many of my distinguished colleagues, all with such long years of brilliant service as Members of this body, in analyzing and explaining the provisions of the neutrality bill now under consideration by the Committee of the Whole, House Joint Resolution 306, it is hardly conceivable that I, a comparative newcomer, should presume too greatly upon your time and attention with a lengthy dissertation of the merits of this proposal. I do want, however, to say these few words about my individual sentiments concerning the same.

I believe, and I weigh my words carefully when I say this, that this resolution represents just about the best possible solution, or compromise, if you care to call it such, to this momentous and highly controversial subject which your Committee on Foreign Affairs could bring forth. To our esteemed and lovable acting chairman, SOL BLOOM, belongs the greatest of praise for his diligent and tireless labors on this question. He has given unstintingly of his time and energy over these past few months in presiding over the long and tedious hearings and the many executive sessions held by the committee in working out and perfecting this most patriotic of all legislative undertakings—fabricated solely for the purpose of keeping our great Nation out of war. He has done a masterful job; one of which he can feel justifiably proud. To our very able acting chairman, alone, however, does not the entire credit and praise belong; to the full membership of the committee, majority and minority alike, do I, likewise, pay tribute for their altruism, ability, and unity of purpose.

Neutrality, Mr. Chairman, is, at best, a most difficult subject with which to cope. There are many and varied views as to just how real, genuine neutrality on the part of our country in the event of future foreign wars can best be attained. I may say right now, however, that I am thoroughly in accord with the often repeated statements made by Members on both sides of the aisle, that there is no question but that all are sincere in the belief that their particular brand of neutrality will most effectively accomplish the all-consuming desire to keep the United States out of foreign embroilments. To that end we are all united. We are divided only as to the best means to attain that end. I have a healthy respect and high regard for the motives of each Member of this Congress on that score.

While certain Members, or groups of Members, may entertain views of quite an opposite nature, I believe that your Committee on Foreign Affairs has come to you with a bill that will best insure our being neutral in future foreign conflicts. Briefly summarizing its contents: Section 1 places upon the President the duty of naming the nations involved, in the event he finds that a state of war exists. This, then, to a degree, makes possible the operation of the following sections of the proposal. Section 2 is designed to lessen our chances of becoming involved in foreign conflicts by placing the responsibility for personal safety squarely upon the individual who chooses to travel in ships of belligerent nations. Section 3, I understand, is to be deleted by mutual consent, so I will, therefore, pass over same without comment. Section 4 considers the permitting of commercial short-time obligations of peacetime character in the United States for nations proclaimed to be at war. This is tantamount to a cash transaction in every accepted sense and is designed only as a normal and reasonable aid to those engaged in foreign commercial affairs. Section 4, also proposes to strike another blow at the yoke of foreign entanglements, by following the same cautious line of thought as contained in section 2, except that the theory is applied to materials and supplies, instead of humans, being transported to proclaimed belligerents. Complete transfer of title to the foreign government or agent or agency concerned, of all articles or materials being shipped to belligerents from our country, is required under this section. Again, it follows, by taking every precaution humanly possible to remove the cause, you will have progressed a long step toward removing the effect. After such a cargo or shipment leaves our shores, it becomes solely and entirely the responsibility of the titleholder and, thereby, precludes the possibilities of the development of a series of circumstances giving rise to an undesirable and unpleasant situation involving the seizure or destruction of American property. This, with certain innovations, is merely a continuation of the "cash-and-carry" feature of the act of May 1, 1937, which feature expired May 1, 1939. Section 5 prohibits the solicitation and collection of funds in our country to aid belligerent governments. Section 7 is designed to prevent the use of American ports as a base of supply for foreign nations proclaimed to be at war. Sections 8 and 10 are designed, respectively, to restrict the use of American ports and territorial waters by submarines and armed merchant vessels of foreign nations, and the continuing of the set-up and functions of the National Munitions Control Board for the administering of the provisions of the resolution and for the licensing of exports and imports of arms, munitions, and implements of war. Section 9, I understand, is to be stricken from the bill by mutual agreement.

Most of the provisions of the resolution now under consideration are for the purpose of continuing in effect similar, or essentially similar, provisions in the present neutrality law, the major differences being the discontinuance of the embargo on arms and the renewal, with minor alterations, of the so-called cash-and-carry feature of the old law, which, as said before, expired on May 1, 1939. After exhaustive hearings on the subject, and after due deliberation, your Committee on Foreign Affairs is of the opinion that these changes and rectifications are warranted and will bring our country closer to the realization of a true status of neutrality should hostilities develop abroad. Nothing has been said by the opposition to the bill that has not already had full and careful consideration by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and I see no logical reasons why the neutrality of the United States, designed along the lines and principles laid down in the pending proposal, should fail to be effective, as well as is humanly possible to contemplate, when placed into practice.

I believe that the bill is worthy of the approval of the Committee of the Whole and I urge that, regardless of political faith or creed, we rally behind it and support it to the very utmost. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY].

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, the people of Oklahoma want America to stay out of war. They are certain that the last war was unprofitable to this country, from both a financial as well as a moral standpoint.

Any attempt at neutrality by passing legislation, viewed at its best, has been unsatisfactory. The acts of 1935 and of 1937 have been faulty. Situations are constantly arising that are unpredictable, and we have been finding ourselves hampered by the very laws we have passed in the hope of achieving neutrality.

In my judgment we can rely on the good judgment and the patriotism of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, who have recommended this legislation. The traditions and history of our country have established that, regardless of party, our great Presidents were actuated in international affairs with pure motives and with an eye single to the interest of the people of America.

It may well be that it is safe to amend the bill so as to return to the tenets of international law, but failing in that it is the part of wisdom to follow the advice of those charged with the responsibility for foreign affairs, namely, the President and the Secretary of State.

This seems to be a proper time to discuss a subject that is of interest to thousands of Americans—the metaphysical side of the whole question of international relations, and practical means of approaching nearer to the diplomatic efficiency that is useful in national crises as well as such preparation for them as may be made.

Discouragement and pessimism are the devil's weapons. Persevering effort is profitable in this line as in others.

Feudalism, dueling, witchcraft, human slavery have gone by the board. We thought our way out of them. A few of our superstitions, too. It is inconceivable that we may, and inevitable that we must, think our way out of bigotry, hatred, war, and depression. Even the cynics would concede that the effort to do so is worth while—that there is glory even in trying.

The battle plan is not necessarily one of armies, navies, or air forces; mental and moral cooperation for a better world order is the prime requisite. From principle has flowed the world's mental progress, and from principle it will still proceed.

All over the land the cry has gone up for better service. Training for public service. For the Nation and the world. How noble and comprehensive it sounds. How can we apply it with wisdom and patience to the daily needs of people and nations? What practical suggestions offer to breast the opposition to things new and out of the regular channel?

The doctor, the lawyer, and the engineer is expected to undergo a long period of training before he practices his profession. The plumber, the carpenter, the bricklayer is expected to serve an apprenticeship before he is master of his trade. In this age of specialization the craftsman and the professional man, to be respected in his line, must qualify by training and experience. Before he can regularly engage in his occupation he must undergo intensive preparation. Complexity requires such skilled training, and all concede its desirability and its necessity.

But, through some strange and unaccountable quirk of the public mind, such reasoning does not apply to those engaged in public service. All sorts of obstacles stand in the way of the development of the profession of civil servant. The slow and expensive school of hit-and-miss experience has trained (or not trained) too many public officials. We have used the trial-and-error method—trial while one administration has been in office and error of the individual's being swept out later by the spoils system. For instance, local elections often turn on the supposed convictions of the candidates with regard to, say, war debts, the tariff, the League of Nations, prohibition, and other matters unrelated to the proper selection of the elective or appointive officer. Fitness is often forgotten.

The Army has its West Point and the Navy its Annapolis for the training and education of two of the most highly respected and efficient personnels to be found anywhere in the world. It is economic good sense to have similar and comparable training and education for those who administer our domestic affairs and treat the diplomatic issues abroad.

No system of training is found in our governmental scheme of things for the diplomatic and administrative career service comparable to the specialization for force on land and sea, exemplified by West Point and Annapolis. Incredible. But it is not enough to inquire why, but to point out how the lapse may be rectified.

I have proposed a National Academy of Public Affairs to be located at Washington, the nerve center of the Government of the Nation.

West Point and Annapolis are world-wide in their implications and acceptance. The military leaders on either side of our only Civil War were graduates of West Point. In the World War a West Pointer commanded the Army, and Annapolis produced the admirals. The Academy of Public Affairs, had it been established a few generations ago, conceivably would have produced the diplomatic brains for our part in the World War.

By the terms of the bill introduced by me (H. R. 1957) there would be established in Washington, where the Father of his Country visualized a great American university, a national academy of public affairs. Its function would be the education of young Americans in diplomatic and administrative career service—specialized civil servants. The school would be free of charge, coeducational, nonsectarian, and nonpartisan, operated by a board composed of certain Cabinet members; namely, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, Commerce, Agriculture, and Labor.

The Cabinet members, while politically selected, have almost uniformly in the last half century been appointed by reason of their attainments in various walks of life. Without exception, the Presidents of both political parties have sought to rise above party politics in the selection of their intimate advisers in the Cabinet. So the board of supervisors for the academy would be composed of outstanding American citizens with a broad comprehension of the needs of the Nation. This board would select the faculty, officers, would prescribe the course of study, entrance requirements, and regulate the conduct of the academy. It would also determine whether the school should be a postgraduate institution, and fix the term required for graduation.

The general idea is to create an institution for metaphysical purposes comparable in plan, form, and intentment to Annapolis and West Point, which are so high in public esteem in America and the world. Young America clamors for the honor and recognition of appointments to these two academies. Young America's parents are proud to have the honor conferred upon their sons. Visualize expectant American youth eager to enter the national academy of public affairs, an institution not of force but of mental defense.

The courses of study would, of course, be developed as the institution grew in public opinion and experience. It would be logical to anticipate that the curriculum would include language, history, and government. Economic history, sociology, international law, and structure and functions of government, both domestic and foreign, would naturally have a place. Political history, the study of political parties, statistics, the principles of public administration, and finance, also social and economic planning, government accounting, public-welfare administration, diplomatic study of public opinion, and world trends of civilization, modern, medieval, and ancient, would properly come within the range of study prescribed for students at the academy.

The selection of the students by the President, Senators, and Congressmen is provided. It cannot properly be said there is any political taint in that system. It has been in vogue for generations in the selection of candidates to West Point and Annapolis, and has been uniformly successful, producing a high order of scholarship. It guarantees a broad cross-section of the whole population of the States better than any other plan would or could. This tested means of selection has general public approval—it would not seem wise to deviate from such a plan. It has a historic background of national acceptance.

Why spend the public money in this manner? Why are not the endowed colleges and State universities doing or capable of doing the same training contemplated by the academy? There is a quick answer—we have many military academies in America—yet none of them approach the standing of West Point. The R. O. T. C. units in the college can never hope to compete with the Military Academy. West Point and Annapolis represent the Government. National and world opinion would favorably receive an official institution and its graduates; it has been slow to accept the private or State institution and its product for the particular capacity under discussion. Training for the Government should be training by the Government. The civil servant who would graduate from the academy would receive recognition the world over, because of the very fact that his training came under the direction of the Nation itself. In 150 years of national life, no college, no matter how popular it may have become along other lines, has achieved any considerable or outstanding reputation for the training of the civil servant.

The location of an academy of public affairs in Washington would assure the student ample contact with the realities of government and administration, and prevent overemphasis of the theoretic and academic. It would open up a large and highly important field to able young people. Thousands would dedicate their lives to the ideals which the institution would represent. Changing social conditions require new means of attacking new problems; changing world conditions justify another look in the direction for the public service. From the broad cross section of American life, from which it would be selected, the student body would represent imagination and foresight coupled with native ability, broad training and discipline in judgment, initiative, decision, foresight, and expression which would give the academy and its graduates a high place in thoughtful public opinion in America and in the world.

It should be one more nail in the coffin of the spoils system. The realist as well as the idealist should approve. Each administration has its "brain trusters" whose work is crippled by the political shafts aimed at them. Conceivably, we might by this movement, amongst others, develop an administrative personnel that would obviate the need to draft dollar-a-year men or "brain trusters" when serious emergencies arise.

Our Diplomatic Service is remarkably lacking in career-service personnel. To say the least, graduates of the academy of public affairs would have special training to fit them for the Diplomatic Service, and from that should grow outstanding examples of trained and poised American diplomacy. It has been said that America never lost a war nor won a conference. The day must come when she must attain success in the field of diplomacy as she has in war and in business.

Graduates of the institution would not necessarily remain in the service of the Federal Government. All graduates of the Naval and Military Academies do not. Many of them would likely enlist in the rank of municipal and State governmental service. Their training would make them desirable. There are foreign fields to which they might attain. We might even elect some of them to Congress or to governorships.

Fifteen hundred scholars run the British Government. The British civil service, impervious to politics and by law forbidden to participate therein, has attained such a high standing that it is an insult to assert its integrity. Britain has arrived at this stage by slow and painful progress when we think of the parliamentary corruption of, say, the time of the Pitts. America will, of course, come into her own in that regard, but the outstanding reputation of the academy would bring us to that stage decades sooner than otherwise, because in a few years it would be so entrenched in the hearts and minds of the American people that its atmosphere and its graduates would be accepted not only in America but the world over. It would soon couple the practical with the sentimental.

We are evidently undergoing a renaissance of political thought in America. One achievement of this renaissance might conceivably be the establishment of the national academy of public affairs. The end sought is not the education of human robots, but leadership in the inevitable new world order.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time remaining on this side to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON].

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, for 2 days we have debated this bill, and the last statement made by the ranking minority Member upon the committee is the keynote of every word, practically, that has been said against it. His statement was that if the arms embargo was repealed it would involve us in a foreign war. I have heard debate for 2 days upon that question and no one, not even the distinguished gentleman who made that statement, has pointed out one single reason why that statement is true. The House is not going to accept the conclusions of those who oppose this bill and say that it will involve us in war, when no one has pointed out in the slightest particular how the repeal of the arms embargo will get us into war, or tend to get us into war.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I do not have time to yield now, which I regret.

What I said in opening the debate upon this question was that it was the delivery and transportation of arms and not their sale that was calculated to get us into war. If there exists some reason why repeal of the arms embargo will get us into war, someone of those who spoke would have discovered it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I regret I cannot yield. I have only 5 minutes.

They talked about the Netherlands, and they talked about the Scandinavian countries and their not being involved in war. Let me call your attention to the fact that the Scandinavian countries were not separated from the Central Powers by an ocean, like the United States. They did not have to transport arms and munitions or goods overseas.

That is where our trouble arose. It is because of questions that arise with reference to the rights of our citizens upon the ocean in their own travels and in the shipment of their goods that we must remove some of the causes that might bring about these irritations. I say that if we had had the law we now have when the World War came on our chances of becoming involved would have been far less remote. What brought us into the World War? It was the shipment of our goods, it was the destruction of the lives of our people upon the high seas, it was the credit that we granted to foreign nations. They are what brought us into the war. It was not the sale of arms or the sale of goods.

I shall vote against any amendment to go back to international law and repeal the entire Neutrality Act because I believe we had international law in 1917 and it did not keep us out of war. What we are trying to do by this bill now is to remove the causes that got us into war before.

To those who believe this bill is not the right kind of a bill, let me cite in conclusion an interview I had this morning with Secretary Hull. Let me call your attention to the fact that this bill was drafted on the recommendations of the Secretary of State after he had conferred with Members of both bodies, and it embodies what he believes is the very best means to keep us out of war.

I desire to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that in order that there may be no misunderstanding in this House, I can assure you that Secretary Hull today stands by the position taken in his letter of May 27, 1939, which is in the hearings, and upon which this bill was based. The legislative suggestions outlined in that letter are incorporated substantially in the joint resolution now before us. The suggestions outlined in that letter and contained in this bill Secretary Hull believes to be the most effective legislative contribution at this time toward keeping this country out of war if war occurs.

I say this to the Members of the House: If we want to get ready to prevent our involvement in war, let us stand by this resolution. Let us enact now, before war breaks, these provisions which I believe will go a long way toward preventing our involvement.

The gentleman from Illinois talked about war hysteria and about excitement. Of course, it will come. Before it comes, let us set our house in order. Let us say to our citizens, "We are not going to be responsible for the shipment of your goods." Let us say to them, "We are not responsible for your transportation upon the vessels of belligerents." Let us say to Europe, "We are not going to finance another war. We are not going to permit you to send your bonds here. We are not going to lend you money. You must pay cash for what you get." Let us say to our citizens, "In order to be neutral and prevent hysteria, nobody on either side can come over here and take up a collection, which will create a feeling of sentiment or loyalty to one side or the other." America will stand for peace, and that is what this bill is intended for. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc.,

PROCLAMATION OF A STATE OF WAR BETWEEN FOREIGN STATES

SECTION 1. (a) That whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between foreign states, and that such war endangers the lives of citizens of the United States and threatens the peace of the United States, the President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved; and he shall, from time to time, by proclamation, name other states as and when they may become involved in the war.

(b) Whenever the conditions which have caused the President to issue any proclamation under the authority of this section have ceased to exist, he shall revoke the same.

Mr. TINKHAM (interrupting the reading of sec. 1). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk is just beginning to read the bill. Is not this the proper time to offer a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The first section of the bill must be read before any amendment is in order.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of section 1.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Committee amendment: Strike out all of lines 5 and 6 on page 2 and insert: "and that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee amendment be adopted.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I seek recognition on the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this amendment is very important and, as far as I am concerned, I do not propose to fight it. It does give additional power to the President of the United States, which most of us do not like to do. There are far more important amendments coming up upon which I want to take part and therefore I am not going to engage in any fight on this amendment, but I think it ought to be clearly defined just what it does.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it not a fact that this committee amendment was suggested by one of the Republican members of the committee and adopted unanimously?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. This amendment was suggested by myself as something better than the atrocious language for which it is substituted. Under the original bill we had to find that the war endangered the lives of citizens and threatened the peace of the United States. Therefore the original bill would have required the finding of an unfriendly act on behalf of other nations before a proclamation could be issued. I, therefore, made this suggestion which I believe my esteemed and able colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] offered as an amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. It was the gentleman's amendment, and it was adopted unanimously by the committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when a resolution of inquiry was introduced by myself in the Seventy-fifth Congress, the Secretary of State in replying to the question of whether or not a state of war existed in China, in his reply as given in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 6, 1937, said:

With regard to the seventh question, neither the Chinese Government nor the Japanese Government has declared war on the other. The President of the United States has not found "that there exists a state of war."

Further:

With regard to the eighth question, the entering into force of the restrictive provisions of the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937, is left to and is dependent upon decision of the President by a finding "that there exists a state of war."

The language that is suggested by the committee amendment, I agree, is preferable to the original language in the bill, but it seems to me that it adds a further condition that will provide an escape for the President if he does not want to issue the proclamation. If this language were stricken out entirely, then the President would be bound to issue a proclamation if he found that a state of war existed, but this additional language, whether you use the original language of the bill or the language of the amendment, gives him a further means of postponing a proclamation, because he may even find a state of war to exist, but unless in his opinion, in some way it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or protect the lives of citizens of the United States, he need not make the proclamation.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is contained in the portion of section 1 which is in italics and is in the identical language as the provision of section 2 which expired on May 1, and which in committee the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] and myself, as well as other members of the committee, thought an improvement over the language of the bill as written.

The reason for the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I may say, is this: If a war exists between two states, regardless of the size of the states or the magnitude of the war operations or the effect of such war upon the United States and its citizens, it would be foolish for the President to find a state of war to exist when it is in such a remote place that we could not possibly become involved. So the amendment simply provides that when a state of war exists and it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of the citizens of the United States, then the provision shall be invoked.

As I have said, the provision follows the language of section 2 of the old law which expired, and therefore I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HINSHAW. If the language now contained in lines 7 and 8, as proposed by the committee, is adopted, would it later be in order to strike that language while striking other language in the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean an amendment to strike the entire paragraph or section?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I had in mind certain other language. For instance, I want to move that in lines 3 and 4 the words "the President shall find that" and, in lines 7 and 8, the language that is now in italics be stricken. Is this the proper time to offer an amendment to the committee amendment to effect that, or can I wait until a later time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman's remedy would be, as he seems to have in mind, to vote down the committee amendment and then offer his amendment.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I seek recognition on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, so that the Committee may understand the import of this section, let me read a memorandum prepared by the committee and printed in the original bill. The memorandum says:

Section 1 differs from the corresponding section in the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937, in that, first,

There is no provision for an arms embargo.

Second, there is no provision for the application of this joint resolution to civil strife.

Third, this joint resolution does not go into effect automatically when the President finds the existence of a state of war between foreign states. He must also find that such war endangers the lives of citizens of the United States and threatens the peace of the United States.

Let me call to the attention of the Committee that these changes give to the President of the United States arbitrary power to intervene in any war he chooses; in effect, to pick the aggressor.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Was there any opposition to this amendment in the committee? Was it not worked by Republican and Democratic Members alike and unanimously adopted?

Mr. TINKHAM. It was not unanimously adopted. I for one saw immediately that it meant intervention by the President of the United States in the wars of the world, and I opposed it.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman did not object.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman vote against this amendment in the committee?

Mr. TINKHAM. Certainly. I opposed it.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I think the RECORD shows that the gentleman did not vote against it.

Mr. TINKHAM. I contended that this meant intervention, and opposed it.

Mr. CORBETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. I would like to make a remark at this time that we considered this bill with such amazing rapidity in the committee that I, for one, do not remember whether we supported this language or not, but regardless of whether we did or not, the Members on the majority side are apparently changing their minds on neutrality legislation, and even if we did support this increased power then, why do we not have the right to recognize that it is an unwholesome increase of power, and now oppose it?

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will if you will give me some more time. I shall be glad to answer any question, but I shall ask for more time.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it not a fact that we gave to every member of the committee all the time necessary on these amendments and we considered every amendment suggested by Republicans as well as Democrats? Is that not the fact?

Mr. CORBETT. May I answer that?

Mr. TINKHAM. Let me answer it, please. I have sat on committees in this House for 25 years. Plenty of time was given to this bill, a great deal of time, and properly so, because this means war or peace for us, in my opinion, but when it came to acting on the bill, the briefest time was given. Parliamentary tactics were invoked, and I, for one, was cut off several times when I wanted to make a suggestion or argument.

Mr. BLOOM. I am sorry the gentleman feels that way, but let me say there were 14 meetings, 47 witnesses called, and 13 meetings in executive session. All of those executive sessions were for the consideration of this bill, and I do not believe that any member of the committee outside of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] will say that they were not given an opportunity to debate and to offer amendments, and the amendments were considered by the chairman.

Mr. CORBETT. Include me with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] in that group.

Mr. TINKHAM. The chairman of the committee, who is adept at the manipulation of language and facts [laughter], is correct in saying that there were a multiplicity of hearings. I agree to that. I think they were very proper, but when it came to the consideration of the bill, section by section, the bill was forced through as rapidly as possible, and I stand by that assertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from New York.

Mr. FISH. To substantiate what the gentleman has to say, as one who has served for almost 20 years on that committee, for the first time in all that time the 5-minute rule was invoked by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. The honorable Representative from New York is absolutely correct. The text of this bill was forced through and every technical objection was raised to its full consideration. That should be known to this House.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. I would like to say in that connection that as far as I can find in the reports of the hearings of our committee, there is not a single word of hearings specifically on this bill; that there was not one witness who appeared before the committee on this bill.

It is true that we went through the form of a hearing on other neutrality proposals, but I can recall that even the suggestion to return to a section once passed over was objected to. I also had the experience, in the consideration of an amendment which I offered, to be allowed not even sufficient time which would have permitted the reading of a rather long amendment.

Mr. TINKHAM. That is absolutely correct as I remember the events as they occurred.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman recalls the afternoon, or the morning when an effort was made by the chairman of the committee and other Members to jam the bill through by 5:15 in the evening, knowing that many of the Republicans could not be there, and that that was on the eve of the visit of the King and Queen of England to this country. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINKHAM. I remember that. I charged, and I charged publicly, that the chairman of this committee desired to don knee breeches [laughter], go to the Canadian border, and on bended knees, present this bill on a silver platter to the King and Queen of England who were arriving in the United States the next day. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I am sure the gentleman does not wish to imply to this House that the hearings were not fair, and honorable, and thoroughgoing in every respect. When the committee members learned that the Republican Members had social engagements we voted to adjourn out of deference to them.

Mr. FISH. But none of those Republicans were invited.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. That was not the morning of the garden party. [Laughter.] They wanted to leave to take care of other engagements.

Mr. TINKHAM. I reiterate the statement that I consider, after 25 years' experience in this House and on its committees, that the text of this bill was forced through. Every technical rule of parliamentary procedure that could be used was used so that there could not be full and complete discussion.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman recall that in January I suggested that the Secretary of State be called to testify before us, or if he could not come that some representative be sent to speak for him; and it was only about a month ago that Judge Moore, of the State Department, came to discuss this extremely important matter with us, and that other resolutions were passed in the committee?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that none of this discussion is pertinent to the amendment that is before the Committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is very pertinent to the pending amendment. We all want satisfactory legislation. I think it is very pertinent to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota as a substitute for the committee amendment: On page 2, strike out lines 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is not a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard, this amendment is offered in lieu of the committee amendment and strikes out lines 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reads the following from the rules of the House:

To a motion to strike certain words and insert others, a simple motion to strike out the words may not be offered as a substitute.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment I sought to offer was to strike out lines 5 and 6, and drop the committee amendment. Before speaking to that, however, I want to refer to the incident that has just happened on the floor and to say that I think the ability of this House to enjoy the humor and good feeling of the situation such as that is the best guaranty, if it can be preserved, that we can write legislation in this House. [Applause.] During the consideration of one of the important measures in a previous session of Congress, it happened that my office was visited by a Russian exile, a woman who wanted a pass to the gallery. She said to me as I gave it to her: "Just think. I am going to see the most important thing in the world." I did not catch her meaning and asked her what it was. She said, "I am going to have an opportunity to see the last great deliberative assembly of the world actually speak and discuss legislation where men can speak their minds."

I was impressed by the fact that the acting chairman of the committee the other day invited amendments from the minority side as well as from the majority side; and I have hoped that in the amendments that may be offered during the deliberation of this resolution under the 5-minute rule that amendments from either side of the House may be offered and may receive full and open consideration, for the most dangerous situation that could exist in the contemplation of this legislation would be a spirit of partisanship. I believe that the men on my right are just as good patriots as the men on my left.

I know if a war should come to this country, the men on the left and the men on the right will be found fighting shoulder to shoulder for the welfare and defense of the United States. [Applause.]

The fact that we enjoy the good feeling that has existed during the previous speech augurs well for the consideration of the pending bill. If we can preserve our consideration upon a plane which recognizes good spirit and good intent on both sides of the aisle, this bill will be properly considered. When we come to deliberate and discuss a measure such as this, no one who has been elected to the House of Representatives should be accused of small or petty motives. It seems to me that good faith ought to be extended to every one and it is in that spirit that I sought to offer an amendment which would make a proclamation dependent only upon the finding that a state of war existed. We have already seen even that requirement avoided in China. The President has not found a war to exist there. We should not authorize any more excuses for avoiding a proclamation such as might be contemplated under this or any neutrality legislation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON], in commenting upon my earlier remarks with respect to the justification for the committee amendment, said he thought it was not necessary to have a proclamation if a war should occur in some far-off part of the world that did not directly concern us. If that be true, then, what possible danger can there be in having the proclamations that are contemplated by this resolution? If they do not concern us, then there is no danger in having a proclamation. The proclamation will only be effective if and when some citizen of the United States seeks to travel on a belligerent vessel or seeks to sell some of the things prohibited or do something else that may be prohibited under a proclamation.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. In reply to the question of the gentleman as to what harm may be done under certain circumstances, the gentleman realizes that when the President exercises this authority, he immediately sets in motion the machinery and the various provisions of the bill. Certain things have to be done. What is the necessity for starting all of this machinery in motion and having all of these things done if we are not interested or may not be involved?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the proclamation is issued and becomes effective in a single instance, that one instance might be the justification for having made the proclamation. It might avoid our involvement in war. If the President cannot find and has not yet found that a state of war exists in the Orient, then I am very much opposed to authorizing any additional excuses for avoiding a neutrality proclamation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOOM. What becomes of the amendment which the gentleman offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled it was out of order, and therefore it is withdrawn.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the pending committee amendment, I am rising in opposition to it and to announce that if that amendment is voted down I shall offer an amendment to strike out the words in line 3, "The President shall find that", and to strike out lines 5 and 6. This would make section 1 (a), a provision mandatory upon the President. It would then read as follows:

That whenever there exists a state of war between foreign states the President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved—

And so forth. If you will vote down the committee amendment and consider and adopt the amendment which I shall offer, we will then make this a mandatory provision instead of a permissive one. It may be said by some that discretion should lie in the President to determine what shall be a state of war and when it shall exist. I would like to tell a brief story about a certain building inspector of my acquaintance who was informed that certain buildings built prior to the enactment of a building code were not in conformity with that code, and that consequently these buildings should be repaired, changed, modified, or altered. The building inspector said, while he would like to do that, he really did not know anything about it, "and I do not want to know anything about it." That is the idea which is embodied in the present language. I cannot say whether the President wants to find out whether there is a war in China today or not, but certainly if it states in the act whenever there exists a state of war between foreign states it shall be mandatory upon the President to so declare, then the section will be in good order.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the section referred to provides that whenever the President shall find that a state of war exists and that the lives of citizens of our country or the safety of our country is at stake, he shall issue this proclamation. If this section is changed to read the way it has been suggested when a war exists, we will say, between Italy and Albania, the President would automatically have to issue a proclamation, although we would not be altogether concerned with that war because the lives of the citizens of this country are not in danger.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is there any reason why we should not recognize all wars, whether they be large or small?

Mr. BLOOM. That is a matter of opinion. May I say that the Committee may feel that is the way to do it. You may just want to keep on tying the hands of the administration and of the President when a state of war exists, between, we will say, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, or between some other small countries. You may want to make it so that he should automatically issue a proclamation. However, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the administration, that would be a rather severe way of doing it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Would it not be well for us to treat fairly with all nations concerned?

Mr. BLOOM. You are fair to all nations. We are not concerned in other countries' troubles. We are trying to keep the United States out of war. The trouble has been in most of these arguments with the question of what the United States is going to do when it does get into a war.

What we are trying to do is keep the United States out of war, and no one can deny that if he will read and understand this bill, and there is no politics in what I say.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It seems to me it begs the question to say we are not interested if there is a war between Albania and some other country. What possible harm is there in having a proclamation issued? It would be effective only as to relations with those particular belligerents.

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. For example, war might occur between two small states in the interior of Europe, which could not possibly affect the peace and safety of the United States in the slightest degree, yet the President would be under the necessity under this law of issuing a proclamation—

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, but the proclamation would be effective only as to relations with those particular belligerents.

Mr. BLOOM. Yet the President would be under the necessity under this law of issuing a proclamation and putting into force vast machinery and restrictions with varying penalty provisions which would circumscribe the rights of American citizens and otherwise disorganize and complicate our economic system, all for no very good or sufficient reason.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, but if one of those American citizens happened to get into that territory and do some act that was proscribed by the proclamation, why should we not have the proclamation in order to prevent involvement?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not agree with the gentleman there. If that is taken out, as far as I am concerned it would not make a particle of difference, but I see the danger if you do take it out. I see that it is going to handicap this Government. It is going to make the President issue a proclamation at any time any kind of a war exists in any part of the world.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. Is it not the present law that if there is a declared war the President must take action?

Mr. BLOOM. No; if it does not endanger the lives of our citizens and does not endanger the peace of our country it is not necessary under this provision to issue the proclamation.

Mr. KUNKEL. I mean under the present law.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I should like time enough to ask two or three questions.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman extend that time another 5 minutes?

Mr. FISH. The gentlewoman from Illinois would like to be heard, and I join in that request.

Mr. HOOK. I should like to have 5 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, something has just occurred here on the floor which ought to raise a question in the mind of any thinking man as to the wisdom of enacting a law that will put the President of the United States and the United States in a neutrality straight jacket. The pending bill carries a proposed amendment in section 1 which, it has been disclosed in debate, was placed there unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and was originally suggested by a minority member of the committee. It now transpires in the debate that some of the minority members have changed their minds about the wisdom and desirability of their own amendment, which we are told was given much greater deliberation and consideration in the committee than can possibly be given it here in the House.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is referring to my statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Not just now.

In the course of this debate and since this amendment was adopted they have changed their minds. In 20 minutes we are going to have to make a guess on this amendment. That is what we are going to do. We are not going to deliver any informed judgment on this apparently important amendment. We are going to make a guess on it. That is all our vote will be, a guess. Suppose we guess wrong. We only have time to change our minds between now and the roll call. Suppose after the roll is called on the bill we find something that we think was a mistake and on which we want to change our minds. Suppose after the bill gets to the White House and is signed by the President we find that we have made mistakes, that we have done things on which we would like to change our minds. I want to say to you that after this bill gets to the White House, or any neutrality bill gets to the White House and gets the signature of the President, there are going to develop things on which, if Congress had the chance, it would like to change its mind.

What we are doing right now is changing our minds on the last Neutrality Act. When we passed that Neutrality Act we changed our minds on a prior neutrality act. That is all we have been doing here in Congress for the last 5 years, changing our minds on neutrality acts. We have passed four of them and they are all conceded to be unworkable or unsatisfactory. Now we are undertaking the fifth. Therefore, I believe we would be wise if instead of passing any neutrality bill we repealed all neutrality acts and left these matters where the founding fathers originally placed them and where the Supreme Court of the United States says they belong and from where, the Supreme Court says, they cannot be taken; that is, in the executive branch of the Federal Government.

The major impression I have received in 2 days of very able debate on this bill, a debate which reflects credit on the House, is the utter folly and futility of Congress attempting to lay down rules to govern the unforeseen and unpredictable events and conditions of the future. [Applause.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is the answer to letters we have received pleading for a real neutrality law.

We have now had time to study the implications of the hearings, the argument and the bill itself. Whether or not you have been in Congress long enough to know the ropes you will perceive that this bill, because of its delegation of authority, is a rope which may strangle any further efforts of the Congress to preserve peace. Even though the President might use his power inadvertently, unintentionally,

Section 4d has the same effect as the cash-and-carry provisions of former law. It will permit ships loaded with war supplies to leave our shores, and be bombed by enemy submarines 3 miles from our coast.

The provisions relating to financial regulations on page 4 are so ambiguous that all sorts of dangerous schemes are made legal.

The law gives notice that the Congress will back the Executive in everything he does or says under its ambiguous provisions. There are all sorts of things short of war which he can do under these ill-defined powers which a dictator might feel to be unfriendly if he happened to feel that the President is unfriendly. If, for instance, the dictator should read in the newspapers the same statement which you and I read in which, as I remember, the President was quoted as saying that certain dictators did not "understand anything short of force" used against them, what do you think such a dictator would do? Immediately on passage of this law he would use every means in his power to turn the world against us, to stir up revolt within our country. Not against England, because the head of the English Government can be turned out the moment there is a vote of lack of confidence in Parliament, but against us where the President, to whom you are delegating these ill-defined powers, has a fixed term.

I, for one, think that it is possible to write a law which will be a life line toward safety for this and other nations. This bill can be recommitted for further study. It can be rewritten so as to provide that if and when the President finds a state of war existing likely to involve the peace of America he must call back the Congress if in vacation, he must recommend regulations, which shall become the law only with the advice and consent of both Houses of Congress.

In these modern days of newspaper and radio, the welfare of our people is not safe in the hands of any one man. It is fairly safe in the hands of this House of Representatives—an unpredictable body, but a body before which every plea of justice of our citizens or the citizens of other nations has a chance to be heard.

Those who contend that the Congress has not the power under our Constitution to arrogate to themselves any power, have forgotten the most powerful weapon which the authors of the Constitution placed therein. That weapon is the power to originate money bills and pass them over the President's veto. Those powers enable us to pry from the Executive every single privilege that he has today.

The power to appropriate money was the power with which the British people, through their representatives in Parliament, wrested away every power from the King and finally reduced him to a master of ceremonies. When the founding fathers wrote it into our Constitution they must have contemplated that we would use it when needed for the welfare of our people.

Today when the White House endeavors to control your votes as Representatives, by promising to approve or threatening to withhold projects for your district, they are using a power which you delegated to the Executive very recently. It is an abuse of that power. It robs you of your right and duty to vote your convictions.

The time has come that all such dangerous powers, which may be used either intentionally or inadvertently for the destruction of our people, shall be given back to the people and shall reside in their Representatives.

Thus, in the future, as in the past, we may press on to a higher stage of civilization, leading, not forcing, the world to democracy and peace by setting them a successful example. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on May 28 of this year I had the privilege of an invitation to appear and did appear before the Allied Veterans of Kings County, in the State of New York, at the Academy of Music in the city of Brooklyn, to talk on the subject of neutrality. This organization represented the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spanish War Veterans, and the G. A. R. It was long before this bill was brought to the floor of this House. On that night I said that neutrality cannot be legislated; that neutrality is a question of policy, a matter of a state of mind that must be brought about through proper diplomatic relations, and a program of propaganda analysis to stop war mongering. I made the statement on that night that the issue is whether or not we will again lend ourselves to a program which will lead again to sending our boys overseas to fight and die on foreign soil. Many other statements were made that night on the subject. I have heard them reiterated on this floor for the last several days.

I have heard the arguments pro and con. I believe that every man and woman who rose on the floor of this House was sincere in his or her convictions, which makes my conviction firmer that you cannot legislate neutrality.

I had occasion—pardon me for the reference again—to speak in the great State of New York last Saturday at the celebration of Finland Day at the world's fair as their guest speaker, and at that time I said, "We hear a cry for neutrality; neutrality is a state of mind; it cannot be legislated, but can be brought about only through the practice of Christian principles and friendship such as that enjoyed between the people of nations as friendly as the nation of Finland." We cannot go on throwing in the face of dictators or in the face of the people of other nations the fact that we are going to enter into their troubles and still remain neutral. We must mind our own business and take care of our own domestic and foreign problems.

When we say that the President shall have the right to declare that a state of war exists in some other nation, we are saying to those nations things and doing things that those nations will not do themselves. They will not declare war, but you want the United States to say to those nations, "You are at war and we are going to declare war for you."

Is that the kind of neutrality program you expect to enact here? I hope not. There is only one thing, in my opinion, to do, and that is to repeal all so-called neutrality legislation which is in fact unneutral and return to the policy this Nation has followed for 150 years until we meddled with it, and leave to the President the authority which is rightfully his by authority of the Constitution, which was given to him when this Nation was established by our founding fathers.

Let us forget the idea of fighting one another. Let us try to arrive at a solution of this problem coolly and collectively as our founding fathers did. When we have done that and when we have placed the responsibility where it belongs, this body will have done its duty. If we do anything else, we will have committed an unneutral, and not a neutral, act. [Applause.]

Let me say to you that I have faith in the President of the United States and the Secretary of State—not because the President happens to be a Democrat. I have faith in any President that the people of these United States in their wisdom will elect. I believe that as long as he holds that high and exalted position the responsibility should be his, and I believe the people of this Nation want that responsibility placed there. [Applause.] The whole issue before us is whether we will again enter a world conflict with all its horrors and heartaches. I for one will, I hope, never be a party to any action that will cause any of our boys to shed their blood on foreign soils.

Let me close with this thought: We cannot have neutrality unless we approach the problem with a spirit of Christianity. Unless the peoples of the earth place their trust in God and treat their fellow beings as our Creator intended that we should, there can be no neutrality. We must provide for a course in propaganda analysis in every educational institution in America, so that we will not be swayed by vicious propaganda, which is the thing that drags us into all wars.

Build up the resistance of the people to this war propaganda, and neutrality will be a reality.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address myself for just a moment to the pending amendment, without any emotional appeal to the membership of this House. The gentleman who is in charge of this bill stated to the House a few moments ago in justification of this amendment that it was inserted as a protection against the necessity and requirement of the President issuing a proclamation in a case where a war might break out in certain nations remote from our own interest. I think that was the statement which was made in justification of the amendment. If I am wrong in that, will the gentleman correct me?

Mr. BLOOM. If I may be permitted to say, I said that where the lives of the citizens of the United States or the safety of our country is at stake, then the President could issue a proclamation. The gentleman had not finished my statement. That was the whole thing. If you will kindly read the statement, you will find out just what it means.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has put the matter just in reverse. I call his attention to the fact that, in my humble opinion, the operation of the operative sections of the Neutrality Act as it is written should depend upon the existence of a state of war, regardless of where that war is, rather than upon a finding by the President that a state of war exists, for this reason: You have protected the rights of the President in his capacity as President, because when he issues his proclamation it is of no effect as affecting anybody, because you have still the reservation in section 2 and in section 5 and in section 4 and in all the operative provisions of this law—you have still the reservation in the President of the right to make rules and regulations that would permit us to carry on the commerce of this Nation and to protect the lives of our citizens. There is absolutely no necessity for putting this provision in section 1, which acts as a further discretionary barrier against the finding of the existence of a state of war.

And suppose that a state of war does exist between some of the countries that you named, Mr. Chairman, and he, mandatorily, under the provisions of the law, issues a proclamation, and the President then concludes that the safety of this country is not involved, that the welfare of our citizens is not involved, have you not protected the rights of the President by still reserving to him the right to make rules and regulations governing the conduct of citizens under section 2; governing the exportation of arms and munitions and other commodities under subsection (d) of section 4, because in all of these provisions it is provided:

Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

Now, it is my position and the position of the people I represent that the question as to the issuance of a proclamation should be dependent upon the actual existence of a state of war, and not be dependent upon the determination of the President that those things are involved which are contained in this amendment. Then if he sees fit in his discretionary powers as President to make rules and regulations in the case of an isolated war between two isolated nations, why is he not fully protected and why are not the rights of the President fully protected?

Mr. BLOOM. Are you asking me?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it your thought to have the President issue a proclamation if war should exist between any two nations in the world?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. However far they may be removed from us?

Mr. KEEFE. Exactly.

Mr. BLOOM. Why should a proclamation of that kind be issued or this resolution go into effect to no purpose?

Mr. KEEFE. There is nothing in the resolution that compels putting into effect any involved machinery. You are setting up a straw man.

Mr. BLOOM. It goes into effect as soon as the proclamation is issued.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I understand the Chair, the Chair ruled that a substitute to the committee amendment was not in order. May I ask, however, if the committee amendment should be voted down, then would it not be in order for me to offer an amendment to strike out the two lines that are proposed to be stricken by the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. HINSHAW)—ayes 132, noes 73.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: On page 2, line 1, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"Repeal of Neutrality Acts of 1935, 1936, and 1937.

"The act of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), as amended by the act of February 29, 1936 (Public Res. No. 74, 74th Cong.), and the act of May 1, 1937 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), and the act of January 8, 1937 (Public Res. No. 1, 75th Cong.), are hereby repealed."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. FISH. I would rather not reserve it because I think we should not bring it up at this time. I think this is not the proper place for the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state the grounds of the point of order?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania concede the point of order?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and wish to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania concedes the point of order.

The point of order is sustained.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 1, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following as a substitute for the joint resolution:

"REPEAL OF NEUTRALITY ACTS OF 1935, 1936, 1937

"The act of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), as amended by the act of February 29, 1936 (Public Res. No. 74, 74th Cong.), and the act of May 1, 1937 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), and the act of January 8, 1937 (Public Res. No. 1, 75th Cong.), are hereby repealed."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment is not germane to section 1 but would be germane to section 15, now called section 16, on page 15, the repeal of the acts of 1935, 1936, 1937. That is where the amendment belongs, not in the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York concluded?

Mr. FISH. This, of course, is the first time I have heard the amendment read. It seems to me there is but one place for it, and that would be that section of the bill where reference is made to the specific laws that are repealed. There is no reference to any of these laws in the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I do, if the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that it is in parliamentary order to offer a substitute either after the first paragraph of the bill has been read or after the entire bill has been read. If my amendment is adopted I intend to offer amendments throughout the reading of the remainder of the bill striking out the various paragraphs as they are read.

Mr. Chairman, I believe my amendment is in order and ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it may be in order to strike out the enacting clause at any time, but I submit the pending amendment has nothing whatever to do with the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending joint resolution. To this amendment the gentleman from New York makes the point of order that it is not germane to the section offered.

The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is clearly germane to the pending resolution, because the pending resolution contains a section repealing certain provisions of existing neutrality laws. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeks to repeal the neutrality law. The amendment is, therefore, germane. As to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York that it is not germane to the section the Chair invites attention to section 2905 of volume VIII of Cannon's Precedents of the House which state:

A substitute for an entire bill may be offered only after the first paragraph has been read or after the reading of the bill for amendment has been concluded.

The Chair is of opinion, in keeping with the precedent to which attention has been invited, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order at this point.

The point of order, therefore, is overruled.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, by way of explanation I may say that this amendment seeks to repeal the neutrality laws we have passed since 1935. Because of objection raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to my first amendment, it will be necessary as this bill is read, and if my amendment carries, to move to strike out the various sections and provisions as they are read. This will be done.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not at this moment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I wish some information.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I wanted to understand the effect of the gentleman's amendment, whether or not the amendment contemplated and embraced the repeal of the neutrality law including the Munitions Board and everything else.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. It includes everything and wipes the slate clean.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman mean the Munitions Board, too?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio rose.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further until I finish my statement.

Mr. Chairman, during the past 3 years when I have been a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee I have undergone varying experiences and differing opinions regarding this problem of neutrality. I have come to the conclusion after serious study and thought that the security of our Nation is better assured in the vault of international law than behind the barriers of any neutrality legislation we may write here today. [Applause.]

I have never done a thing in my life in which I felt more convinced of being right than in offering this amendment today. Our people do not necessarily demand neutrality legislation. Our people ask us to do our duty to preserve the peace for America and to remain free from entangling alliances.

That is what they ask of us, and it is our duty to answer their plea in a constructive and forceful way by our own action and by our own words as various problems may confront us in the months and years to come.

Mr. Chairman, the code of international law which exists today was not written by any one man or group of men at any particular time. International law is very much like our own Constitution. It has been written in the rich experiences of other nations and other people in bygone times; people who faced situations similar to those which confront us today; people who were forced to master problems similar to those which we are asked to solve today. The Constitution of the United States of America goes back 600 years to the government of the Germanic tribes of Europe. Its perfection is based on the experience of people throughout the 600 years of its history. Mr. Chairman, is it not foolish for us to think in this body today that we can write better neutrality legislation than that which has been handed down to us throughout the years? International law is based on realistic principles.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, international law conforms to the laws of nature which govern this universe. International law governs international situations. Are we not short-sighted when we attempt to enact local legislation which shall be applicable to world conditions? It is no more possible to do that than to invoke a municipal ordinance of some small village of this Nation and try to apply it to the government of the 48 States.

We are dealing with an international situation, a complex situation, and we have to handle it under an international code. We are deluding our people when we infer that neutrality legislation will guarantee their peace or their neutrality against unforeseen and unpredictable circumstances. It has been said during the course of this debate that our people want some kind of neutrality legislation, that they feel this will safeguard their interests. But we are not being honest with them, knowing as we do that neutrality legislation passed here today will not safeguard their interests or guarantee peace in the future. Those of you who feel as I do are not being fair with the people of this Nation if you do not declare the truth instead of trying to lull them into a false sense of security.

If we lead our people to believe that they can hide their weaknesses and emotions behind legislative barriers, we are weakening them, when it comes to facing problems which will arise in the future. Let us be honest with them. Let us tell our people that peace for America and neutrality depend entirely on them. It depends on their own attitude in a time of crisis. It depends on their conduct in this troubled world. If we tell our people that, we are telling them the truth. If we lead them to believe that neutrality legislation alone is going to protect their interests, we are deluding them.

The neutrality legislation which we might pass today, as well as that which we have passed during the past 4 years, is purely man-made legislation. International law has not been written by man, but, I repeat, by the experience of the ages.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is agreed to, we will rededicate our foreign policy to the precedents and principles of international law as enunciated in the historic practices of our Government during 150 years. We will solemnize the realization that America should be the most militant guardian of neutral rights. We will foster all efforts to restate and modernize international law so as to obtain certainty in its rules and administration. We will thus avoid emotional fluctuations at home and suspicions abroad from belligerents. We will preserve this Nation from Old World antipathies and jealousies. We will encourage the use of diplomatic measures and processes of free government to protect our interests under international law, as the problems arise. We will unfetter hands that are bound today, hands that must necessarily be free to protect the interests of our Nation. We will reiterate our opposition to entangling alliances or advance commitments. You will restore the political independence of this Congress and all future administrations and future Congresses. You will declare our unwillingness to shackle our foreign policy so as to render it impotent or dependent upon the acts of other nations. We shall, if we pass this amendment, give notice to the world of our implicit faith in the heritage of international law and our traditional policy of honest neutrality.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope the Members of the Committee will adopt the amendment which I have offered, and I believe in doing so we will be fair with ourselves and with our people.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will need the time, but like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I am astounded at the action of my dear and able friend from Pennsylvania, who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as I am a member of that committee. For 2 or 3 long months we tried to formulate a bill which would at least have a reasonable chance to insure neutrality and peace to the United States in case foreign nations became involved in a war. Not on any day or at any hour did the gentleman from Pennsylvania present the momentous question that he has today presented to the House and to the committee for its study and consideration. The gentleman not only did not present this amendment to the committee but he, along with every other Democratic member of the committee, agreed to bring this bill on the floor of the House for your consideration, and that was done with a unanimous favorable report.

Now, what does the gentleman do? The gentleman comes here and contradicts the action he took after 2 months of deliberate study and presents to the House an amendment that will have the effect of scuttling every important section of this bill; in other words, he attempts to kill that which he helped to create.

Let us get clearly what this amendment will do. A great many gentlemen on the Republican side of the House and some Members on the Democratic side have opposed this bill because it repeals the embargo features of the present law. How these gentlemen can support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I cannot see, because the gentleman's amendment repeals the embargo law in addition to dealing a death blow to every section of the bill now before you. Some gentlemen on both sides of the House have risen here and have objected to this bill on the ground that it is a British-French bill. How those gentlemen and ladies could vote for this amendment I cannot see, because the amendment carries us straight back to international law, if there is any such thing, and there is not a Member of this House who will contend that, in the event of foreign war, international law as it now exists will not be favorable to England and France and their side of the struggle.

I do not admit that the gentleman's amendment would carry us back to international law, because there is no such thing. [Applause.] In my study of this question I have found that international law is whatever any nation or group of nations who control the channels of trade of the world say it is. Back in 1917 it happened that the Allies controlled the channels of trade in the world, and international law as it existed at that day—and it did exist to some extent—definitely placed our influence on the side of the Allies before we ever got into the war, because international law was what Great Britain said it was.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I cannot yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given additional time.

Mr. RICHARDS. Very well; I will yield at that time. If international law amounted to so little at that date; then, with the disturbed condition of the world today, and with the constant flaunting in the face of the world of a spirit of utter disregard for the humanitarian rights and desires of people struggling for peace, liberty, and existence, what does it amount to now? I subscribe to the idealism of Woodrow Wilson when he said in effect that to have permanent peace on this earth and to have a brotherhood of man there has to be a get-together of the nations of the world in a spirit of peace; but with conditions as they are today that wish and that desire is only a dream. No Member of this Congress can say that all the nations of the earth are willing to sit down with us and discuss these questions in the proper light and with the proper desire.

The bill before you, the bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania supported before he offered his amendment, will give us something besides international law. In this bill, it is true, we have no provision for an embargo. But we say in this bill that we want to help out international law, if there is any such thing. When we say that we are going to do everything possible to discourage our citizens from doing those things that may bring on incidents to stir the people of this country up to the point where they would want to go to war, and at the same time make it easier for the President of the United States—it matters not whether he is a Democrat or a Republican—to perform his duties as far as foreign affairs are concerned. In an attempt to that end we have put in this bill several sections that I wish my friends would seriously consider before they vote to scuttle them through the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

One of these sections is that our citizens shall not travel on belligerent ships. Is there any man or woman in this House who does not believe that travel on belligerent ships during the World War had something to do with our involvement? Is there any man or woman here who does not remember the stupendous consequences of the sinking of the Lusitania?

The bill we have here—and I believe practically every other Democratic member of the committee believes in it—also prohibits certain financial transactions with belligerent powers. Is there any Member of this House, man or woman, who does not believe that financial transactions involving foreign governments and this country before we became involved did not have anything to do with getting us into that war? Everybody knows that when obligations were floated here by foreign nations engaged in conflict, immediately a propaganda agency was created, by the fact itself, to enable collection of those debts, and the only way collection could be made possible was by involving the United States of America on one side or the other to insure the victory of the cause in which those investments had been made.

The bill also prohibits the use of American ports as a base for belligerents. Under international law we are not protected there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

This bill also prohibits the arming of merchant vessels. This amendment, which is not agreeable to me in every particular of its phraseology, was offered by my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]. At the time he offered it I voted for it, and I believe mine was the deciding vote on the amendment. But, Mr. Chairman, I voted on that amendment in committee after serious study extending over several days. If the amendment had not carried I would possibly have given notice to the committee that I would support it on the floor of the House. However, I would not have come in here with an eleventh-hour attack and tried to scuttle the very artery and blood carrier of this bill.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has cited several provisions in the act which we are now considering which might be desirable. My point is that in the event we face a crisis in the future this Congress will be free to enact such legislation as it feels is necessary to protect the best interests of our people, and that is the duty of going back to international law. It gives us freedom to act as we think best at the time.

Mr. RICHARDS. I say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this Congress is always free to pass any law or to repeal any law, and if this law is not sufficient to properly meet the conditions 1 year from now or 2 years from now or 6 months from now, I will be the first one to vote for a law to take its place and properly meet the situation in the best interest of the American people.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RICHARDS. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. If we change existing law in the middle of the game, then we are permitting an unneutral act.

Mr. RICHARDS. What kind of game is the gentleman from Pennsylvania talking about?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Just what the gentleman said a moment ago. You were talking about existing law and how the Congress can change it at any time, but if we do change it after war is started, then we are guilty of changing the rules in the middle of the game and we have committed an unneutral act.

Mr. RICHARDS. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my position on that is identical with the position of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY], and that position is that if it is for the best interests of the United States, then change the rules at any time, as long as we have to deal with foreign nations who change their rules of the game overnight.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not a fact that when the time comes when we ought to change our minds or we think we ought to, we would then have to become neutral anyway and it would not make any difference? We could amend or repeal the law without violating any neutrality.

Mr. RICHARDS. That is possibly true, although I did not understand everything the gentleman said.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. If we change our policy so as to affect adversely one of the belligerents, the belligerents may consider that an act of war and a hostile act, may it not?

Mr. RICHARDS. That is true. These nations object to our changing the rules of the game, but they are quick to change the same rule when it benefits them. [Applause.]

Mr. HEALEY. I call the gentleman's attention to an incident that occurred prior to our entry into the war when President Wilson at that time informed the State Department and the Congress that if a certain act was undertaken changing our policy it might be looked upon as an unneutral act.

Mr. RICHARDS. That is correct.

Mr. HEALEY. Because of changing the rules in the middle of the game.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have opposed the Bloom bill very largely because it repealed the arms embargo.

I am convinced if we sell arms and ammunition to warring nations, nothing in the world can keep the United States out of that war. But this is a proposal by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], who has been on the committee for 3 years, who now wants to undo the work and the efforts of millions of Americans, peace-loving Americans throughout this whole country of ours, in every single congressional district, who want a neutrality law that will be a deterrent, no matter how large or how small, to keep us out of war by preventing the traffic in arms and ammunition for blood profit and war profits and to destroy people with whom we are at peace. The gentleman from Pennsylvania now comes along and proposes an amendment to wipe out everything that has been done by this and previous Congresses and by the peace-loving people of America, and take us back to the days of 1927. This Allen proposal takes us back to international law, international law that has been repudiated time after time by Great Britain, who ignores it completely when it serves her purpose, who issues new regulations governing international law any time when it serves her control of the sea or her commercial interests. For all these years under international law, foodstuffs have been non-contraband, but in the last war every ship taking foodstuffs to foreign lands or neutral nations was seized by Great Britain in violation of international law.

It is now proposed, under the guise of international law, to go back 20 years and destroy the progress that has been made for peace in this country, for keeping us out of war, for keeping our soldiers out of foreign lands, and it is now proposed to open wide the gates and let us sell anything in the way of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, to let our men and our nationals go on belligerent ships to incite us into war, as happened in 1917. Do you mean to say to me, you Democrats and Republicans, that you have learned nothing from the World War, that you want to go back to the World War days and provocations? If you pass any such resolution as this you will have us in war just as soon as a war breaks, not 6 months from then, but within a month or 2 months we will be preparing to send the youth of America to another blood bath in Europe.

For what purpose? Because of war profits; because someone wants to sell arms and ammunition for blood money, which means taking American soldiers into war. That is what this amendment does. The Bloom bill is bad enough. I will never vote for the Bloom bill in its present form, but this proposal is 1,000 times worse than the Bloom bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not indicting this Congress and the intelligence of future Congresses when he states that they will plunge this Nation into war unless neutrality legislation happens to be on the books?

Mr. FISH. I am not indicting this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. I know what the last few Congresses have done to enact neutrality legislation probably before the gentleman from Pennsylvania came into Congress at all. For years this sentiment for neutrality has been increasing and so have the demands that we do something. What do you do in your district when there is an epidemic of diphtheria or typhoid? Do you not try to avoid it? Do we not have health rules and regulations against it? Do you not try to keep away from such contagious diseases? Now, you open wide the door by this proposal of yours. It is the greatest blow to the peace-loving people of America that has ever been introduced since the World War, and I do not believe your constituents will stand for it.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No. I am sorry that I cannot yield.

The Allen amendment wipes out everything—loans to belligerent nations; travel on belligerent ships; submarines in ports; everything that the Congress has enacted in recent years to keep us out of foreign wars, at the demand of great groups of peace-loving people. Who demands this? The American Federation of Labor is against it. The American Federation of Labor, representing the wage earners, want an arms embargo. The farmers, the National Grange, want an arms embargo. I do not know of any group, outside of the Communists, who want to sell arms, munitions, and implements of war to belligerent nations. This is exactly what they would want, to get us into war in defense of Soviet Russia.

Now, there have been a lot of high-minded Members who have forgotten and who have not studied international law for a number of years. At one time international law meant something. It was built up step by step, but it has been so repudiated, particularly by Great Britain, that it hardly exists. That is the reason why we wrote the first neutrality bill, the second neutrality bill, and are again considering another neutrality bill. I know what I am going to say may lose some Democratic votes. When I spoke under the rule I foolishly did not say some things I would like to have said, because I feared I might lose a few Democratic votes. My colleagues on the Republican side urged me not to refer to the President, saying "Don't say this and don't say that."

This is no time to mince words. This is a dangerous proposal at any time in view of what happened in the World War. It would not be so bad if Thomas Jefferson were President. We know what he thought about keeping out of the eternal wars of Europe. It would not be so bad if those great Democrats, Grover Cleveland or Andrew Jackson, were President, but we have got a man in the White House who has already committed himself to take sides in a European war. He is an internationalist; he is an interventionist; he believes in the League of Nations and in economic sanctions and in policing and quarantining the world with American blood and treasure. President Roosevelt is the first President we ever had, to believe in all these forms of collective security. Every one of these high-sounding phrases means exactly one thing. They mean war—bloody, ruthless, destructive, ruinous war in which even the victor loses.

He has a right to his views, and so has that distinguished man who is Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, with whom I served for many years in this House, although he was not then a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But he is a fine, high-minded man. He also believes in those principles of internationalism. He is consistent, and I like people who are consistent. He believes in internationalism; he believes in the League of Nations; he believes in economic sanctions and apparently is urging this Bloom interventionist bill.

Therefore we are already committed if either the fake Bloom neutrality bill passes or if we go back to international law, making it far worse. I do not ask you on the Democratic side to accept what I have to say about the President. I quote to you what the New York Times had to say in an article by Arthur Krock, a very distinguished writer. The New York Times is probably the greatest paper in America, and again a consistent paper, and I admire them for it.

It is an internationalist paper and an interventionist paper, and has been a League of Nations' paper for 20 years. This is what Arthur Krock has to say in that paper, and there is no smarter reporter here in Washington, even though he be a Democrat. [Laughter.] He said on April 14, in the New York Times, in an article entitled "The President Moves Our Frontier Far Eastward":

The President on Tuesday indirectly but unmistakably—and in advance of battle—ended all pretense that this Nation, so far as he can act for and influence it, will attempt to maintain neutrality in a European war.

Tuesday that Nation's constitutional spokesman in foreign affairs, Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, virtually announced in advance of war a course of aggressive partisanship.

Now, let us go on and quote from another source. The Saturday Evening Post, in an editorial on May 20, 1939, said the following:

For a year and a half the President of the United States has been talking war. He began it with a "quarantine speech" in Chicago in October 1937, saying there was no escape for us through mere "isolation or neutrality" and that the "peace-loving nations must make a concerted effort" to quarantine and stop the aggressors.

Again, the New York Times has this to say:

President Roosevelt strongly implied in his press conference today that he believed the involvement of the United States in any general European war was inevitable, and that this Nation should stand shoulder to shoulder with Great Britain and France against Nazi-Fascist machinations aimed at world domination by force.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. Conceding all the gentleman has said to be true, is he not inconsistent in supporting or advocating the Bloom bill in preference to this amendment? This amendment restores to the President really what the Constitution gave him, whereas the Bloom bill gives him many additional powers.

Mr. FISH. Let me say to the gentleman that the gentleman would be right if it were not for the fact that I am against both the Bloom bill and this amendment all the way through. I think this amendment is even worse than the Bloom bill, and I hope this amendment will be voted down so the people back home may know that the Congress wants to keep the country out of foreign wars. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise to receive a message from the Senate and allow certain bills to be sent to conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939, had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. FRAZIER, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6791. An act making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6970. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 27. Concurrent resolution authorizing the conferees to amend the title of H. R. 3325, the stabilization fund and dollar devaluation bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6977. An act to extend the time within which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States may be commenced, for the year commencing at 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1938.

The message also announces that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 294. Joint resolution providing for the presentation through the American Minister to Greece of a certain monument to the people of Greece.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, request a conference with the Senate, and that the Speaker appoint conferees; that the managers on the part of the House may be allowed to agree to the Senate amendments with or without amendment notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XX; and that the conferees may have until midnight tonight to file their report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. TAYLOR of Colorado, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, THOMAS S. McMILLAN, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

SUPPLEMENTAL WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1940

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees on the part of the House: MESSRS. SNYDER, TERRY, and POWERS.

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am astonished today to find myself for the first time since I came to Congress, on the same side of a question as my distinguished friend and fellow member of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I agree with his proposed action and expect to follow that action, but I must say to the Committee that I do not agree with the reasons he has put forward to support that action. Nor do I agree with the grounds upon which he predicates his proposed action, nor do I agree with the statements he made in support of his argument. I do not agree with him that there is any immediate danger of war in this country. I do not agree with him that the President of this country or any Member of this Congress, in either House, has it in his mind today either collectively or individually to lead this country into war. On the contrary, I believe it is the most earnest thought and effort of our distinguished leader today, and in the minds of all the Members of this body, honestly, earnestly, and conscientiously to do whatsoever they think is within their power to keep us from any entangling alliances with foreign nations, and from any danger of being drawn into a foreign conflict.

I agree that it is impossible by the passage or writing upon the books of any legislation, whether we designate it a neutrality act, a peace act, or by some other name, any legislation that will absolutely insure our safety and security and the peace of our country in the event of an international conflagration. It is my firm conviction that we can never legislate for this Nation absolute security against the dangers of war, nor can we legislate our people into a neutral frame of mind and keep them so when either their sympathy or their resentment has been once aroused.

For 6 long years I have been a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, considering, among other matters connected with our foreign relations, the important question of neutrality. For 6 long years that committee has labored zealously and earnestly and has given to this question its best effort and thought.

After 6 years of labor, and after 3 long recent months of hearings upon this question, and having reconciled the divergent views held by the members of the committee, we finally prepared and brought here what we thought was the best measure that could possibly be written in order to attain our objective. This is not a complicated measure. The principal change in the present law made by the bill is that it repeals the embargo provision. The other sections of the bill are merely restatements of what I think are necessary provisions—provisions which must go into the law of this land, whether we call it a Neutrality Act or not. If we adopt today the amendment which has been so suddenly sprung upon this body by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], what is the result? We go back to the chaotic conditions of other days. We delete from our statutes every provision of law relating to neutrality that has ever been written into the statutes by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is it not a matter of simple fact that if the Congress of the United States cannot be trusted to face an emergency intelligently when it arises it cannot be entrusted to write neutrality legislation?

Mr. KEE. I agree with that statement, but may I say that the emergency is before us today and we are meeting the emergency with the bill that we have presented to the House.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Are we not writing a set of rules when we do not know the game, what it will be, who the players will be, or where it will be played?

Mr. KEE. Not with this measure. The gentleman certainly has not given the measure the thought and study I had supposed he was giving it during the past 3 months, if he holds the view his question implies.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Are we not in this bill simply writing a set of rules for our own people, to enable the President to take such action as is necessary to keep them from embarrassing our people?

Mr. KEE. Not a set of new rules, but rules with which we are all now and have heretofore been familiar, and rules which we know are required.

Mr. CORBETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman made the statement that the Bloom bill meets the present emergency. What emergency does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. KEE. I refer to the requirement presented to us by the people of America who are demanding today that we place upon our statute books an act prepared by the best thought of the land, and one which will serve to keep us out of war just as surely as any measure that can be prepared.

We have prepared this bill and present it here today. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is agreed to, what will it do? It wipes off of our statute books all restrictions of American travel upon the vessels of belligerents, as well as every other vessel in time of war. It will destroy all inhibition against shipments to all the nations of the earth, including belligerents, of every manufactured commodity on earth. It would repeal all rules and restrictions against the use of ports by submarines and warships during the time of war and conflict. It will repeal all inhibitions against loans and credits to foreign countries, or the making of financial arrangements in this country by foreign nations, except those that may come within the terms of the Johnson Act. It repeals and takes off our books the act which created the Munitions Board, a provision of law that has met with universal favor. Not a single voice in the country has been raised against the creation and functioning of the Munitions Board.

Mr. Chairman, it is a strange thing to me, after 5 years of service upon this committee, 3 of those years having been served with my good friend who offered this amendment, 3 months served with him in hearings upon this legislation, that this question was never presented, either by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] or by anyone else on either side of the House; yet today we come here and find ourselves surprised with the offering of an amendment which destroys all the work of years.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the membership of the Committee vote down the amendment.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, may I say first of all on behalf of my good colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], that I know that from the first time testimony was ever presented to the committee in support of his particular amendment he has sincerely so advocated. I happen to have the office across the hall from him and have had numerous occasions to discuss this problem with him. I want to report to the membership of the Committee and to the people of the country that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] has been amazingly sincere and consistent in his advancement of this particular proposition.

Mr. JARMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. Does the gentleman recall that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] ever offered an amendment to this effect?

Mr. CORBETT. I am quite sure he did not offer an amendment as such. However, I will say that was the idea that he advanced and discussed, concurring with the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and others.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. Does the gentleman remember my appearing before the committee as a witness in support of my own bill, that has exactly the same purpose, and that I was heard for 45 minutes?

Mr. CORBETT. I believe the gentleman was the first one who appeared before the committee on that proposition.

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. Does the gentleman remember I appeared in support of just such an amendment at the same time?

Mr. CORBETT. Yes.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. Does the gentleman recall the expression "that only a fool will not change his mind?"

Mr. JARMAN. Despite all of this, the gentleman does not recall that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] introduced an amendment to this effect?

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman perhaps misunderstood me. I agreed with his statement that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] did not introduce such an amendment.

Mr. JARMAN. There has been some reference to testimony on this matter.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I think the membership of the House for the most part will agree that there has been an amazing development of sentiment in support of my amendment during the debate on this neutrality bill. It was with that thought in mind that I offered the amendment which portrays my own views on the whole matter.

I never dreamed when we were discussing the matter in the committee that the sentiment in the House for such an amendment would be as strong as it is or I would have offered the amendment long ago.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. When I have finished my statement I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman, if I have any time left.

I made such remarks as I just did regarding my colleague because I do not approve of some of the attacks that have been made on him. I made those remarks because I know he is making a sincere effort to secure the adoption of his honest convictions, and I made those remarks despite the fact that I will not vote for his amendment.

If we may clarify the choices before us today, let me say that we have three basic alternatives. We can maintain the present neutrality laws, we can adopt the Bloom bill, or we can adopt the pending amendment and go back to international law and constitutional procedure.

Which of the three courses will we choose? I want particularly to address myself to my colleagues on my own side of the aisle, because I feel that to a considerable degree they are being led into an inconsistent position. They have repeatedly objected to the fact that the passage of the Bloom bill will take away some of the restrictions imposed by the present neutrality laws on the powers of the President, and, furthermore, that the Bloom bill will grant increased discretionary power to the President. If this amendment is adopted there will be a still further increase of arbitrary power in the hands of the President. To be clear and complete, under international law, with no rules governing, with no automatic embargo, with all the rules regulating travel of American nationals, and with the rules governing the cash-and-carry transportation of American goods eliminated, the President will be left with more power than even the Bloom bill grants—that is, the Bloom bill as it will be amended. Therefore the position of our ranking Member is highly consistent in that going back to international law would be even worse than the passage of the Bloom bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY: On page 2, line 1, after the enacting clause strike out all of the language of the resolution down through and including section 14, and insert the following:

"Whereas the policy first stated by George Washington that the United States should not involve itself in any foreign entanglement has proven salutary as a safeguard for America when strictly observed and when the Congress of the United States departed from this policy in 1917 under heat of war propaganda, thousands of our young men were killed and injured, as well arousing the hostile feelings of the nations of the world against us; and

"Whereas attempts are now being made to have the Government of the United States again ignore the advice of George Washington and again embroil this country in the clash of foreign empires; and

"Whereas considerable speculation exists in the foreign chancelleries and among the peoples of the world as to the position of the United States should another European war arise; and

"Whereas foreign countries are making efforts through propaganda to ensnare the United States on their respective sides; and

"Whereas the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States have only an interest in continued peace of the world and the happiness of our country; and

"Whereas under the Constitution the Congress of the United States has the sole power to declare war; and

"Whereas the neutrality law has come to a termination: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the entire world be put on notice that the Congress of the United States will not declare war on any country unless our own safety is directly and immediately involved by a hostile force or by an actual violation of international law which endangers the safety of our country and its citizens; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be sent by the State Department to the foreign offices of every country in the world."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, by the very preamble of this resolution, I believe that my amendment is in order. If the Members of the Committee will read the preamble to House Joint Resolution 306 they will find that it covers the entire field of neutrality. There is no question in my mind that if this joint resolution is adopted all the things proposed in my resolution will be covered. Therefore, I feel that my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY] offers an amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York contains a preamble. Obviously that would not be in order at this point, because a preamble can be in order for consideration only after the body of a bill or joint resolution has been considered and perfected.

The Chair further invites attention to the fact that the resolving clause contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not germane to the joint resolution now pending.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order and, therefore, is constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Will the Chair hear me further on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled. The Chair regrets that he cannot hear the gentleman further on the point of order.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the World War was no sooner over than 4,000,000 veterans immediately took it upon themselves to go before the American people and demand that some sort of neutrality legislation be enacted to back up international law. This matter hung fire, together with the proposal to take the profits out of war, for several years. Finally the American people were educated up to the point where they believed, and believe now, if you please, that neutrality legislation is necessary to amplify and make authoritative the tenets of international law. You are flying in the face of the American people when at one fell swoop you throw away all the gains that have been made by neutrality legislation in the past, and do not forget that.

I believe you will go along with me that you like the Munitions Control Board. I have not heard a word against it from anyone. I believe you will like this idea of making the title pass before any goods leave this country. I believe you will like many things that are either in the contemplated bill or actually accepted now as a part of the neutrality policy of this country, and that you will be unwilling to wipe the slate clean, as it has been termed by my colleague from Pennsylvania, and go back to international law.

Personally, I can see where it would untie the hands of the President to go back to international law. If you of Irish extraction, for instance, think that the present law helps England, what will be the situation under international law? Why, it will be ten times as bad. I am no lover of the English Government but I do love the British people, because I suffered in prison camps with some of those poor, emaciated boys, under the guns of their own people, fortifying the German lines at the front. I know what those British Tommies went through, but I have no respect for their government or for the softness with which that government is approaching international problems today.

I want to be fair. We are interested in one thing, and that is keeping this Nation out of war. You are not going to do that by telling the American people that we have been making a mistake all these years, and that now we have to go back to international law.

Maybe in 4 years, after you educate the American people to the belief that neutrality legislation and keeping out of war are not synonymous, then, perhaps, they will be willing to let you go back to international law; but can you not remember what it was like in 1917? You had international law then. I have often said to myself that international law is the finest thing in the world to get together on after a war has been fought, and decide how much we owe each other. [Laughter.] That is international law, if you please, because in the last analysis international law is what the big boys say it is when war is going on, and when their backs are up against the wall as Germany's was. She said what international law amounted to in 1917—unrestricted submarine warfare—and that is why we got into that war. England was not guiltless either, but there was one thing you could do. You could protest if you did not like the way they acted under international law. If that did not serve your purpose, there was one thing left to do after that, and that was to go to war about it, and it was a question for a while whether we would go to war against England or Germany, for both had violated international law.

So do not put your full trust in international law, but rather expect that international law is to be backed up by some neutrality legislation that the American people want and demand. They have been demanding it for the last 5 years, and they are going to continue to demand it until you educate them differently.

I believe the amendment should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we cannot come to some agreement with regard to time on this amendment.

Mr. FISH. I think we might let the debate run along a little while longer, as this is the most important section of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. I had in mind agreeing on time with respect to this amendment.

Mr. FISH. My suggestion is that we continue the debate for half an hour and then see how many want to speak.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I want it understood that I am agreeable to anything at all. I will sit here all night if necessary, but I think we ought to agree upon some time on this amendment, whether it is going to be an hour or 2 hours.

Mr. FISH. There are so many Members on their feet seeking recognition, and inasmuch as they have not time in general debate they want to be heard now, and I am willing to sit here until 10 o'clock tonight.

Mr. BLOOM. Suppose we let the debate run for 30 minutes, and at the end of that time agree on some time for ending debate on the amendment.

Mr. FISH. We will know much more about it then.

Mr. BLOOM. I wish to state that an agreement has been entered into between the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and myself that every speaker on this amendment should speak only 5 minutes and not be given additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have control of that, because they cannot speak more than 5 minutes except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the experience of this House this afternoon must throw a flood of light throughout the nations of the world as to the confused and uncertain opinion of America on the subject of neutrality.

Yesterday a distinguished gentleman announced on this floor that in his judgment the 531 Members of the Congress did not have as much judgment as the one President of the United States. I did not believe the statement then, but after what I have heard here this afternoon I have come to fear that perhaps he was right [laughter], and I, of course, assume my place and acknowledge my guilt as one of you.

I have been for 15 years on the Foreign Affairs Committee and during the last few years we have had interminable hearings every year and each year have concocted some sort of impossible neutrality law, each with a different hump on it from the one we had before; and, now, today we have a neutrality law before us which the distinguished leader on my side loathes with all his heart, but which he is anxious to have saved, because without it he is afraid we will go back to international law as the basis of our international policy.

We have international law now. The peacetime business of the world would cease without it. There is an international law of peace, there is an international law of neutrality and of war which, of course, suffer great shocks and stress in times of conflict. But, Mr. Chairman, if we went back to international law and divested ourselves of this strange statutory hodgepodge that we now think is neutrality legislation, we would once more invest the President of the United States with the prerogatives and surround him with the limitations of the Constitution which have been practiced and observed by all Presidents for 150 years; and in addition to that, we would give back once more to the Congress of the United States its own proper constitutional standing and authority in all matters that have to do with foreign relations and with war and peace.

I was sorry to hear gentlemen express shock and surprise when my friend, Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania, offered his motion. There is no man in this House or in any other house of higher quality of character and of finer intelligence than this particular gentleman, and I am only sorry that with his rare integrity and courage he is on the wrong side of the aisle. [Laughter and applause.] I have talked with him many times on these questions, as have many others, and I believe that the idea expressed in his amendment has taken hold in this House, that the thing to do now is to sweep the decks, get clean of the grave clothes, and give this greatest of all Nations that you love and adore freedom to go out in the world and say to mankind that the time is here for civilized societies not to fear and hate each other, not to engage in armed conquest and aggression, but to begin to confer on the possibilities of establishing our relationships, national and international, once more upon law, upon decency, upon morality, and upon humanity. It is this ideal and this idea which brings so many of the Members of the House regardless of party to the support of the Allen amendment which I sincerely hope will pass.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative from New Jersey answer a question?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. He might not be able to, but he can try.

Mr. TINKHAM. I think the honorable Representative minimizes his ability. Did not following that course in 1917 plunge us into war?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. What course?

Mr. TINKHAM. The use of international law and its manipulations.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. You might just as well say that whistling Yankee Doodle started the San Francisco fire. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the so-called Allen amendment. I was very much amazed a moment ago, as I usually am, at the mental gymnastics and verbal pyrotechnics of my good friend from New York [Mr. FISH]. [Laughter and applause.] In his oration he stated that he was opposed to the Allen amendment because it would kill the Bloom bill, yet he was opposed to the Bloom bill.

Mr. FISH. That is not quite right.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot yield in the short time I have.

Furthermore the gentleman stated that he favored an embargo, yet an embargo presupposes a state of war, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is opposed to a law which will permit the President of the United States of America to declare that a state of war exists, and therefore issue a proclamation bringing into force an embargo law. It seems to me that only the all-seeing eye of an inscrutable providence can follow the germs of thought through the labyrinthian caverns of the mind of the gentleman from New York relative to neutrality.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot yield.

I favor the Allen amendment because it frees the hands of the officials of the United States of America, upon whom the Constitution devolves the duty and responsibility of handling our international relations.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative answer a question?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot yield until I have finished my statement.

I favor the repeal of the present Neutrality Act and am opposed to the enactment of any other neutrality law at this time, because every act we have passed since 1935 has placed the United States of America on the side of the stronger nations of the earth. I am further opposed to it and favor its repeal because by virtue of that act itself it places the United States of America in an unneutral position.

Finally, I favor the repeal of neutrality legislation which we have enacted because it is a renouncement of the traditional policy of the United States of America which we have followed for a century and a half.

Let me say to you that the enactment and enforcement of such unworkable legislation as we have enacted since 1935 with reference to neutrality would have made it impossible for the United States of America to be the free and independent Nation it is today, if such laws were in force and effect throughout the civilized nations of the world in 1776. [Applause.]

I know not what course others may take, but in the present circumstances, since the Bloom bill itself admits that the neutrality legislation of 1935 and 1937 was a mistake, and by express terms it itself will repeal those laws, I think the most sensible thing the American Congress can do today is to cast aside this hypocrisy, this fraud we have been practicing upon our own people and the people of the earth, repeal all of this unworkable hodgepodge of neutrality legislation, so-called, and return to well-ordered ways, guided by the Constitution and by international law. Let us take ourselves out of the bypaths of hysteria and hypocrisy and put this Nation again upon the high road to common sense, decency, and sanity in our dealings with ourselves and the other nations of this earth. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about how we got into the World War. We did not get into the World War because of international law. We got into the World War because of the violations of international law and because of our failure to punish those violations. [Applause.] It was not because we did not have a neutrality law that we got into the World War. It was because we failed to enforce our own neutrality that we got into the World War. We announced an intention at the beginning of hostilities in Europe to be neutral. We did not remain neutral, however. We were forced step by step into the World War because we were not able to defend our neutrality and our international rights. We were weak. Had we had the navy that Theodore Roosevelt advocated we would never have been in the World War. We seem to forget that the first American ships that were sunk were sunk by the British, not the Germans, with gross disregard of our international rights and our neutrality. Neutral ports were blockaded against the shipping of America while we were a neutral, and we did nothing about it. Had we had a powerful navy and had we said to both sides, "We demand respect for our international rights; we will enforce our neutrality"; if we had sunk ship for ship, we would have been let alone. We would have never been in the World War, and we had no business getting into it.

The same situation exists today on both fronts, in the Pacific and in the Atlantic; but today we are no longer a weak nation. We do not have to fear now, if we will but mind our own business and stand ready to defend our own rights, which we are now able to do.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative from Minnesota yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. TINKHAM. Is the honorable Representative from Minnesota aware that when we were making our protests and continually protesting to Great Britain that the agent of President Wilson, Mr. House, was telling Great Britain:

You do not have to take these messages and these statements seriously.

Is not that right?

Mr. MAAS. I realize that, but no law could have stopped that.

Mr. TINKHAM. No law?

Mr. MAAS. The whole theory of a neutrality law is based upon this same American misconception that you can solve every problem by the panacea of passing a law. You cannot do it. It takes as hard work and character to stay out of war as it does to stay out of immorality. You will remember that we tried to solve immorality by prohibition, but we walked back down the road of repeal; and we should do the same thing now on our unneutral neutrality laws.

The misconception that seems to me to be a fundamental in our consideration of neutrality legislation is that incidents cause wars. This, of course, is utterly ridiculous. It is not because some American happens to be on a ship that is sunk that causes war; it is not because some American happens to be selling merchandise to one country or another that gets us into war. The incidents are used, to be sure, to start up propaganda, but the thing that gets us into war is when our vital economic structure is affected. We are not going to rush into war if we are not hurt, no matter how much of our products are sold or not sold. We are proceeding, it seems to me, on the wrong basis, and, therefore, I am strong for the Allen amendment to go back to international law. If embargoes are needed at some particular time to meet a particular situation, if it is thought they will help us, Congress can pass them any time, and then if there are serious consequences, let Congress make the decision which will bring about those serious consequences.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. As I understand, the gentleman stated that we would not get into a war unless our vital economic interests were seriously involved.

Mr. MAAS. I think that is correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. How did it come about that we entered the World War?

Mr. MAAS. Because we did not continue to enforce our neutrality and our international rights, and ultimately we got entirely over on the side of France and England. Had we in the very beginning insisted upon our rights, had we continued our commerce to Denmark, for instance, and not weakly yielded to the Allies, we would have had just as much at stake upon the other side. We would not then have had an overpowering interest on one side as against the other, which is what finally brought us into the war.

Any kind of a law which ties our hands when all other nations are not similarly restricted seriously cripples us in dealing with international problems. Such one-sided restrictions practically destroy our influence in dealing with other nations. The so-called aggressor nations pay little attention to our warnings or protests today, because we have voluntarily so tied our own hands by neutrality laws and semi-official pledges not to fight under any circumstances, that the world is sure we do not mean our warnings and that our protests are mere idle gestures.

There was a day when the whole world respected our position and paid attention to our warnings. There was a day when Japan abandoned a planned invasion of China at the mere warning of an American President. There was a day when France withdrew her troops from Mexico at a mere warning by an American President, that France would stand the consequences if she did not immediately get her troops out of this hemisphere. There was a day when England recalled war vessels dispatched to Caribbean waters merely upon a warning issued by an American President.

But that was all before we set out to guarantee peace by a law. Those incidents, each one of which actually prevented a war, occurred when we relied upon international law and our own military power to back up and enforce our rights under international law.

It is so ridiculous to expect to pass local laws to try to govern the international situation and to expect other nations to be affected even though they have had no part in making such laws, and never subscribed to them.

We will not become involved in a war unless our vital national interests are seriously interfered with so long as we are neutral in fact. Of course, if we project ourselves into alien quarrels we will be drawn into a resultant war. Every so-called neutrality law we have acted upon has in fact been just the opposite—an unneutral act. In every case, the enforcement of the law aids one side in a war, and the nonenforcement aids the other side.

Neutrality means to be neutral, not to take sides, to treat all parties exactly alike. We do not need a new law for that. In fact, no such law can be written in advance.

No neutrality law would have saved us from the disaster of the World War.

In my opinion a law such as we have now on the books, or as we have before us for action today, would have merely speeded our entrance into the World War.

We were dragged into that war, not because we relied upon international laws of neutrality, but because we failed to enforce and defend that policy. The Allies were the first to sink our ships and to interfere with and restrict our shipping. We wrote notes, but we did not retaliate as we should have.

Later, when Germany found herself cut off from supplies from the United States, it set out to try to deny those same supplies to its enemies, France, England, and Italy. The Germans were convinced that we would not go to war in retaliation for sinking our ships, since we had not done so when England sank our ships and blockaded neutral ports against our shipping.

Had the United States rigidly adhered to its announced policy of neutrality from the very beginning and had we vigorously defended our shipping, we need never have become involved.

Our peace and security lie in our remaining out of the overseas quarrels, in which our vital interests are not affected, and in our maintaining such a Naval Establishment as will insure the protection of our commerce and the defense of our legitimate rights.

No nation on earth will sink our ships, blockade neutral ports, nor invade, directly nor indirectly, this hemisphere if such a nation knows that to do so will bring immediate and effective military reprisals from us.

The defense of the United States requires more than the mere ability to hold off an invader from our shores. It requires that we be able to vigorously punish any aggressor against us and to do so in his own homeland.

The mere defeat of his expedition against us is not a vitally serious matter to him. He can and probably will try again, and all history bears this out. But if serious damage can be inflicted upon his homeland, he will think twice before starting such an adventure. It is not the fear of defeat for an expeditionary force that deters aggressors, but the fear that they themselves may be invaded in return for such aggression that keeps them at home in the first place.

There is a way that we may be assured of the maximum freedom from our participation in foreign wars.

That is to let the world know that we will not interfere in foreign wars in which our vital interests are not involved; to assure the peoples of the world that we will not invade foreign lands for the purpose of acquiring territory; that we will use our military forces only in protecting our own interests. At the same time, let us warn the governments of the world that we will tolerate no encroachments in this hemisphere, and no interference with our international rights anywhere. Let us in unmistakable terms assure one and all that to interfere with us will bring immediate and drastic punishment from the United States, and then we will be let alone.

There is no royal road to peace nor security. The price of freedom is still eternal vigilance.

Let us abandon the foolish illusion of peace by a law, and depend on plain, hard common sense, which says "mind our own business, and be so powerful in our self-defense that no one will risk our righteous wrath."

If we pursue such a policy we will be let alone, and we will have peace.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment deals with the very heart of the legislation. I do not care to criticize my friend from Pennsylvania, the author of the amendment. I am not going to vote against the amendment because he offered it, as my friend from New York is going to vote against this bill because he does not like the name of the gentleman on our side who offered the bill. I think we ought to pass upon this question stripped of all personalities and of all prejudices.

There has been a good deal of talk here as to how certain features of the bill would affect this country or that country. I have not in any of the remarks I have made so far on this bill had anything to say with reference to any country, because deep in my own heart what I am trying to do is to pass the very best piece of legislation I can to help America, and America only. [Applause.] Some have said this would hurt this country, some have said it would hurt the other country. Someone has well said, I think with the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. Izac], the emergency is now here. If all signs do not fail we are on the brink of another holocaust, another world war. The question is simply this: Shall we junk the neutrality legislation that we passed just as another war breaks out, or shall we give it a trial? This is the question.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative from Texas explain in any detail whatsoever, or in any way, how shipment of arms to Europe, to the warring nations, is going to be helpful to peace for the United States?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I answer the gentleman's inquiry by asking him the reverse of his question: How will the shipment of arms help to get us into war? Can the gentleman tell me how the sale of arms or the sale of any other commodity will get us into war?

Mr. TINKHAM. It seems to me there is a commitment on us if we do it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. If we sell to all countries alike, there is certainly no commitment.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. My time is limited, but I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The distinguished gentleman from Texas has been a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for many years. We have on our statute books now a law that has been in effect for 30 years, since 1909, consisting of a number of sections defining offenses against neutrality.

We have another law consisting of a number of sections enacted in 1917 dealing with neutrality and another one in 1922, together with an amendment to the 1922 law passed in 1930, all of them being laws which deny certain rights to American citizens in order to keep us out of war. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said he wanted the slate clean. Can the gentleman, from his vast experience, tell us why he failed to include in his repeal all of these laws which the experience of three decades has left upon our statute books to keep us out of war?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I assume it was because of the haste in which the amendment was prepared. The gentleman probably did not have the opportunity to search the statute books to find out that all of these laws had been on the books for so long a period of time.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted here is what will happen. We have the National Munitions Control Board, that every witness who appeared before our committee commended. That is a permanent institution and both in peacetime and in wartime before any shipment of arms may be made the manufacturers have to get a permit. Registration of all shipments is had so that the Government may keep in touch with what is happening and being shipped. It has been a very effective board. Under the pending amendment that National Munitions Board will be junked.

We have also a provision of law by which credits to warring nations are excluded. Does any Member of this House now believe that the American people want us to again finance foreign wars, lend money to foreign governments with which to carry on war? If you do not believe that, then you ought to vote against the pending amendment.

Someone said it was not because of this or that or something else that we got into the World War; that it was because of propaganda or because of economic conditions. We got into the World War because of certain conditions that happened, certain offenses that were committed against our citizens and against our citizens' property that inflamed the passions of our people and led us into war.

This resolution and the neutrality laws we have heretofore passed are the result of the experiences of the World War and eliminates some of those things that might cause our people to become inflamed, thereby involving us in another war. It is said that we cannot foresee what conditions may rise in another war. We can foresee that there is an ocean intervening between us and warring nations. We know there will be the transportation of goods between our country and foreign nations. We know that the title to all those goods will be transferred before those goods are shipped. This will eliminate the danger of aggression to our citizens in the shipment of their goods in time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last six words.

Mr. Chairman, I rejoice at the introduction of this amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is something I have been hoping for for 4 years. I believe it offers the only sound solution to this difficult problem of the management of our foreign relations.

Yesterday I endeavored to point out the utter impossibility of the Congress ever writing down a rule of conduct, binding and inflexible, which could be expected to meet the emergencies of the future. Those emergencies are bound to vary to an extraordinary degree. I shall not enlarge upon that subject just now.

Mr. Chairman, I am for the pending amendment, first, because it will restore the management of our foreign relations to an orderly, constitutional process. Today that management has been distorted, and I am not saying this in criticism of the present occupant of the White House. I am saying it, rather, in criticism of the tendency. Today that process has been distorted by the action of the Congress in delegating to the President, no matter who he may be, powers outside his constitutional limitations, powers extraconstitutional in character. I endeavored to call the attention of the committee yesterday to the fact it was utterly impossible to draw a neutrality act which does not confer discretionary powers upon the occupant of the White House.

We have had a discussion here this afternoon of the first section of this bill, and apparently no two of us have agreed as to what the power of the President should be with respect to declaring that a state of war exists. In the very first section of this bill we find that impossible situation, a situation which of course must result in an enormous increase in the power of the Executive, whether he asks for it or not, and I doubt very much that he asks for it.

If we wipe out, as the term has been used, the neutrality acts now upon the statute books and refrain from enacting additional neutrality acts, what will be the situation? The President will exercise his powers under the Constitution, just as everyone of his predecessors have exercised them. One gentleman spoke here today and said that if we go back to so-called international law and wipe out these neutrality acts, we will thereby enhance and increase the powers of the President. That is exactly not so. We are returning the office of President and its functions to its constitutional field and when we do that we, by the same degree, restore to the Congress of the United States its proper function in its connection with foreign relations.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. With reference to the Constitution, international law is nothing else than the law of nations. When we do that you come right back to the Congress, as originally planned in the Constitution, to make the laws under such circumstances.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to distinguish between the Constitution of the United States and international law. There is no connection between them, none whatsoever. International law represents the ideals of civilization, an attempt of human beings down through decade after decade to restrict the horrors of war and to do so by asserting the rights of neutrals. But that has nothing to do with the Constitution of the United States, in which international law, so-called, is not mentioned.

Mr. BLOOM. The laws of nations are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Constitution confers certain powers upon the President and certain powers upon the Congress. Until we passed the so-called Neutrality Act there was no attempt to create an unbalance as between those two powers. So I say that if we will face the truth in this matter and cast aside all these wild dreams of being able to write a rule of conduct to suit a situation which is utterly unpredictable, and return to orderly processes, we will be walking along the road of safety for our Nation. There never was a safer ark of the covenant than the Constitution of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman yesterday made a very powerful presentation with regard to freedom of action of Congress. I hope the gentleman will refer to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the expense of being repetitious, let me remind you that every time you adopt a rule which is to bind us in the face of future events you are by that much tying the hands of the Government and the people of the United States. Every time you adopt a rule that under certain circumstances such and such shall be done, although you can never anticipate what those circumstances will be, you have taken away from the Government of the United States a degree of freedom of action. Freedom of action is our one safe road, freedom for the President and the Congress, acting together, to determine our course in the face of an emergency, freedom to determine what is best for our country. When you retain that freedom you are walking the road of safety.

That has been my contention from the beginning of this whole discussion. When you depart from that you have gone off into a field speculative in character. No one knows where you are going, and before you know it you will get in trouble. Why can we not trust ourselves? Why can we not trust the Congresses and the Presidents of the future to meet the crises which may overtake them, in the interest of this country, untied and untrammelled.

You pass neutrality acts such as this one and the others preceding it and, as has been intimated upon this floor, there is something in each one of them which is regarded as unneutral, and you are placed upon the defense before you start. It has been said again and again in the debate upon this floor that such and such a provision will help two of the nations abroad and that if you leave it out it will help two other nations abroad. Why talk about who we are going to help? That is not the point. Let us not talk in any such fashion at all. Let us not adopt rules which will be open to suspicion, and these rules are already open to suspicion. Abolish the rules, and do what is best for your country. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York what he considers a proper time for debate on this amendment?

Mr. FISH. I should think 1 hour.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, before we agree on a limitation of time for general debate, let us find out the number of gentlemen in the Committee of the Whole who wish to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests that, as he calls the following names, gentlemen as their names are called will be seated, because the reading of this list will indicate that the Chair has their names here.

Mr. FADDIS, Mr. JARMAN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. BURGIN, Mr. BELL, Mr. PATRICK, Mr. ARNOLD, Mr. MASON, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. McDOWELL, Mr. SCHIFFLER, Mr. REED of New York, Mr. HAWKS, Mr. JONES of Ohio, Mr. HINSHAW, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. ROBSON of Kentucky, Mr. TINKHAM, Mr. BENDER, Mr. KEEFE, Mr. VAN ZANDT, Mr. KLEBERG, Mr. MASSINGALE, Mr. MOSER, Mrs. ROGERS, of Massachusetts, Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire, Mr. CLASON, Mr. CREAL, Mr. BARTON, Mr. SHANLEY, and Mr. BLOOM.

The Chair may state that, whatever time is fixed for debate, the time will be divided equally among the Members whose names appear on this list.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how many names are on the list?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in one hour and a half, the time to be equally divided among the gentlemen whose names have been read by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the limitation of time, the Chair having indicated the number of Members who desire recognition, the time allotted each Member will be 3 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] for 3 minutes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman and my fellow Members, America stands alone. In our national-defense requirements, in our economic future, in our industrial stability, and in practically everything, our Nation stands alone. The American development, progress, wealth, and enterprise generally is envied by many foreign nations. This neutrality bill is the most important piece of legislation which has been before this Congress. It is one requiring our most thoughtful study and conscientious effort. I warn you that the time is rapidly approaching when you and I will realize fully that America's security in every way is America's responsibility and that we cannot depend upon help, aid, or assistance from abroad.

I would call the attention of my colleagues to the debts owed our Government by the foreign governments. As of March 1, 1939, this debt stands as follows:

<sup>4</sup> The United States holds obligations in the principal amount of $289,898.78, which, together with accrued interest thereon, are to be canceled pursuant to agreement of

Apr. 14, 1938, between the United States and the Republic of Nicaragua, ratified by the United States Senate on June 13, 1938.

NOTE.—Indebtedness of Germany to the United States on account of costs of army of occupation and awards under Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, not shown in above statement, but discussed on p. 29 and following.

The enormous amount of $13,119,304,199.38 is the grand total of the amount of total indebtedness today, or rather, of March 1, due our Government by foreign nations. If we now had this money paid to our Government, think of the economic security this would mean to us. The payment of this large amount of cash in the Federal Treasury at this particular time would bring to the American people untold prosperity and economic security. This vast sum represents actual money and materials which our Government has furnished to these foreign nations. You will note the significant thing also that $11,435,645,170.36 is the unpaid principal.

I hope you will not confuse this foreign debt with the other costs incurred by the American Government and American people on account of the World War. I am confident that $40,000,000,000 would not cover the actual cost to America of the World War. I would ask of you, what are these foreign countries now doing to enrich America and to help our Government or our people as such? To the contrary, they are looking out for themselves and their own peoples and annually spending huge amounts for armaments and their own security. If these foreign governments, the most of them, would pay to America even 25 percent each year of what they are now expending for armaments and war preparation, their debts to us would soon be retired. Apparently they are not thinking of paying us, but, to the contrary, are arming to the teeth to defend themselves in the future against all comers. This makes it more evident to us that America stands alone and cannot depend upon assistance from foreign nations.

Little Finland, I believe, is the only one which is meeting its obligations. This, one of the weakest of all the debtor nations, has paid us as follows:

Dec. 15, 1932	$58,000	$128,235.00	$186,235.00
June 15, 1933		148,592.50	148,592.50
Dec. 15, 1933	62,000	148,592.50	$19,030.50
June 15, 1934		147,507.50	19,030.50
Dec. 15, 1934	62,000	147,507.50	19,030.50
June 15, 1935		146,422.50	19,030.50
Dec. 15, 1935	65,000	146,422.50	19,030.50
June 15, 1936		145,285.00	19,030.50
Dec. 15, 1936	67,000	145,285.00	19,030.50
June 15, 1937		144,112.50	19,030.50
Dec. 15, 1937	69,000	144,112.50	19,030.50
June 15, 1938		142,905.00	19,030.50
Dec. 15, 1938	71,000	142,905.00	19,030.50

In addition to the thirteen-odd billion which is mentioned, Germany is due the United States a war debt total of 508,687,731.45 reichsmarks. This figure is of March 1, 1939, at which time I believe a reichsmark was valued at some 40 cents American money. What is Germany now doing toward paying the debt due our Nation? I believe it is well known by all of us the rampant dictatorship and militaristic fervor which now permeates all Germany and how this Nation is now taking within its iron grip small, weaker states.

It is quite interesting to know that Italy is due our Government well over $2,000,000,000. What has been its history over the past 2 or 3 years—killing Negroes in north Africa and overrunning Spain. These nations have money for armaments but not money to pay the United States. It is significant that France is due the United States almost four and one-quarter billion dollars. Do we hear of any proposal being made by these nations to settle up these war claims to our Government? I have not heard of such, but I am soon expecting these nations to make overtures to our Government with the ultimate hope of getting from our Nation loans and assistance.

Such materials as are sold to foreign nations—war materials or otherwise—should be sold strictly on a cash-and-carry basis. They should be compelled to put the money on the barrel head before the supplies leave American shores.

It is my belief that our Nation should stay far and apart from foreign turmoils, interferences, and local wars and involvements. We are a young, progressive, new nation. Our Nation has been built through liberality, frugality, perseverance, Christianity, and patriotism. We cannot and do not understand the various and several hatreds, feuds, and disagreements existing as such between foreign nations. By these nations' very history and traditions, they have inbred likes, dislikes, fancies, and hatreds. We have not lived with them in these traditions and in their history. We do not understand their inbred feelings, one toward the other. We never will, and I, for one, do not desire to do so. Likewise we have no business trying to interfere with their quarrels and fights and sticking out our necks to be chopped off to help or hinder any of them. I earnestly hope that our Nation may never again become involved in their turmoils, feuds, and wars.

The Monroe Doctrine proclaims the Western Hemisphere as ours, and I believe our responsibility reaches as far, and only as far, as the Monroe Doctrine proclaims. At the present time, at least, it is not evident that any foreign nation plans to come over and try to take America. When and if this should become apparent, then is the time for us to defend to the last man and last dollar our American homes and rights.

Many of these foreign nations are adequately able to pay their debts to America. Let us take, for instance, Great Britain, with its far-flung possessions upon which the sun never sets. Let us see what it has in the Western Hemisphere.

The British colonial possessions in the Western Hemisphere are—

Newfoundland and Labrador: Newfoundland, an island on the northeast side of the Gulf of St. Lawrence; area, 42,000 square miles; population (1935), 284,844. Labrador, situated on the northeast coast of the American Continent; population, 4,264.

The Bermudas: A group of about 300 small islands lying approximately 580 miles to the eastward of Cape Hatteras, North Carolina; area, 19 square miles; population (1931), 27,789.

West Indies: Bahama Islands, a group of islands situated east of Florida; area, 4,375½ square miles; population (1931), 59,828. Barbados, the most easterly of the Caribbean Islands; area, 166 square miles; population (1937), 190,939. Jamaica and dependencies, an island in the Caribbean Sea south of the eastern extremity of Cuba; area, 4,450¼ square miles; population (1921), 858,114; Cayman Island, Turks and Caicos Islands, dependencies; area, 89 square miles. Leeward Islands, southeast of Puerto Rico; total area, 708 square miles; total population (1937), 142,063. Windward Islands, three islands south of Leeward Islands: St. Lucia, area, 233 square miles; population (1937), 67,404; St. Vincent, area, 198 square miles; population (1931), 47,961; Grenada, area, 133 square miles; population (1937), 88,201. Trinidad (and Tobago), an island 16 miles east of Venezuela; area, 1,862 square miles; population (1931), 387,425; Tobago, area, 116 square miles; population (1931), 25,358.

British Guiana: Situated on the northeast coast of South America; area, 89,480 square miles; population (1937), 337,039.

British Honduras: Situated on the east coast of Central America; area, 8,598 square miles; population (1931), 51,347.

Falkland Islands: Situated in the South Atlantic Ocean, 480 miles northeast of Cape Horn; total area, 4,618 square miles; population (1931), 2,392.

FRANCE

Now what are the French possessions in the Western Hemisphere?

They are—

St. Pierre-Miquelon: Two small groups of islands south of Newfoundland; total area, 93 square miles; total population (1936), 4,175.

Guadeloupe and dependencies: A group of islands in the Lesser Antilles; area, 688 square miles; population (1936), 304,239.

Martinique: Situated south of Guadeloupe; area, 385 square miles; population (1936), 246,712.

French Guiana: Situated on the northeast coast of South America; area, 34,740 square miles; population (1936), 30,906.

Now, would it not be equitable and just for these two great powerful nations that, combined, owe us some two-thirds of the foreign war debt, to cede to the United States sufficient of their Western Hemisphere lands and possessions to justly settle these debts? The United States has for a long while been very desirous of a great super highway connecting Alaska with the Northwest of our great country. As chairman of the Territories Committee of the House, for the past several years, I have been deeply interested in a project of this kind but we have been unable to work out a satisfactory agreement even for a right-of-way from the State of Washington to Alaska. How appropriate it would be for Great Britain to cede to the United States a strip of territory of, say, 100 miles width, reaching from the State of Washington to the southern end of Alaska. Also, would it not be very appropriate for Great Britain and France to cede to the United States, British and French Guiana, South America, in order that the United States could more surely perfect its just rights in industrial and trade life of the South American republics? Would it not be indeed appropriate for the Bahama Islands and Trinidad together with other islands in the Caribbean Sea to be permitted to fly the American flag and be a part and parcel of the United States?

I call on the Foreign Affairs Committee and the State Department and the treaty-making legislative branch of the Congress to give consideration to these matters to the end that these just debts may be settled for the betterment of all nations concerned. No; I am not advocating a war in an effort to collect these debts. These debts are not worth a world war. No just monetary value can be placed upon the life of men. When war comes, men die. I would not advocate a war to collect these debts but I do believe that super-statesmanship and diligent effort may be able at this critical time in the history of the world to work out a solution to equitable and just agreement and settlement of many of these foreign debts. I urge my colleagues to have these matters uppermost in mind in connection with the bill before us today. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein the matters referred to by me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in thorough agreement, and cannot fail to so state, with every word uttered by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] and the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] in their expressions of surprise that this amendment came as it did this afternoon.

I will admit that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], for whom I have always had a very high regard, stated to us this morning that he insisted on doing it over our protest, but I just did not believe he would carry out that intention until he did it. He and the gentleman from South Carolina and myself have several times cast votes contrary to the normal Democratic vote in the committee—that is, we have decided minor questions in favor of the other side of the aisle—but after having reached a decision there, the able gentleman from South Carolina and I did not change.

The gentleman stated that the passage of this neutrality law was not being honest with the people. I would like to know when was he honest with the people back yonder in the committee or in introducing this amendment here today? He said it was because of a changed sentiment since that time. If we are to legislate here on changes of sentiment, every time we are deluged with a bunch of propaganda or by pressure efforts—if we are to legislate in that way, changing day after day, with the daily changes of sentiment, I am sorry for the country. [Applause.]

The gentleman spoke of international law having come about through the experience of the ages, and yet after 2 or 3 months of conference he wishes to change this entire bill here this afternoon on the floor of the House. If it passes in this House this afternoon—time does not permit me to go into it, but I wish to go on record as saying and calling your attention to what happens if it passes today in Committee and fails in the House tomorrow—it will no more accomplish what some people who are for it think it will than anything in the world. Wait and see when we get back into the House. [Applause.]

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], and rather than use words of my own, I should like to place before the Committee the words of another which express my thoughts most effectively.

Lest I be cut off at the end, I would say to begin with that it is no munitions maker who writes these words. This is no Anglomaniac, this is no administration "yes" man; it is Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, professor of international law at Princeton University, and one of the editors of World Affairs, the organ of the American Peace Society, the oldest and most distinguished peace organization in this country:

ON BEING NEUTRAL

Although the United States has done more than any other nation to establish and simplify the law of neutrality, the subject of late has become increasingly obscured. The fundamental reason for this confusion of thought is to be found in the conflicting policies advocated by various groups. There are many who hold that the experience of the World War proves that it is practically impossible to assert and maintain neutral rights without ultimately resorting to war. They would virtually abandon all claims to neutral rights and either withdraw into an armadillo kind of isolation or openly take sides against an "unjust aggressor." Those who want peace at any price have sought by so-called neutrality legislation to determine in advance the policy to be followed by the United States in time of war. This legislation has resulted in unanticipated anomalous situations with respect to the Spanish civil war and the war between China and Japan.

There are those who talk of coercive "measures short of war" to be used by a neutral nation against an unjust aggressor, in the strange belief that the latter will not eventually strike back with warlike measures. This group of Americans has a large number of distinguished adherents. Whatever the arguments they may invoke in support of such a policy, one thing is perfectly clear—it is not neutrality.

As between those who would supinely abandon neutral rights and those who would take sides openly because they believe neutrality to be either impossible or shameful, there would seem to be a respectable middle course for those honest and reasonable people who believe that the way to be neutral is just to be neutral. With his good common sense, President Washington saw this clearly, and a long line of court decisions and able state papers have developed perfectly logical and clear principles of neutrality. The World War did not demonstrate so much their futility as their need of adaptability to changing conditions of warfare.

The main principles of neutrality have been succinctly summarized under the captions "Abstention," "Prevention," and "Acquiescence." A neutral nation will not merely be impartial but will sedulously abstain from taking sides in any way whatever. It will do all in its power to prevent its territory being used for unneutral purposes. It will acquiesce in certain restrictions on peacetime intercourse which the exigencies of war may impose. If a neutral nation holds that its rights have been infringed, it does not have to go to war in their immediate defense. A right need never be sacrificed simply because redress cannot be had at once. That is not the way law works, and international law is no exception, as was demonstrated in the settlement of the "Alabama claims" by Great Britain by the payment of $15,500,000 to the United States.

These simple and sane principles of neutrality have been elucidated by the rule of reason in numerous instances. They would seem to be better bases for national policy than the intricate kind of so-called neutrality legislation of recent years. No matter how distrustful Congress may be of the Executive power, it cannot take on itself any full responsibility for the conduct of foreign relations or share the responsibility for diplomatic negotiations. The movement back to normal neutrality would seem therefore to be entirely in accord with the dictates of common sense and in harmony with over 140 years of experience. The United States would still be free to retire like an armadillo into a fancied isolation if it so desires, to adopt "measures short of war," or to side openly against an unjust aggressor. It would be free to abandon rights of neutrality or to claim, assert, maintain, and ultimately to vindicate its rights. In any event, under these well-tested rules, the course of action would not be rigidly prescribed in advance, and representative government would still be able to draw upon the best judgment and precedents available to reach a sound decision concerning the attitude the United States should take in time of war.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include the balance of the article read by me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, at last, after 3 hours' constant effort, I am on my feet.

I am going to still support the Committee, even though it worked us out of time we would like to have had.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, in a neutral matter of this kind several things present themselves differently from our approach to other matters on legislation applying within our native confines, but let us not try to find any solace in the idea of falling back on international law. International law stands today as a ship without an anchor and a vessel without a captain, so far as the United States is concerned.

I am going to support the Committee and oppose this amendment because the amendment would throw us right back onto international law, which would mean destruction so far as our being able to anchor to anything definite and secure is concerned. We are the outstanding power Nation and leading unit of the Western Hemisphere, with all its responsibility; can we not say something? Are we able to stand on our own feet and lay out certain rules and measures—and surely nothing more intelligent or needful could be prescribed than that which is set out in the measure before us today—and listen to me, please. Let us not forget that when we move to the scope of international activity in commerce and behavior, it is a different matter from our usual actions here. Let us not get disturbed, then, about the power one man must employ, because when we move into international relations, then we are a unit, not Democrats or Republicans, but a people are we. We can all be concerned here at home when we are passing laws for this Nation about the power we give to the President, and everything like that, but regardless of whether the Democrats are in power or the Republicans are in power, or whoever is President, we have got then to unify ourselves under the head as one Nation, and then there is one other thing to be considered, and that is that this is a moving figure and if we can pass a constructive neutrality law, it must be made to fit a changing picture, a moving figure that will follow and support a reshaping of things. Therefore, we must set out by allowing the President to meet stipulated circumstances and issue a proclamation, let the enforcement of the law begin and then let that judgment hold forth, and by no other means and by no other system and by no other measure that has yet been conceived can any kind of neutrality law ever hope to be effective. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, and members of the Committee, I was one of 13 in this House who voted "no" on the 1937 neutrality bill which is now the law. I have never regretted that "no" vote of mine. It was one of the first votes I cast in this House. I voted "no" on that bill because, as I said then, I felt that the provisions of that bill would tend to drag us into war rather than keep us out of it. I have had no reason to change my mind during the last 2 years. I am opposed to the Bloom bill for exactly the same reason. I feel that the provisions of this bill will tend to entangle us rather than keep us free if the bill becomes law. I am for the Allen amendment. I am for it because I believe it would restore in this Nation the proper constitutional balance between the executive department and the Congress on war matters. I think that is the essential thing we should do. I do not believe that this Congress is playing fair with the people of the Nation when they cause them to believe, as they have caused them to believe in past years, that by the passage of a law, we can keep this Nation from becoming entangled in other quarrels. It cannot be done. It is time for us to confess to the people of this Nation that we cannot do that by law. By the passage of so-called neutrality bills, we are really telling the people of this Nation to pull the ostrich act of burying its head in the sand, and thereby believe that we are out of danger. That is the situation these neutrality laws bring about. We have been at fault in this matter. I think we cannot and should not tie the hands of the officials of this Government and prevent them from acting as circumstances warrant when occasion arises. The passage of any neutrality act does that thing. We should certainly repudiate the neutrality acts that have failed, that we have been foolish enough to pass in the past, and reinstitute a constitutional balance of power. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, in enacting legislation of this or, of course, of any other kind, we are attempting to produce something for the use of this Nation, for the protection of, and for the service of our interests as they may appear in connection with any situation.

On page 15 of the Bloom bill, line 7, is the heading, "Repeal of acts of 1935, 1936, and 1937."

I should think that would be sufficient reason in the mind of any clear-thinking man on this committee today to support the Allen amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I just want to bring this out as a matter of record, that in the event the Allen amendment is agreed to, that does not repeal the so-called Johnson Act.

Mr. FADDIS. No; it does not. It will still prevail.

I should think that the fact of the admission in the Bloom bill itself that three times this committee and three times this Congress have acknowledged themselves unable to enact legislation along this line would be sufficient to convince anyone that the Allen amendment should be adopted.

Three times this committee has tried, three times this Congress has tried to write legislation for the protection of the interests of this Nation in times of emergency, and three times they themselves have admitted that they are impotent in this respect. With this in front of us as an example, have we any reason to believe that we can do any better today than we have done in the past? Every man knows that the original legislation in 1935 was enacted against the sound judgment of practically every Member who voted for it; that it was enacted in response to the hysterical demand from this Nation that legislation of this kind be enacted. Now, it is time for the Congress to meet the country fairly and squarely and acknowledge that they themselves have learned the absolute impossibility of legislating a policy for this Nation to follow in situations which are as yet unknown and which must continue to be unknown until they arise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BURGIN], is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BURGIN. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] has my sympathy. The fact of the matter is, I feel, that that is the thing, perhaps, that ought to be done; but under the circumstances I shall vote against it for the reason that I feel the people as a whole back in our different districts are not yet ready for it. In my district they have felt for the last 3 or 4 years that the neutrality legislation passed by this House is a measure trying to prevent America from getting into another war. I think that this suggestion has lodged in the heart of my friend, Mr. ALLEN, and in my heart and in the hearts of a number of other people. The profound address of the gentleman from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH, and the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. SHANLEY, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Dr. EATON, a member of our committee, were very convincing, but I ask you to consider the question whether the people in our different districts are ready for this. Perhaps it was a mistake in the beginning. I am not saying that that is my opinion, but perhaps it was a mistake to ever enact a neutrality law at all. However, we have a neutrality law on the books and the people as a rule do not know much about it. I do not know much about it. I have been a member of this committee for 6 months. I have heard neutrality talked, I have slept with neutrality, I have eaten neutrality, and I know very little about it yet. I think that is the same thing with the country at large.

In this House we have heard a great deal about the Bloom bill.

I make no criticism of anybody who has criticized the Bloom bill. It amends the present law, ameliorates it, probably lessens its more rigid provisions, and perhaps the best thing to do at this time is to pass the bill the committee has brought in, leaving it to some future Congress to correct it entirely. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I say frankly and in all sincerity that I am heartsick at the thought of even the possibility that this House would seriously consider repealing all neutrality legislation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is one of the most distinguished veterans of the World War, a man who knows what he is talking about, because he suffered in that war. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further for that.

Mr. FISH. He is about to make a direct appeal to everyone in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to inject my own personality into this, but I do say that the veterans of the World War united in an organization at the end of the war and, as was pointed out by the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC], studied this question of neutrality and year after year passed resolutions in their national conventions asking for neutrality. They still want neutrality. They want our present act perfected, not annihilated. If the people of this country thought for one minute that here this evening we were going to wipe out all neutrality legislation, our mail would be heavier in the next few days than it was during the well-known Supreme Court fight of the last session. [Applause.] I have received hundreds and hundreds of letters asking for neutrality legislation, but not one asking that we repeal the present neutrality law. No proponent of the Allen amendment has stated on the floor of this House—nor will he contradict the statement—that if we were to wipe out existing neutrality law we would be right back where we were in 1914.

Over yonder on the hills of Arlington and in the cemeteries across the sea lie thousands of victims of international law, who, if they could, would raise their voices against the proposed Allen amendment to wipe out all existing neutrality legislation. If in the period from 1914 to 1917 we had had on our statute books even the present neutrality law, I believe President Wilson would have enforced the law and that we would not have participated in the World War.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Referring to the gentleman's statement, would he not agree that today, as in 1914, the power to declare war still rests with the Congress of the United States?

Mr. MILLER. The power to declare war, yes; but not the people who could involve us in a war, numerous American citizens and international bankers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from Pennsylvania because I believe it will not satisfy the wishes of the American people to revert to international law if, indeed, as suggested by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] there is any international law to revert to. What we ought to do and what we should have done from the beginning is to come clean about neutrality and not engage in political bunk. That is all we have been feeding the people. They have had no neutrality law, and we ought to have told them that they did not have any. The law we are now operating under is no neutrality law. I doubt very much if it is within the ability of Congress to draw a neutrality law that has any force or effect. The effect of any law we can pass in Congress and label neutrality is simply an expression to the President of what Congress thinks should be his course of conduct in case this country be in danger of involvement in war with another government. That is all it means. The Constitution of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States have declared the power of the President of the United States to be supreme when it comes to such matters as this. What difference does it make if we get up here simply for the purpose of trying to prejudice somebody for or against the President of the United States and talk about giving him additional power? He has all the power he wants. The trouble is that we are trying to put something over on the American people, trying, some of us, to beat down the ears of the President of the United States in the esteem of the people of this Republic. Why, the people have more confidence in the President of the United States and in his statesmanship, and ability, and Americanism than they have probably got in all of this Congress put together. They elected him but they did not elect each of us to assume the leadership or to make the policy for the Government of this country. [Applause.]

So much misinformation has been disseminated about neutrality that the people really believe we have a neutrality law that will keep the United States out of war. We have no such law and never did have. True, the people of the United States want such law and, I say, despite the Constitution and the holdings of the Supreme Court of the United States we, as the Congress, ought to express ourselves so strongly against the doing of anything by the President or the Secretary of State that would endanger involving this country in war that these gentlemen would heed and follow the wishes of Congress. Such provisions in the proposed law as forbidding loans to countries at war, prohibiting shipments of arms and munitions, and so forth, in American vessels, forbidding travel of Americans in war zones, and denying to warring nations the use of our ports for their ships should become the law of this land and, if so, it will greatly lessen the danger of our own involvement. We should stay at home and not jump into the rows and troubles of Europe. We may have our sympathies for or against any other nation, but let us not make the mistake of letting our people or our banks furnish money or credit to any European country that may be involved in war. We have plenty to do if we look after our domestic affairs. We should be busy taking the inequality out of some of our laws and not too much concerned over Europe. Personally, I am convinced that the best service we are capable of rendering our own country is to turn our hearts and minds to consideration of America. Make sure that no American is hungry or in need of the essentials of life and there will not be danger of war. Our people want peace, Congress wants peace, the President wants peace, and I think the thing to do is to keep the most helpful features of the present Neutrality Act and extend it so it will be of more effect as an effort to keep us out of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, in the very brief minutes allotted me, and they are all too brief, I want to remind the House that 22 years ago this fall I stood at Fort Seville, near the city of Verdun. There I saw 7 miles swept absolutely clean of every vestige, every shrub; every living thing was gone. It had been plowed over with explosive shells. Artillery was then firing. The commander of that fort told me that at one time at the peak of the drive against that particular section, the city of Verdun, that the troops came on and on and fell in such numbers that they could not climb over their own dead.

I think not many people have gone over a battlefield following a war, and I want to tell you while you are discussing this bill something about the realities of war.

Until 1932 ten cartloads of skulls and bones were taken to the building established to hold the bones of those who died on that spot. Just over beyond is a valley where you can see a hundred thousand little crosses that has been a place of pilgrimage for the mothers of the soldiers who died there. You can see them kneeling there day after day, praying that there shall never be war again. This includes the German mothers, as well as the French mothers, and others who have gone here. I say to you that is war. The mothers of this country at this very minute are in jitters fearing this Congress or this administration will carry us into another holocaust.

Regardless of the high type of statesmanship on this floor, much as I believe in international law, and I would like to see us go back to international law, there is one thing I would never wipe from the statute books and that is the right to say to any nation at war, "we will or we will not sell arms to you. We will embargo if we see fit, whenever war is declared." That is what the people want in this country. Are you going home to these mothers, to these peace societies, these farm organizations, and these parent-teacher associations and stand before them, after you have put on the books something they believe is their protection against war and sending their boys to war, and say that you voted for this amendment to wipe it out? They still have confidence in that neutrality act.

Mr. Chairman, I am against the Allen amendment. It should be defeated. I do not want to see this House misled today. I want to see you vote that amendment down. I am against the Bloom bill also and, when a motion is made to recommit the bill, if it is made, I shall vote to recommit the bill to the committee and let that committee take time to give this subject further study. We are at peace with all the world. Let that committee take time to plumb this question down to its very depths, then bring in here something sane and sound that will protect the people just as far as human fallibility will permit. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I have not spoken on the pending bill because I do not assume to be an authority on international law nor upon neutrality; but I would like to remind the Members of the House of the letters that have been received from the folks back home demanding that this Congress pass a neutrality act. Right or wrong, the folks back home want us to do something. There is not a man in this House who is in position to ignore the demands of the people who sent him down here. If your folks want a neutrality act, it is not your business to tell them you are not going to give them one. It is not your business to tell them that you are going to put this country back on the basis of international law. International law in their minds means just one thing: It means 1914, it means 1917, it means graves in France and graves in Arlington; it means heartaches at home; and you and I are in no position to deny those people the things that they want. I want to tell you it is unmistakable that they want neutrality. They have every confidence that the Congress can pass a neutrality act. It may not keep us out of war, it may not do that thing that we all want, namely, preserve peace, but it should make us stop and think. We should be able to pass an act here that will make it harder to get into war and if we have not the intelligence to pass that kind of a law all of us ought to be sent home. We have not any business down here. If you are honest with yourselves as you sit here trying to make up your minds what you are going to do, you should remember one thing. You should remember that the folks back home insist that you do something definite at this time to put them at peace and give some sense of security.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, somebody said that the passage of this amendment will take us back to 1914. I would like to have you consider whether or not this amendment will take us back 150 years. I believe this country would be in better shape if the State Department had drafted a neutrality proclamation for the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue instead of bringing this bill down here before Congress. Bear in mind that the first neutrality legislation was written by George Washington in 1793 after several nations in Europe were at war. He wrote it with reference to a set of facts that were already in existence.

If there is any need today for statesmanship, it is the call for statesmanship at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue to issue a proclamation of neutrality, with the vision of Washington, with the philosophy and the ideals of a man of Washington's character who is satisfied with the singular honor of being the President of the greatest nation on the face of the earth. With that kind of proclamation and the discontinuance of careless, ill-framed statements of the State Department and the President at every turn of events in Europe the people of America would be reassured of peace.

I am sure the people of the United States are satisfied that the Monroe Doctrine was born under constitutional authority. It kept us out of foreign entanglements then. These examples illustrate how neutrality first took its roots in America. By the constitutional authority for 150 years vested in the President, that I discussed this morning, these proclamations really guaranteed neutrality to our people.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman in favor of my amendment?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I think we should give very careful consideration to this matter in order to bring ourselves to the same position that George Washington found himself in during the year 1793. I am giving the amendment my very careful consideration because the neutrality proclamation of Washington kept us out of that war, it certainly ought to be looked upon as a guiding star for us today.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] for 3 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, the present Neutrality Act has gotten us into trouble in a couple of different ways. We tried to bring its provisions into action once, and what we did was to favor one side of that conflict as opposed to the other side. There is another conflict raging today, that between Japan and China, and as to that the President has not invoked the Neutrality Act, and consequently we are favoring Japan over China.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. HINSHAW. I do not want to discuss that at this point. I am talking about the Neutrality Act.

Mr. BREWSTER. The gentleman apparently wants to consider that policy.

Mr. HINSHAW. I have not yielded for that purpose.

I say that it is going to be very difficult for us to draft any kind of a neutrality law that will not do damage to one nation and do good to another. At the same time, this neutrality law, unless it is very rigidly enforced, is going to be very difficult for us to follow. The pending bill is even more unneutral, as I see it, than the existing act, in that there are more discretionary powers granted in it. However, in the first section, paragraph 1, if we perhaps struck out the word "President" and inserted the word "Congress," it would give some responsibility for the actions of the United States to this body supposedly sent here to represent the people. I believe that we are in confusion badly confounded, and I believe that this whole matter should go back to the Committee on Foreign Affairs for them to make another try at it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] for 3 minutes.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I have remained seated in this Chamber throughout the entire period of this debate. I have not had an opportunity to attend the deliberations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not being a member of that committee, but I am convinced that in the light of past history the greatest neutrality act this Congress could enact at the present time would be the adoption of the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, past history would indicate, certainly, if we still have the faith of our fathers and believe in the God of our fathers and in the constitutional form of representative democracy we are pleased to call the Government of the United States, that a greater faith in the Congress of the United States and in the office of the President would give us a greater guaranty of safety and peace than any of the various measures we have considered and enacted into law in the past. I must say at this moment, however, that the bill offered by the committee is, in my candid opinion, a great improvement on the Neutrality Act under which we now function. I cannot believe there could be any device that would effectuate unneutrality more quickly than the section of the present act referring to embargoes.

I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]; and if that amendment should fail, I shall support the bill offered by the committee, which, I am sure, has received the best study of the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, it is an extraordinary situation that a bill should be passed by so overwhelming a majority the last time we had the question of arms embargo up here—there was only one dissenting vote in the House, and that vote was cast by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Bernard, who has not returned to this Chamber—and that we should now be told that an arms embargo is altogether wrong. What mysterious influence has operated so completely to change our minds? It is even suggested that a constitutional question is involved, although it is certainly a novel suggestion that the legislation under which we have been functioning without question for 4 years, signed by the President, does not come within the constitutional power of the Congress. It is curious to hear the doctrine seriously advanced that Congress has power to declare war, but has no power to adopt legislation designed to insure peace.

I cannot see that under an arms embargo we will keep out of war. I can say that under international law as hitherto interpreted we did not stay out of the last war. I can point out how almost inevitably we will become involved in the next great conflagration unless an arms embargo is adopted.

Great Britain and France do not possess the gold treasure to finance a single month of war. In one of the great engagements overseas they expended $600,000,000 worth of ammunition in a single fight, and they have less than $2,000,000,000 in gold left now.

What does this mean? It means that either we will give them credit or we will take their other goods in pay. Just so certainly as that happens, within a year we will be at the edge of the same abyss we faced in March 1917 when Ambassador Page told us that we would either have to take up arms with Britain or everything was lost. I do not want to see America walk to the edge of that abyss again. I say, let us stand by the considered policy we adopted 4 years ago, and which we have reiterated in each of the incidents that have since occurred, and leave with the Congress and the President under the present limitation the responsibility of keeping America upon a peacetime economy. That is the best guaranty that America will keep out of the next war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser] for 3 minutes.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, on a resolution like the one under consideration by the Committee and on the proposed amendment pending, I feel as though I would rather reminisce than advocate. As a Christian nation, we who believe in Holy Writ have learned that Moses went into a high mountain there to obtain the Law of God. When he descended and found his associate Aaron had erected a golden calf before which his followers were worshiping, in his anger and passion he literally broke the Law of God writ on tables of stone.

The durability of this law transcribed on stone has failed since the very beginning of law. God's law in the form of commandments have been broken and violated ever since first given to man. As civilization advanced mankind set himself into nations, and nations have found it necessary to enact and enforce laws. Laws transcribed whether on parchment or paper have proven no more efficacious than those written on stone. If people observed the Golden Rule, there would be no need for law. Because they do not, laws must be enacted to restrain them, and yet no nation seems to have found a method of eliminating law because the people were that kind toward other people they did not need law. People among themselves violate existing laws of their government. It is equally true of all peoples and nations.

The law of nations came into being as international law to protect the rights and freedom of peoples of one nation as against the aggression or transgression of another nation. This law of nations was violated by a great power as the aggressor in the great World War, styling it as a "scrap of paper." With this arrogant and defiant action, we are all familiar. At the end of that World War, representatives of the combatant nations met in Versailles to arrive at a conclusion of peace. From this meeting there emerged the theory that a League of Nations should be devised and set up to provide as a collective dictator over all nations to protect the peace and domestic tranquillity of each member against the aggression of another. Naturally an aggressor must of necessity be determined, and once determined economic sanctions were to be applied to the aggressor. We have since observed the example of the League's members becoming aggressors and severing connection with it; waging war (undeclared war if you please) but nonetheless war, with all its agonies and consequences against another member of the League, even the same as if there had been no League among its agreeing nations at all, their becoming signatories to the compact and agreement, carrying no weight at all, the contract being manifestly regarded as another "scrap of paper."

Though President Wilson verily believed the entrance of the United States into the World War would in effect be a "war to end all wars," and to make the "world safe for democracy," his effort was immediately repudiated and the peace treaty with a League of Nations tied into it was rejected by a recalcitrant Senate, a separate treaty being subsequently entered into and the United States of America remained aloof from the entangling alliances with foreign nations, against which both Washington and Jefferson vouchsafed their forebodings.

We recall next, how a World Court was set up and every energy expended to have the United States enter into this newer compact. It was rather universally styled as a "back-door entrance to the League of Nations." Each proposal to enter into and participate in the World Court has been rejected by the Senate. It appears rather strikingly significant, however, that after the proposed entrance was last rejected by the United States Senate, the Neutrality Act of 1935 came into being. I was not then a Member of this House, but I have a vivid recollection of the subsequent enactments since I have been a Member of the body.

I recall the vote on the embargo on shipments of arms to Spain, when only one Member of this House, and in fact the entire Congress of the United States, voted against it, as referred to by the previous Member to occupy this well of the House. Having had occasion to check that vote on an inquiry from a constituent, I learned that detailed result, the vote in the Senate having been unanimous. I have since been traduced and threatened with a plotted kidnaping as advocated by a deserter from the Loyalist Army in Spain, who came to my district to agitate and advocate acts of that rash character. I received a telegram from that same group demanding that we lift that embargo on arms to Spain and impose it immediately on Germany, Italy, and Japan. This gives a concept of what evolves in the minds of certain people who abuse the liberties with which we indulge strangers within our midst. When the receipt of this telegram was incidentally mentioned to Colonel McIntyre, secretary to the President, he exclaimed: "Why, that is the very step that would immediately plunge this country into war." There is little doubt in my mind, the agitator could have desired no less than exactly this occurrence.

When in April 1937 we voted the amendment providing the cash-and-carry plan, I vouchsafed the opinion to a colleague, that regardless as to how and what we legislate, when it comes to regulating and restraining the passions of man, our enactments will be ineffective and impotent. Since the beginning of civilization, all attempts of man to restrict and restrain these passions have proven futile. As a school-boy I learned in history that Penn's treaty with the Indians was the only one never signed and the only one never broken. Though I voted for the cash-and-carry amendment, I did so predicting its violation and its impotency, and I find I was not mistaken.

Though I advocated ratification of the eighteenth amendment by the assembly of my State, and collaborated with Government agents engaged in the enforcement of the Volstead Act to carry out the provisions of that amendment, I learned very early in experience that the appetites, desires, and passions of mankind are not subject to legislative enactment and executive enforcement, and was soon won over to the opinion that no law could be passed to force people to remain sober. I saw the Volstead Act violated and flouted from its enactment to its nullification by the repeal of the amendment, and then saw a senator in my State escape his previous conviction by a court's determination of exonerator for the violation of the act, on the repeal of the amendment before the sentence had been imposed.

Whether it be in the traffic of liquor, narcotics, or munitions, regardless of the law, when the profit to be realized becomes great enough to take the risk, people theretofore to all appearances previously law abiding will take the risk of its violation. Only when the spirit of God looks upon the hearts and minds of mankind as it did upon the face of the waters in the Genesis, will we have the application of the Golden Rule, freedom from violation of law, whether of nations or neutrality. The millennium is not in sight. I cannot forecast its probability. I hold therefore that regardless of what action this Congress may take on the question of neutrality, it will be violated as soon as there is enough profit in it to warrant the chance they may have to take to satiate the greed of the unscrupulous.

With the cessation of hostilities in Spain, the Spanish embargo was duly lifted by Executive proclamation. With the expiration of the period of its enactment the cash-and-carry automatically expired, yet we, as Members of the Congress, receive declarations of dire consequences because of it by well intentioned constituents and correspondents. But under the existing neutrality law as it was enacted in 1935 and continues, we have unwittingly placed our President of the United States in the very position the Nation declined to take when remaining aloof from the League of Nations with its power to determine the aggressor and impose economic sanctions. We would have the President determine the aggressor and impose an embargo, amounting to the same thing, to all purposes exactly the same as if we were signatories to and participants in the League.

I would like to go back to the early days of the war cry in the early teens, and before we entered the World War in 1917, particularly. It was Count von Bernstorff who issued the warnings right here in Washington to Americans to remain off the ocean-going vessels on the ground they were carrying contraband. This brought the condemnation of the American people, the press, and the administration upon the head of the count and won him his passports. Today we have before us for consideration in this resolution the same proposed authority to issue such warning, but we would impose it upon the President and direct that he assume the prerogative that Count von Bernstorff arrogated to himself, virtually repeating the offensive conduct of Citizen Genet in the early history of our Republic.

Trust in God; rely on international law, the law of nations; and enforce the Monroe Doctrine and this Nation will be as near neutral as we have ever been, far more so than any act we may pass here today can make us be.

Regardless of what we enact here today on neutrality, I forecast its disregard and violation when profits entice and lure the unscrupulous. [Applause.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make this observation: I have been very much interested in the discussion on this proposed amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], but let us see what the situation would really be.

International law today declares that arms and munitions shipped to a belligerent are contraband, and ships which carry contraband are subject to be sunk or subject to be seized and destroyed or detained. Now, I ask the people who talk about international law and those people who are afraid of an arms embargo, why, in the name of common sense, if international law declares arms and munitions shipped to a belligerent to be contraband, why cannot we at least, as a Congress, declare that no contraband shall be shipped from the United States in a ship operated and manned by citizens of the United States. [Applause.] We will be doing nothing but writing into substantive law a prohibition which is practically contained in international law.

Mr. Chairman, we have had the Ten Commandments for many centuries, but although those Ten Commandments say "Thou shalt not kill," killing has been going on ever since. We have had to implement those Ten Commandments by the adoption of statutory law throughout the length and breadth of this land, defining killing, and punishing the violators; and it seems to me it is high time that we implement some of this international law, in response to the unanimous demands of the people of this Nation, that we write a neutrality law at this session that will keep us out of war.

Perhaps the neutrality law that we write cannot anticipate the things of the future, but at least we can incorporate in it prohibitions that will cover the experiences which we had from 1914 to 1917. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the American people all believe that Congress has sense enough to write some kind of a neutrality law, whether we do have such or not. But to admit that there is nothing that can be done about it would mean a loss of prestige in the minds of the American people.

As to international law, that is as dead as the blue laws. I challenge the readers of history or the teachers of history to tell me of any one nation that was engaged in war with another nation for a period of 6 months that did not violate international law in some respect. Then there is no such thing, and when you are talking about basing it on international law, who enforces international law? It has no police power to enforce it.

One other point. When they talk about leaving Congress free and at liberty to do what it pleases, after we see what happens, gentlemen, then it is too late to act. It was too late to act after the sinking of the battleship Maine. It was too late to stop the clamor of the people. President McKinley was pushed into war. Every war we have gone into we have gone into while international law was the only neutrality law that we had—the War of 1812, the World War, and the Spanish-American War—each and every one of them.

Now to say that we can do nothing about the matter is to meet the issue pleading weakness which we do not possess.

In defense of all neutrality laws that are passed, and all the criticism that has been made, I wish to remind you of this: None of the neutrality laws passed in the last 4 or 5 years took us into war. Who can say whether or not they kept us out? None of them took us in. I do not know if we had not passed those laws whether we would have been in war or whether we would not have. Who can say? I voted for the last neutrality law. I am not prepared to say, I would not dare to say that without it we might not have become involved with Germany or Italy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe my voice at this moment is the voice of the young men of America. I impose upon your time to earnestly plead that this body with all its sincerity, and its patriotism, and its courage does not again inadvertently create a situation whereby we go to war for purposes other than that of defending our country.

The thoughts of war are not in the abstract to me and those I represent. If war comes I shall be a soldier as will millions of those I am pleading for. My hair is not gray; I shall not stand on the curb and watch the troops march by. I am a veteran of the next war. The risks will be mine and the risks will be given to 10,000,000 other young men and boys who carry the guns and sail the ships and fly the planes.

I have asked at various times on this floor: Whom are we going to fight and why? Nobody has yet answered that burning question, but I know and you know that if we light a fuse the bomb will explode. This Bloom bill is in itself a lethal weapon. To my way of thinking all neutrality bills are potential lethal weapons. All neutrality bills are dangerous, unworkable, and un-American.

We are the Congress of the United States, we represent the people of the United States. We are unanimous in our desire to avoid foreign entanglements and war. The President is in the White House, the Congress is in the Capitol, the wars are in Europe and in Asia. Our only safe course is to meet the emergencies when they come.

Our responsibilities to the young men of the Nation are far more than economic, far more than political. They mean life or death in half the homes of the Nation. We cannot here control the maddened passions of an inflamed world. We cannot here apprehend political and military situations that are rapidly rushing toward a bloody climax.

I do not want to go to war. Millions more like me do not want to go to war. This bill means war. I shall vote against it and when the war comes I shall quit this body and go to war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I came to this House a year ago, having told the people of my constituency that there were too many laws on the statute books, and that a large number of those laws were public frauds, in that they sought to promise to the American people blessings and benefits which are beyond the power of legislation to confer. I had been here only a short time when I made a sad and sobering discovery. If I may borrow the biblical language of my friend from New Jersey, Dr. EATON, "It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle" than it is for a Member of this House, particularly on the minority side, to get a bad bill repealed.

I have consistently replied to people who have written me about the neutrality act that I was in favor of the repeal of the act because, in my opinion, it tended to give the American people a false sense of security. I cannot add anything particularly to what has been said in elaboration on that point, but if I had my way, I would say to the nations of the world, "Our policy is that, if and when the circumstance arises, we will conduct ourselves in whatever way we believe will best contribute to our own interests and to the peace of our people."

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTON. I yield.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman does not believe from the statements that have been made on this floor that international law got us into the last war?

Mr. BARTON. I wish I had time to discuss that. I certainly do not believe it.

Mr. SHANLEY. And the gentleman will bear me out and suffer me to say that the Allen amendment certainly will not get us into this new war that apparently is in the mind of some people, by bringing into being international law?

Mr. BARTON. May I say to the gentleman in answer to that I think the most dangerous mistake that can be made in international relations is an indulgence in sentimentality or self-delusion. If we keep a law on our statute books which leads the nations of the world to believe that under any and all conditions they will not have to figure on the resources of the United States, and if we keep on the books a law which makes our own people feel that behind that law they have a security that really does not exist, we are deluding the world and deluding our own people and endangering our own peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, as we proceed here we may be passing or failing to pass the most important piece of legislation that has confronted this body for 20 years. As I have listened to the debate in the last few hours I have been more deeply impressed, perhaps, than ever before with the sincerity and patriotism and earnestness of this body. It does not make any difference which side of the aisle one sits on, one finds the same earnest desire to serve our country. I believe we are all seeking to keep this country out of war.

A certain general once said to an army as he stood upon the sands of the Sahara and looked at the great Pyramids in front of him: "Men, 40 centuries are looking down upon you." Every man in this room knows that today 130,000,000 people of the United States are looking to this body to keep us out of war.

Yesterday, as the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] addressed this body, I looked around and saw not only on the other side but on this side that his words were leaving an impression. I was impressed and I feel that most of us were impressed when he said that should London, or Paris, or any other great city of Europe be bombed from the air, 30,000,000 radios would make those explosions audible to the ears of America. That statement convinced me as I have never been convinced before that our present Embargo Act would not stand 30 days in the event of a war in Europe. I therefore switched my attention to the Bloom bill.

I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, although I know his amendment is offered in the greatest sincerity, and I have great respect for his ability, but I am opposed to the amendment because it puts us right back in the so-called field of international law. We have heard a lot of learned talk about international law, but every time I heard it I thought of the story of the man who went to the circus and looked the elephant up one side and down the other and then said, "There just ain't no such animal." A distinguished commentary upon English law more than 100 years ago made the statement that no rule of conduct is worthy to be called a law unless that rule of conduct is backed by the force of a sovereign power capable of enforcing it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT to the amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: At the end of the Allen amendment after the word "repealed", change the period to a colon and insert: "Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall affect the powers or authority of the National Munitions Control Board as authorized in section 5, Public Resolution No. 27, Seventy-fifth Congress."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I merely want to inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I think his amendment a very good one.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, much has been said here today about the World War, the number of men who lost their lives, and those who are still confined to Government hospitals as the result of service to their country. There has also been mentioned the war debt, amounting to billions which still today remains unpaid. Mr. Chairman, very little has been said about the activities of munitions manufacturers not only during the World War but before and afterward.

Some few years ago the Congress of the United States saw fit to appoint a committee to investigate the activities of these munitions manufacturers. That committee was made up of Members of the body on the other side of the Capitol. Its investigation covered a period of months during which time the activities of the munitions manufacturers and their deliberate attempt to involve our Nation as well as others in wars was for the sole purpose of disposing of their products. Some few years after this committee presented its report to the Congress of the United States. After due deliberation Congress decided a neutrality law was necessary and in that law they incorporated section 5, providing for the National Munitions Control Board.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Surely.

Mr. ANDREWS. Did I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] to say that he accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. He did.

Mr. Chairman, should the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] be adopted the committee would certainly want to continue in effect this National Munitions Control Board. Let me cite for your information the power of this Board relative to the situation existing in the Far East. The Secretary of State called upon the airplane manufacturers of this country to stop the exportation of planes to Japan. Every plane manufacturer in the country except one stopped immediately shipping planes to Japan, and that one was asked for a report by the Secretary of State. In that report the manufacturer asked permission to complete the order and then he could be expected to stop shipping planes to Japan. That manufacturer kept his word, and what are the results? Today no planes of American manufacture are being shipped to Japan. The same control can be applied to munitions or any other implement of war; and I ask you to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the debate today, if it should be read by our President or by any future President, will serve to make it understood that it is the full and complete desire of this Congress that the Executive so conduct himself that this country may be kept out of war. The most persuasive argument to me is that during the World War while actual conflict was going on the nations that desired to be neutral remained so without having statutes on their books. They kept themselves free. With that experience certainly we should profit thereby.

We should have no desire to do something to mislead the people. An act labeled "neutrality" should not be an alibi for clear understanding of the consequences. That attitude does not please me at all. We fully understand that those thrilling speeches of the gentlemen from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. BARTON] simply led to their final conclusion that present statutes should be repealed, and they favor, as I understand it, the pending amendment.

Let that be fully understood before you further attempt to misquote those gentlemen. Those were convincing speeches. However, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] declared that 35,000,000 radios would bring to our ears the screams of the women and children of bombed cities, I want to remind you that we have been very callous in such matters. Thirty million radios have not seemed to arouse us very much about the screams from Ethiopia, China, Spain, or Czechoslovakia. Our people seem to have kept their equilibrium. There is, however, a marked preference toward democracies. It is all too plain that the country would be greatly aroused if England or France were involved. No wonder that some writer coined the phrase, after carefully considering the conversations held at the White House, "Is not France our first line of defense?" It was refuted at the time, but it summed up the situation probably rather accurately. It was an apt expression, having in mind the developments of those few days. The effect of this bill is well understood. We can very well say to the dog that is chained, "Come and get your food. You are just as much entitled to it as these other dogs." Knowing in advance that the chain is effective, the words have a hollow, mockery effect when the title is "strict neutrality."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, my people have written to me imploring, "Give us neutrality which will keep us out of war." This plea comes from the peace-loving Christian men and women of my State, and I think they echo the feeling that exists throughout the entire country. It includes the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion, who have as a plank in a patriotic platform that we should have neutrality which will keep us out of war. That, I may say, is my own feeling. I think those ex-service men who would have us take the profits out of war, provide adequate defense, and enact neutrality legislation which would tend to keep the Nation out of war would approve of this bill, with certain amendments which the committee has proposed and which, I am informed, others will offer. Therefore, I am interested in perfecting this bill rather than a substitute therefor.

I have been impressed with the seriousness and the sincerity of the speeches made here today in our struggle to find that which will keep us out of war. I shall find it necessary to vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, though I recognize his seriousness and sincerity in offering the amendment. I do not believe we can turn back and put ourselves again, as formerly, on the basis of international law. International law is unique in that it has no penalty other than war, and I fear it is a slender reed on which to lean in order to keep out of war. We will try to enact that sort of neutrality which will have the desired effect of keeping us out of war.

I do not see any consistency on the part of those who oppose this bill because it gives too much power to the President, and who, therefore, demand that we repeal all our neutrality laws and return to the basis of so-called international law. If we should return to the basis of international law, the President would then have more power than is conferred upon him by this unamended measure. Many times we have heard Members cry out against the power of the President, as if they feared he would deliberately plunge us into war. Some have even indicated that we are being led into war. I think much of that is political bunk. I do not have any such fear of the President, yet I do not want any man to carry too great a power or weight of such responsibility. It is a matter of degree. I must remind the opposition that under our constitutional system, established by the founding fathers, the President is, within limits, the spokesman for our Nation in international matters. We must, under our system, confer upon the President some powers in dealing with other nations.

I am watching every amendment which is proposed to the Bloom bill. It may be far from perfect and I want to see it amended. If I feel after the several amendments have been incorporated in the bill that it will meet the prayer of our people to keep us out of war, I shall vote for the committee bill as amended. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, less than 2 years ago a series of meetings were held in this Capital City at night. To those meetings were invited representatives of the great powers of this earth. We began with our own representative, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State. The meetings were held once a week and were closed meetings. What was said was off the record. I call the attention of those Members who were in this House at that time and those Members who have come here since then to the fact that when the Ambassador from Spain came before that meeting his face twitched with emotion, and he spoke under great strain at the attitude of our Government toward the Loyalist Government of Spain, which he represented. We invoked our neutrality law against that country. We found that a state of war existed in that land. That act operated to the detriment of one side in that struggle. I wonder if we realize that if the Loyalist Government in Spain had succeeded we would have made just one more enemy in Europe against the United States? I am not disposed to say what took place in those meetings, but every Member who was there knows that when the Ambassador from China came before us the very atmosphere of the room was charged with sympathy for him. When the Ambassador from Japan came before us, we know what the attitude of that meeting was that night toward his Government. Yet we invoked the neutrality law against Spain, but we do not invoke it against China and Japan, when every schoolboy in this country knows that a state of war exists today in China and has existed for 2 years. What a farce our neutrality law when we invoke it against one country where they have civil war and do not invoke it against another country where a greater war exists than in Spain. Our interests in China are as great, if not greater, than they are in Spain. In which case are we neutral?

I simply call this to your attention in order that we may at least observe how our neutrality law has worked so far as it has been applied to two wars going on in the world since we put it on the statute books. My judgment is it has not worked, and it does not establish the United States to be neutral when we invoke the law against one and not the other, because our very act makes us unneutral.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, while I have fully appreciated the importance of this momentous legislation, I had not intended to make any remarks thereon until the pending amendment was proposed. I am not only opposed to this amendment but I am opposed to the so-called Bloom bill unless it is materially amended.

I recognize that international law has unfortunately become outmoded and has degenerated to the law of tooth and talon, the law of the jungle. It only serves those who are in a position to exert might, and in some instances it operates against those who are recognized to occupy a position of right. There was a time when international law possessed a code of ethics which was universally respected, but, sad to relate, that integrity has become only a memory. International law today is an empty phrase, innocuous and meaningless.

I feel that unless this Congress can evolve some neutrality measure that will meet with the expectation and the hope of the American people we will convict ourselves—I regret to say it, but I shall say it—of imbecility. The people of this country are expecting this Congress and they are depending upon this Congress to pass some sort of neutrality legislation that will safeguard us against participation in any foreign war. As one Member of this body I am willing to support any measure that is calculated, even remotely, to secure this country against such a tragic and melancholy holocaust as it experienced in 1917. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] for 2 minutes.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, since under the limitation time for debate expires at a quarter past 6, I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, if I were convinced beyond a doubt that the bill now before the House would lead us one step toward war I would not support it. It is my opinion that this bill, if enacted into law, will keep us out of war.

Mr. Chairman, in the World War thousands of men were blinded. Although, in my opinion, blindness is not the worst affliction that can befall man, nevertheless, it is a terrible handicap. I know what I am talking about because for 30 years I have been without vision. Do you suppose that I would favor legislation which I knew would result in the murdering of hundreds of thousands of human beings and the maiming of thousands for life? No; I would not. War is inhuman.

If we would take the profits out of war, and there would be no such thing as annexations or indemnities, it is doubtful whether nations would go to war. I do not think that the people of our Nation or any other nation in the world wants war. I do not believe that our great President Roosevelt would intentionally have us participate in a war unless it was absolutely necessary to defend the people of our country. The President has demonstrated many times that his main interest is in humanity.

No matter how long we live and regardless of how much money we accumulate or what position we attain, the time comes when we must depart from this earth and leave everything behind. I would not object if it were said about me after I pass from this planet, "MATT DUNN, while he was a Member of Congress, didn't accomplish a great deal but at least he made a big effort to help his fellow men." [Applause.]

If we would use about one-tenth of the money which is expended for munitions and other damnable devices of war for education and the eradication of slums, we would not only be doing something constructive but also very humane.

Almost every square foot of ground in Europe has been saturated with human blood because of religious, national, and race hatred, and human blood will continue to be spilled until that time comes when man will look upon his fellow man as his brother. Any country that persecutes people because of their religion, nationality, race, or color should be condemned—in fact, our country is guilty of inhuman treatment of many of its own people. The great God of the universe has put on this earth an abundance of everything necessary for man and yet in every nation in the world thousands of human beings are poverty stricken. It is disgraceful and abominable for mankind to be compelled to suffer in a world of plenty. I hope the time is not far distant when the people of every nation in the world will come under one flag—the flag of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Chairman, people are thinking and talking much about neutrality these days. The thought is, of course, that to remain neutral will tend to keep us out of war. From our early history, we have had neutrality legislation. On the whole, it has been helpful in preserving peace. Wise action now may cause calamity to pass us by should war break out in Europe. It is conceded that "changing the rules of the game" after the commencement of hostilities would be much more difficult.

We shall find profit in discovering just what our present law is and the principal point of controversy in the legislation now pending.

The act of May 1, 1937, provides that the President, on becoming aware that a "state of war" exists between two or more foreign countries, shall so proclaim, designating the nations involved. After this proclamation, it becomes unlawful for anyone to ship "arms, munitions, or implements of war" to any of the belligerents thus designated. This provision also applies to "civil strife," like the recently concluded war in Spain.

The present law does not provide for an embargo on foodstuffs and nonmunitions generally. It does, however, stipulate that, after proclamation by the President of a state of war or civil strife, such material—to be designated in the proclamation—can be exported to the nations involved only after the ownership has "been transferred to some foreign government or person," and even then it must be transported in a foreign vessel. These stipulations—foreign ownership and foreign transportation—are the oft-mentioned cash-and-carry provisions.

The foregoing covers the important provisions of the present neutrality law except its stipulations that, after the President has issued his proclamation as to a state of war or civil strife, American citizens must not travel on the vessels of any of the belligerents; and loans must not be made to belligerent countries.

The reason for an embargo on munition shipment to belligerents is in part humanitarian and in part for our defense and protection. That we are furnishing material to be used by warring nations for mutual destruction is an unpleasant thought. Exports of that character did much to get us into the Great War. We wish to remove that factor, one of the tendencies toward our embroilment in another European struggle. The munition makers are, of course, opposed to the embargo, and many join them in the argument that the nations determined to fight will get the materials of war from somewhere. "We may as well have the business," they say. This view—dollars above decency—happily, did not prevail when the act of 1937 was passed.

Little or no humanitarian thought pertains to the cash-and-carry provisions. They are purely for our own protection. If, as in the Great War, an American firm gives liberal credits to a foreign belligerent, that firm becomes desperately interested in the success of that nation. If the country which has bought the goods on time faces defeat, there is at once much pressure to get us into the conflict to rescue the American firm from loss. This was undoubtedly the most powerful consideration among those which drew us into the World War. If England and her allies had not owed American business interests two billions or more dollars on January 1, 1917, the declaration of war against Germany on April 6 of that year would probably never have been made.

Hence the present law now says to foreign belligerents, "If, while you are engaged in war, you buy goods of any sort from American firms, you must pay for them before they leave our shores." Loans to belligerents are prohibited for the same reason.

The other part of the cash-and-carry plan, prohibiting transportation of belligerent purchases in American ships, seeks to avoid another source of international complication. A ship, loaded with goods for one belligerent is often sunk or captured by another nation. If it is an American craft, popular feeling runs high and the urge to join in the conflict is great. Hence, the logic of insisting that a nation at war shall furnish its own transportation. Somewhat similar reasoning leads to the provision in the present law that Americans must not travel on ships of foreign belligerents in wartime. This is an attempt to guard against another Lusitania incident.

The law we have been discussing is neutral, all the way through. It makes no attempt to distinguish between the aggressor and the aggrieved nation. Under the act of 1937, all nations—treaty breakers and treaty keepers—look alike to us. Among the changes proposed in the legislation now pending, is that we shall confer upon the President the authority to designate the aggressor nation and that upon such declaration an embargo shall follow.

It is perhaps well to consider this, but now and always it should be remembered that America has no excuse for meddling, even to this somewhat limited extent, in foreign affairs, much less for sending a military force to Europe, unless certain that the democracies of the world are being destroyed. Therefore, I am opposed to this amendment, believing it is wise to retain the embargo we have. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the amendment we are now voting upon is the Van Zandt amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the members of the Committee, may the Clerk again read the amendment?

The Clerk read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the Chairman if I am not right in stating that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] stated he would accept the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not within the province of the Chair to answer that inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is it possible for me to answer the question of the gentleman from New York at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time, as fixed heretofore, is exhausted.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLEAN. If the amendment is adopted, the gentleman from Pennsylvania can still move to strike out other provisions?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 162, noes 97. So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California to the amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: After the amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT, insert: "Provided further, That nothing in this amendment shall affect the prohibition against loans and credits to belligerents provided in subsections 4 (a), (b), and (c)."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 68, noes 195.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk which I would like to offer at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Strike out all of section 1 and insert the following—

Mr. FISH (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, would it be in order for the committee members to be recognized first to offer amendments?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have already been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is any member of the committee seeking recognition, he is entitled to recognition.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

Mr. KNUTSON. I already have the floor, and have been recognized.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has already been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Recognition is in the discretion of the Chair, and the Chair will recognize members of the committee first. Does the acting chairman of the committee seek recognition?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask whether the committee amendments to section 1 have been agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The only one the Chair knows about is the one appearing in the print of the bill, and that has been agreed to.

Mr. BLOOM. In line 16, there is a committee amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that inasmuch as members of the committee were not on their feet and the gentleman from Minnesota had been recognized, the gentleman is entitled to recognition.

The Clerk will continue the reporting of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Strike out all of section 1, and insert the following:

"That section 1 of the joint resolution of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"PROVISIONS RELATING TO WAR MATERIALS AND LOANS

"SECTION 1. (a) Whenever a foreign state is at war with any other foreign state, the President shall by proclamation so declare, and shall include in such proclamation the names of the states involved in the war, and, from time to time, by amendment to such proclamation include the name of any other state when it becomes so involved, or exclude the name of any state when it ceases to be so involved, as the case may be. A state named in such proclamation as involved in the war shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to be a state to which such proclamation applies.

"(b) Whenever a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (a) is in effect, it shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3, be unlawful—

"(1) for any person to export from any place in the United States to any state to which such proclamation applies any arms, ammunition, or implements of war which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as such, or any articles or materials which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as capable of being converted into arms, ammunition, or implements of war, or

"(2) within the United States for any person, or either within or without the United States for any person who is a citizen of the United States, to make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the government of any state to which such proclamation applies, or of any political subdivision thereof, or to purchase or sell any obligation of any such state or political subdivision issued after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939, unless the President has by proclamation designated such state as having agreed to and as complying with a code of warfare acceptable to the United States.

"(c) Whenever a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (a) is in effect it shall, notwithstanding any provision of subsection (b) or of section 3, be unlawful—

"(1) for any person to export from any place in the United States any arms, ammunition, or implements of war which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) defines as such, or any articles or materials which the President by regulations issued under subsection (d) designates as capable of being

"(2) within the United States for any person, or either within or without the United States for any person who is a citizen of the United States, to make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the government of any state or of a political subdivision of any state that is in arrears or in default in payments due on any debt of such state to the United States, or to purchase or sell any obligation of any such state or political subdivision issued after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939.

"(d) As soon as practicable after the enactment of the Neutrality Act of 1939, the President shall by regulations define every article and material which constitutes arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and every article and material which is capable of being converted into arms, ammunition, or implements of war and shall not amend or modify such regulations during any period during which any foreign state is at war with any other foreign state.

"(e) Whoever violates any of the provisions of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $250,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(f) As used in this section "citizen of the United States," in the case of a person other than an individual, means a person organized under the laws of the United States, the laws of any State of the United States, or any political subdivision of any such State, or the laws of any Territory, district, or possession of the United States."

"Sec. 2. This joint resolution may be cited as the 'Neutrality Act of 1939.'"

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York kindly state the grounds of his point of order?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The amendment is not germane to the section, Mr. Chairman. We could not understand the reading of all of it. It sounded like a new bill, but it relates to all sections, and I think from a casual reading of it, it is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Under the ruling of the Chair earlier in the afternoon it was held that any motion to strike out everything after the enacting clause and substitute some other provision would be in order after we completed the reading of the first section or the entire bill. Upon that ruling I rest my case.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). Unfortunately for the gentleman from Minnesota he has not offered his amendment in that form. In the form in which the gentleman has offered his amendment, the Chair is of the opinion that it is clearly subject to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bloom].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the seriousness of this matter I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the Committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Vorys of Ohio: On page 2, after line 15, insert the following:

"(c) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms or ammunition from any place in the United States to any belligerent states named in such proclamation."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment follows the general form of the present act, but provides for an embargo confined strictly to arms and ammunition. "Implementations of war," whatever they are, have been eliminated from the embargo, and therefore all the elaborate machinery in the present act for defining "implements of war" has been omitted.

Webster's Dictionary, here at the desk, says:

Arms. (1). Instruments or weapons of offense or defense; loosely, objects of any kind that may be used as weapons.

Ammunition. (2). Articles used in charging firearms and ordnance of all kinds, as powder, projectiles, rockets, etc.

This amendment would therefore embargo anything that is designed solely for use in offense or defense in war—lethal weapons—and would not cover any other articles or materials, even though they could be changed into arms or ammunition by a belligerent, or were used both for peace and war, such as trucks, commercial airplanes, sandbags, food.

The prohibition in the present act against transshipment to neutrals is omitted as being needlessly complicated. If the transshipment is actually an "attempt to export" to a belligerent, in a roundabout way, it is forbidden by this amendment.

The provision in the present act for libel and forfeiture of illegal shipments is omitted, as this is clearly covered by sections 233 to 245 of the United States Code, title 22, which are still in force.

This amendment provides the sort of arms embargo the American people think they have now. It is the kind they want, that experts on international law think should be retained. It will help keep us out of war by forbidding a traffic that would mean murder to people with whom we are at peace, murder to our peacetime economy, murder to our neutrality. We are not required under international law to ship arms to anyone. This merely prevents the shipment of "absolute contraband" which is subject to seizure by any belligerent.

By this means we will, as Washington said in his 1793 proclamation:

With sincerity and good faith adopt and pursue a conduct friendly and impartial toward the belligerent powers.

This amendment will not please any strict isolationist or any strict interventionist or any strict defeatist. The isolationist would have us stop all trade with all belligerents and get off the seas. The interventionist would have us stop all trade to one side and furnish everything to the other side and go to war. The defeatist would have us call the whole thing off and rely upon international lawlessness. This amendment will suit ordinary Americans and American historians and American experts on international law. I am told that no other nation has an arms-embargo law. I am proud that this is an American idea and ideal, that we will not help to kill people in other people's wars, because we want to be neutral and friendly and at peace.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand the gentleman's proposal, neither an alien nor a citizen of the United States could manufacture such articles in this country and ship to a belligerent?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. They could manufacture arms and munitions, but they could not ship them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that the bill now proposed to be voted on, the Bloom bill, does permit aliens to operate in this country, through the ownership of plants and through production, and, therefore, can ship goods? Will this bill permit them to do that?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The Bloom bill permits it. This amendment which I have offered does not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then if the American people have to submit their plants and their operations to aliens, where do we get under the Bloom bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I now insist upon my point of order, that the amendment is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say that this amendment dealing with neutrality, restoring a part of the present law which contains in the same section a similar provision, is certainly germane to the bill and germane to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Ohio concluded?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to section 1 of the pending bill. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the section to which it is offered.

The Chair invites attention to the fact that section 1 of the pending resolution provides only that the President shall have authority to issue a proclamation as to the existence of a state of war between foreign states and to name those states. Paragraph (b) of section 1 further provides that whenever the conditions which caused the President to issue any proclamation under the authority of this section has ceased to exist he shall revoke the same. The provisions of section 1 of the pending resolution, therefore, do not relate to the matters sought to be covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Chair invites attention to the fact also that succeeding sections of the joint resolution contain provisions with respect to other matters, and especially invites attention to the provisions of section 4 which, among other things, provide that whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 it shall thereafter be unlawful except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe to export, or transport, or attempt to export or transport, and so forth, articles or material.

The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that if the gentleman's amendment be in order it would have to be offered to section 4 and not to section 1. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which consists of changing the letter "(c)" to "section 2" and adding a new section at this point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 2, after line 15, insert the following:

"Sec. 2. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful to export or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms or ammunitions from any place in the United States to any belligerent state named in such proclamation."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, have we completed section 1?

The CHAIRMAN. Section 1 has been read and is still open to amendment.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment contains exactly the same language of the other amendment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invites attention to the fact that the pending amendment is offered as a new section. It would be in order at this time first to consider perfecting amendments to section 1. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be held in abeyance until any perfecting amendments to section 1 have first been acted upon.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "President", insert "or Congress by concurrent resolution."

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to read to the Committee once more the first line of section (1) (a) as it will read with this amendment:

SEC. 1. (a) That whenever the President or Congress by concurrent resolution shall—

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BARTON. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. The committee will be willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BARTON. Thank you. That saves the Committee from hearing an address.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHIFFLER: Strike out page 2, line 1, all of pages 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, to and including, and all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 on page 14, and insert and include the following as a new paragraph:

"EXPORT OF OTHER ARTICLES AND MATERIALS

"SECTION 1. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of Senate Joint Resolution 51 as enacted into law, first session, Seventy-fifth Congress, and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to belligerent states, or to a state wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe as to lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to transportation on or over lands bordering on the United States, for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent state, or to any state wherein civil strife exists, named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this act, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state or any such state wherein civil strife exists. The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate the articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to so transport.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this act, and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the export of articles or materials from the United States to belligerent states, or to a state wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives or commerce of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe as to lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to the transportation on or over land bordering on the United States, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States to any belligerent state, or to any state wherein civil strife exists, named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this act, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state or any such state wherein civil strife exists, any articles or materials whatever until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. The shipper of such articles or materials shall be required to file with the collector of the port from which they are to be exported a declaration under oath that there exists in citizens of the United States no right, title, or interest in such articles or materials, and to comply with such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated from time to time by the President. Any such declaration so filed shall be a conclusive estoppel against any claim of any citizen of the United States of right, title, or interest in such articles or materials. Insurance written by underwriters on any articles or materials the export of which is prohibited by this act, or on articles or materials carried by an American vessel in violation of subsection (a) of this section, shall not be deemed an American interest therein, and no insurance policy issued on such articles or materials and no loss incurred thereunder or by the owner of the vessel carrying the same shall be made a basis of any claim put forward by the Government of the United States.

"(c) The President shall from time to time by proclamation extend such restrictions as are imposed under the authority of this section to other states as and when they may be declared to become belligerent states under proclamations issued under the authority of section 1 of this act.

"(d) The President may from time to time change, modify, or revoke in whole or in part any proclamations issued by him under the authority of this section."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment would reenact in the exact language of our present law or the law which expired on May 1, the so-called cash-and-carry act. It would strike out all of the provisions of the so-called Bloom bill. I contend it is pertinent and germane, because it may be considered as an amendment as well as a substitution for all of the provisions of House Joint Resolution 306.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER] offered an amendment which, as the Chair understands it, in effect is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending resolution down to and including a certain part of page 13, which would include the striking out of a number of provisions or sections of the bill which have not yet been read.

Based upon the decision of the Chair rendered on the first amendment offered to the pending resolution, in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] offered an amendment, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] made a point of order, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the pending amendment in the form in which offered is subject to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Can I at this time offer a substitute bill for the present bill and have it pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It would depend to some extent on the form in which the gentleman offered it. It could be pending all right.

Mr. TINKHAM. I offer this as a substitute for the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment to strike out section 1 of the pending resolution and offer a substitute for the bill?

Mr. TINKHAM. For the bill. That is exactly what I propose.

The CHAIRMAN. In the event the substitute should be agreed to, in succeeding sections of the bill amendments will be offered to strike them out?

Mr. TINKHAM. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINKHAM offers the following amendment: Strike out section 1 and insert:

"That whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between, or among, two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States to any belligerent state named in such proclamation, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state.

"The President shall, from time to time, by proclamation, extend such embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to other states as and when they may become involved in such war.

"The President shall, from time to time, by proclamation, definitely enumerate the arms, ammunition, and implements of war, the export of which is prohibited by this section. The arms, ammunition, and implements of war so enumerated shall include those enumerated in the President's proclamation No. 2163, of April 10, 1936, but shall not include raw materials or any other articles or materials not of the same general character as those enumerated in the said proclamation, and in the Convention for the Supervision of the International Trade in Arms and Ammunition and in Implements of War, signed at Geneva June 17, 1925.

"Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this joint resolution, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and the property, vessel, or vehicle containing the same shall be subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 8, inclusive, title 6, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 223-225; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 22, secs. 238-245).

"In the case of the forfeiture of any arms, ammunition, or implements of war by reason of a violation of this joint resolution, no public or private sale shall be required; but such arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be delivered to the Secretary of War for such use or disposal thereof as shall be approved by the President of the United States.

"Whenever, in the judgment of the President, the conditions which have caused him to issue any proclamation under the authority of this section have ceased to exist, he shall revoke the same, and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed or forfeitures incurred, prior to such revocation.

"EXPORT OF OTHER ARTICLES AND MATERIALS

"SEC. 2. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to belligerent states is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe as to lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to transportation on or over lands bordering on the United States, for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent state named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state. The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate the articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to so transport.

"FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any belligerent state named in such proclamation, or of any political subdivision of any such state, or of any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government or political subdivision or person, or to solicit or receive any contribution for any such government or political subdivision or person: Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interests of the United States or its citizens, he may, in his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulations as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transactions. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the solicitation or collection of funds to be used for medical aid and assistance, or for food and clothing to relieve human suffering, when such solicitation or collection of funds is made on behalf of and for use by any person or organization which is not acting for or on behalf of any such government or political subdivision, but all such solicitations and collections of funds shall be subject to the approval of the President and shall be made under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe.

"(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to a renewal or adjustment of such indebtedness as may exist on the date of the President's proclamation.

"(c) Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section or of any regulations issued hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both. Should the violation be by a corporation, organization, or association, each officer or agent thereof participating in the violation may be liable to the penalty herein prescribed.

"(d) Whenever the President shall have revoked any such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution, the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

"EXCEPTIONS—AMERICAN REPUBLICS

"SEC. 4. This joint resolution shall not apply to an American republic or republics engaged in war against a non-American state or states, provided the American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in such war.

"NATIONAL MUNITIONS CONTROL BOARD

"SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby established a National Munitions Control Board (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board') to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution. The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce. Except as otherwise provided in this joint resolution, or by other law, the administration of this joint resolution is vested in the Department of State. The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions. The Board shall be convened by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

"(b) Every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

"(c) Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, or implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $500, unless he manufactured, exported, or imported arms, ammunition, and implements of war to a total sales value of less than $50,000 during the 12 months immediately preceding his registration, in which case he shall pay a registration fee of $100. Upon receipt of the required registration fee, the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment for each renewal of a fee of $500 in the case of persons who manufactured, exported, or imported arms, ammunition, and implements of war to a total sales value of more than $50,000 during the 12 months immediately preceding the renewal, or a fee of $100 in the case of persons who manufactured, exported, or imported arms, ammunition, and implements of war to a total sales value of less than $50,000 during the 12 months immediately preceding the renewal. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400 to every person who shall have paid a registration fee of $500 pursuant to this joint resolution, who manufactured, exported, or imported arms, ammunition, and implements of war to a total sales value of less than $50,000 during the 12 months immediately preceding his registration.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to export or attempt to export, from the United States to any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, without first having obtained a license therefor.

"(e) All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Secretary of State, or any person or persons designated by him, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Secretary of State shall prescribe.

"(f) Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as herein provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this joint resolution or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

"(g) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution, all licenses theretofore issued under this joint resolution shall ipso facto and immediately upon the issuance of such proclamation, cease to grant authority to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States to any belligerent state named in such proclamation, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state and said licenses, insofar as the grant of authority to export to the state or states named in such proclamation is concerned, shall be null and void.

"(h) No purchase of arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this joint resolution.

"(i) The provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the sale of ordnance and stores to the Government of Cuba (39 Stat. 619, 643; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 50, sec. 72), are hereby repealed as of December 31, 1937.

"(j) The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. The Board shall include in such reports a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this joint resolution, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder.

"(k) The President is hereby authorized to proclaim, upon recommendation of the Board from time to time, a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

"AMERICAN VESSELS PROHIBITED FROM CARRYING ARMS TO BELLIGERENT STATES

"SEC. 6. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel to carry any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any belligerent state, named in such proclamation, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state.

"(b) Whoever, in violation of the provisions of this section, shall take, or attempt to take, or shall authorize, hire, or solicit another to take, any American vessel carrying such cargo out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, and her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, and the arms, ammunition, and implements of war on board, shall be forfeited to the United States.

"USE OF AMERICAN PORTS AS BASE OF SUPPLY

"SEC. 7. (a) Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States fuel, men, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217, 221; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security or neutrality of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men or any part of the cargo to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state.

"SUBMARINES AND ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS

"SEC. 8. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state, will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine or armed merchant vessel to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. Whenever, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

"TRAVEL ON VESSELS OF BELLIGERENT STATES

"SEC. 9. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this joint resolution it shall thereafter be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to travel on any vessel of the state or states named in such proclamation, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a citizen of the United States traveling on a vessel whose voyage was begun in advance of the date of the President's proclamation, and who had no opportunity to discontinue his voyage after that date: And provided further, That they shall not apply under 90 days after the date of the President's proclamation to a citizen of the United States returning from a foreign state to the United States. Whenever, in the President's judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

"ARMING OF AMERICAN MERCHANT VESSELS PROHIBITED

"SEC. 10. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state named in such proclamation, to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war, except small arms and ammunition therefor which the President may deem necessary and shall publicly designate for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels.

"REGULATIONS

"SEC. 11. The President may, from time to time, promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this joint resolution; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this joint resolution through such officer or officers, or agency or agencies, as he shall direct.

"GENERAL PENALTY PROVISIONS"

"Sec. 12. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this joint resolution or of any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereto where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"DEFINITIONS"

"Sec. 13. For the purposes of this joint resolution—

"(a) The term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia.

"(b) The term 'person' includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

"(c) The term 'vessel' means every description of watercraft (including aircraft) or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on, under, or over water.

"(d) The term 'American vessel' means any vessel (including aircraft) documented under the laws of the United States.

"(e) The term 'vehicle' means every description of carriage (including aircraft) or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on or over land.

"(f) The term 'state' shall include nation, government, and country.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS"

"Sec. 14. If any of the provisions of this joint resolution, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the joint resolution, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"APPROPRIATIONS"

"Sec. 15. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section to which it is offered and in the interest of time and economy I raise the point of order at this time and insist on it.

Mr. TINKHAM. What is the point of order?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It is not germane to the section to which it is offered. That is an entirely new bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do. The bill I have offered is the present law and I offer it as a substitute for the bill now pending before the Committee. Certainly it is germane, after the first section of the proposed bill has been read, to offer as a substitute another bill.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. When did the gentleman become converted to the present law? He voted against it when it was passed originally.

Mr. TINKHAM. I did not understand the question.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman voted against this law when it was passed before.

Mr. FISH. Has the Chair ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. May I say to the Chair, it is always in order, after the reading of the first section of the bill, to offer a bill as a substitute for the measure pending before the Committee and I have proposed in my amendment that the first section of the bill now pending before the committee be stricken out and the text I have offered, which is the present law, be substituted therefor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to strike out section 1 of the pending resolution and substitute for the joint resolution the amendment proposed by him, which, as the gentleman states, is the existing law.

To that amendment the gentleman from Texas makes a point of order on the ground that the amendment is not germane to the pending joint resolution.

The Chair invites attention to the fact that the joint resolution contains a provision repealing existing law; therefore the Chair is clearly of the opinion that an amendment embracing existing law is certainly germane to the pending joint resolution and overrules the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be held in abeyance and be considered as pending, in order that the Vorys amendment may be considered first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his amendment may remain pending, for consideration after the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand just what situation that leaves us in.

The CHAIRMAN. The practical effect of it, if the Chair may be permitted to suggest it to the gentleman, is that there would first be a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, which seeks to add a new section to the joint resolution. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to substitute another provision for the pending resolution.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object to the unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in this amendment I have proposed the existing law. It retains the arms embargo but eliminates the civil-strife provision of the law, as well as the cash-and-carry section. Otherwise it is the law exactly as we have it today. As the House knows, by limitation of law the cash-and-carry section of the present act was eliminated last May. Although I am opposed to the cash-and-carry section, if anyone wishes to add it as an amendment to my amendment in the event that my amendment is adopted, I shall be pleased to have him do so if he believes that it will facilitate the passage of the bill.

The present law, which is what I now propose as an amendment to this resolution, was originally passed by the Senate and by the House, amended, during the Seventy-fourth Congress without a record vote. The Senate agreed to the House amendments 79 to 2, and the bill was approved August 31, 1935.

Public Resolution No. 74, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved February 29, 1936, extending and amending Public Resolution No. 67, was passed by this House by a vote of 353 to 27 and by the Senate without a record vote.

Public Resolution No. 27, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved May 1, 1937, which amended Public Resolution No. 67 as amended, was passed by the Senate by a vote of 63 to 6 and by the House, amended, 376 to 13.

It is this legislation which the House passed by such a large vote that I am offering tonight to this Committee.

What has come over the Members of the House that they should now refuse to adopt this same legislation which was previously passed by the Congress by such impressive votes? In my opinion, there has been at work a poisonous, systematic propaganda, emanating largely from alien sources, to change the attitude of those who previously voted for a bill identical with the bill which I now propose. There can be no other explanation. Certainly conditions have not so changed since the present law was passed as to justify the fundamental changes which have been made in the bill now before us, giving the President unlimited authority and personal power and eliminating the arms-embargo section.

I have not yet had a direct answer to my question as to how the peace of the United States will be furthered by sending arms and ammunition to England, France, and Russia. If we do not pass a law embodying an arms embargo, as I propose, we are taking the first step toward war. The sale of arms and ammunition was one of the chief factors that involved us in the last war.

I wish to add that in 1915 I stood on this floor and saw introduced the various legislative proposals which we now know one by one led us into war. These proposals seemed very innocent to us at the time, but they all looked toward war, and to war they drew us.

In my opinion, in opposing the pending bill we are fighting the second battle of Bunker Hill and giving notice to the world that we will not surrender our resources and men to fight the battles of other nations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Why should the present law be repudiated? What is the reason for this new proposal? As I stated, back in 1915 and 1916 we saw legislative proposals advanced that seemed plausible on their face, but as we now analyze them we know that they were leading us inevitably to war. Let the committee explain why we should abandon the present law, with its salutary arms embargo, and substitute the proposed bill. Has the committee been influenced by reading the editorials and articles of columnists who are a part of an alien propaganda organization in this country, just as they were from 1914 to 1917? If they have been, and if, as I believe, this bill is a product of alien propaganda and not of American sentiment, of the sentiment that is based on and has its roots in the long-time tradition that the United States should not interfere in the political affairs of other nations, then it seems to me that the House should reject the pending bill and substitute for it the present law exactly as written, which is the proposal I have offered.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Did the gentleman vote against the present law when it was passed?

Mr. TINKHAM. I did because of the cash-and-carry section, a section that is not included in my proposal.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman would rather not have that in his amendment as now offered?

Mr. TINKHAM. That is correct. I have eliminated that section.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Has the gentleman anything in lieu of that?

Mr. TINKHAM. No; nothing in lieu of it, except international law.

Mr. Chairman, I want this House to consider what are the reasons for the proposal that the present law be superseded by a new statute. Read your daily papers, read your columnists, and you will find that it is the very papers and the very columnists who used all their influence to project us into the last war. They are for this proposed bill because they desire to project us into the next for for alien purposes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the conditions in the Orient and the conditions in Europe are different today from what they were when the present so-called Neutrality Act was passed?

Mr. TINKHAM. They are a little more intense, but essentially they are not different at all. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like before sitting to submit the unanimous consent request that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes, which I would like to use.

Mr. CORBETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have a very important amendment and I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. My request referred to the pending amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have an amendment to offer to the Tinkham amendment and I want at least 5 minutes on that.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending Tinkham amendment close in 15 minutes, of which I may have 2 minutes to close.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and that I may have 2 minutes of that time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 minutes of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time particularly to raise several questions which are germane both to these amendments and those that are to follow. I particularly want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to my remarks because I expect to address to him a question or two. The current proposal, or the Bloom bill we have here, is a measure which will strike out the existing law which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to re-establish by his substitute bill. Throughout this debate those who are proposing the change have challenged those of us who are opposed to the change to give the reasons why a change would not be good. I believe it falls upon the affirmative in this debate to sustain the burden of proof and tell us why they feel that this change is necessary at this moment, and if the gentleman is willing and ready I would like to yield at this point for an answer.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am not the affirmative. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is the affirmative, and I refer the gentleman to his colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman misunderstands. I would like to know why, and at sometime during this debate the question should be answered, Why has this proposal to change the existing rules come in at this time and what is the haste?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I will answer the gentleman by saying that if he had been on the floor the other day when we adopted the rule and had heard my speech I think he would be convinced that the change is a good one. I cannot repeat the statement here.

Mr. CORBETT. I was here and I heard it and I was not convinced. [Laughter.]

However, in that connection, as I pointed out earlier, we have three choices before us today, or perhaps four. We have the law as it was at April 30 of this year, the law as it would be retained by the Tinkham amendment, international law, and the Bloom bill.

The gentleman from Texas, I submit, in his speech yesterday or the day before, made the statement that it would be highly unneutral to change the laws or the rules during the game. I submit that the game is on. I submit that there is war in Asia. I submit that mobilization is an act of war, and therefore the game is on in Europe, as well as Asia, and we are here today proposing to change rules. I submit that by the gentleman's own words we are here today proposing to do an unneutral thing.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I differ with the gentleman about there being a state of war. I think we are very close to war, and that is the reason I want to act before we get into war. I think the game has not been started, but the referee and the players are already on the ground ready for the whistle.

Mr. CORBETT. Would you not call the situation in China a state of war? That is the game we are talking about.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman knows that in committee we had many, many witnesses who testified with reference to the conflict between China and Japan, and that it was agreed by both Democrats and Republicans that while there was a state of war existing it was a de facto and not a de jure war, and that the President had not abused his discretion in not so proclaiming.

Mr. CORBETT. I wonder if the gentleman would sometime—I am going to have to leave the floor for a little while—inform the Committee here what the effect of this change of the rules will be on the current situation in Asia? Will this throw open to Japan the right to purchase arms, ammunition, and implements of war in the United States or will it not?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. If invoked, yes; if not, no.

Mr. CORBETT. If it is not invoked, then we are in a condition of peace, and there is no reason why Japan cannot come here and purchase arms, munitions, and implements of war. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin to the amendment offered by Mr. TINKHAM of Massachusetts: At the end of Mr. TINKHAM's amendment insert: "Provided further, That no implements of war, munitions, or war supplies, shall be sold or transported, directly or indirectly, to any foreign government or any political subdivision thereof while such government is in default in the payment of its obligations or any part thereof to the Government of the United States."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is accepted, we can rest assured that America will not become entangled in wars of foreign nations. I am opposed to subsidizing future wars of foreign nations, particularly nations which now owe the almost bankrupt Uncle Sam's Treasury more than $13,000,000,000, which was handed to them during the World War Democratic administration. I am opposed to directly or indirectly financing or supplying these debt-defaulting foreign nations' future wars under a cash-and-carry system or any other system. If our foreign, welching debtor nations have the cash to buy arms, munitions, implements of war, and war supplies for future wars, let them use that cash to pay us what they owe for the munitions, war supplies, and implements of war which they carried from America during the World War. [Applause.]

I have here a report from the Secretary of the Treasury which indicates that Great Britain, on March 1, 1939, owed the American taxpayers' Treasury $5,419,388,374.72; this debt consisting of $4,368,000,000 of principal and $1,051,388,374.72 of interest.

On March 1, 1939, Soviet Russia owed the United States $385,372,179.65, consisting of $192,601,297.37 principal and $192,770,882.28 accrued interest.

France owed the United States, on March 1, 1939, $4,160,824,820.69, consisting of $3,863,650,000 principal and $297,174,820.69 accrued interest.

On March 1, 1939, Germany owed the United States $1,251,417,749.70, which consisted of $1,225,023,750 principal and $26,393,999.70 interest.

On March 1, 1939, Italy owed the United States $2,022,745,422.62, consisting of $2,004,900,000 principal and $17,845,422.62 interest.

Mr. Chairman, in view of our national debt, which is now more than $40,000,000,000, in addition to many more billions of obligations which Uncle Sam has guaranteed, is it not time that Uncle Sam moves to collect the billions of dollars which foreign governments owe him instead of continuing to play Santa Claus to them, as he has under the New Deal, and as proposed in the pending Bloom war-promotion bill, which has been dressed up as a neutrality measure?

Mr. Chairman, my time is limited, so I am unable to mention all of the billions of dollars owed to the United States by all of our foreign-debt defaulting nations. Many other foreign nations, in addition to those which I have specifically mentioned, owe a total of many billions of dollars. All of these obligations which I have mentioned are owed to the Federal Treasury. Many billions of additional dollars which are owed by foreign nations and their political subdivisions to American private investors are also in default.

Mr. Chairman, a great Democratic President, Andrew Jackson, told foreign debt-defaulting nations to pay their honest debts. He told France what he would do if she did not pay, and then France paid. Our Democratic New Deal brethren would be rendering a greater service to the American people and the memory of President Jackson if they would devote as much time and energy to collecting the billions of dollars owed by foreign nations as they do to collecting $100 per plate for Jackson Day dinners. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the American people do not want to be dragged into another European war which is now in the making. This Bloom bill is a fake neutrality bill. It is a war-promotion bill clothed in the robes of neutrality. This bill is just what the international bankers, international war-mongers, and war profiteers desire.

The present Democratic administration is in control of the same international forces which plunged America into the World War in the name of "Making the world safe for democracy," and "A war to end all wars." The fathers and mothers of America do not want their sons slaughtered or maimed on foreign battlefields in order to pull foreign nations' chestnuts out of the fire and make blood money for international bankers, munitions makers, and war profiteers.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to giving any President the right to designate aggressor nations or declare war zones, as such authority will inevitably lead to war. Since international bankers, arms and munitions makers profit most by war, I am particularly opposed to giving President Roosevelt such authority; as he is a former international banker whose family has been joined in the holy bonds of matrimony with the war-munitions family of Du Pont.

Mr. Chairman, America should keep out of all foreign entanglements, engaging in wars in other lands, and stop rattling the sword and meddling in the affairs of foreign nations. We should stop playing Santa Claus to foreign nations and collect the billions of dollars which they owe us. The enactment of my pending amendment should materially help Uncle Sam to collect.

The enactment of this amendment would serve notice on England and France, who owe Uncle Sam a total of more than $10,000,000,000 and who have a close alliance with the ungodly, unchristian, Communist red butchers in Moscow, that they must pay up, and that they will not get money or sinews of war from Uncle Sam in order that they can prepare for and carry on their future wars. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we should adopt the pending amendment which I have offered and relieve our American taxpayers of some of their pressing burdens and help assure that the youth of America will not again be sent to slaughter on foreign battlefields for the benefit of international bankers, munitions makers, war profiteers, and foreign countries.

Mr. Chairman, the place for American manhood is on top of American soil and not under foreign mud, whether it is in England, Germany, France, Soviet Russia, or any other country on the face of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very lengthy and undertakes to supplant the entire resolution, by substituting the entire law as it now stands; but it does not include section 2 of the present law which expired on May 1, which was known as the cash-and-carry section, requiring those foreign countries who wanted to come here and buy our goods, to come here and get them and carry them themselves.

I think one reason why we have necessity now for neutrality legislation is because we only have a portion of the law. I think section 2, which expired on May 1 was very vital and essential to prevent us from getting into war. That, of itself, would make me vote against the gentleman's amendment, if there were no other reasons. But in addition to that, I do not think we ought to consider this subject in wholesale fashion. Let us take it up in an orderly manner as each section comes along, and offer amendments that are germane. Then we will know what we are doing. As it is this way, we have to take it on faith, because we do not have time to read it all. So I ask the House, in the interest of orderly procedure, to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I just want to say that it is quite clear that every man and woman in this House ought to be familiar with the provisions of the present law. This amendment is printed. We have had a copy of it for several days. We are all familiar with the present law. The only thing that is out of this bill that is in the present law, is the cash-and-carry provision.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Which I think is one of the best provisions of the law. That is one reason why I am in favor of the pending resolution.

I think it is absolutely indispensable that we have something to take the place of the cash-and-carry section, and for that reason I ask the Committee to vote down the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will not the gentleman agree to my amendment which would make these foreign countries that owe us $13,000,000,000 pay us that money if they have cash to invest in war activities?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Anticipating the defeat of the entire amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am not very much interested in perfecting amendments.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted would the gentleman from Texas accept my amendment?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I would have to analyze the amendment before I answer the gentleman.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. TINKHAM. I rise to propose another amendment. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to have to inform the gentleman that debate has been closed on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 47, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TINKHAM) there were—ayes 53, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires whether there are other perfecting amendments to section 1.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, I have such an amendment, which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHIFFLER: Strike out all of section 1 and insert the following as a substitute for the joint resolution:

"EXPORT OF OTHER ARTICLES AND MATERIALS"

"SECTION 1. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of Senate Joint Resolution 51 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to belligerent states, or to a state wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe as to lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to transportation on or over lands bordering on the United States, for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent state, or to any state wherein civil strife exists, named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this act, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state or any such state wherein civil strife exists. The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate the articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to so transport.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this act, and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the export of articles or materials from the United States to belligerent states, or to a state wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives or commerce of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe as to lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to the transportation on or over land bordering on the United States, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States to any belligerent state, or to any state wherein civil strife exists, named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this act, or to any neutral state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state or any such state wherein civil strife exists, any articles or materials whatever until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. The shipper of such articles or materials shall be required to file with the collector of the port from which they are to be exported a declaration under oath that there exists in citizens of the United States no right, title, or interest in such articles or materials, and to comply with such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated from time to time by the President. Any such declaration so filed shall be a conclusive estoppel against any claim of any citizen of the United States of right, title, or interest in such articles or materials. Insurance written by underwriters on any articles or materials the export of which is prohibited by this act, or on articles or materials carried by an American vessel in violation of subsection (a) of this section, shall not be deemed an American interest therein, and no insurance policy issued on such articles or materials and no loss incurred thereunder or by the owner of the vessel carrying the same shall be made a basis of any claim put forward by the Government of the United States.

"(c) The President shall from time to time by proclamation extend such restrictions as are imposed under the authority of this section to other states as and when they may be declared to become belligerent states under proclamations issued under the authority of section 1 of this act.

"(d) The President may from time to time change, modify, or revoke in whole or in part any proclamations issued by him under the authority of this section."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, until I have a chance to study the amendment I reserve a point of order against it.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered is the cash-and-carry provision in the exact language contained in the law that expired on May 1, 1939. That was the only provision of our existing neutrality law that expired.

The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be completely to eliminate all further consideration of the so-called Bloom resolution and to enact into law the cash-and-carry provision, known as section 2 of the original resolution of neutrality. It would in effect establish the status quo of our neutrality as of the 30th day of April 1939.

The resolution which you have before you for consideration is one that omits a part of the present law, adds to that law, and attempts to reenact neutrality in an entirely different form from that now existing upon the statute books. The effect of this amendment as proposed at this time would be to put us exactly where we stood on the 30th day of April 1939. This raises the question, Why should we, after having had such statute for a period of 4 years and during the chaotic condition existing in the world today, suddenly decide that it had to be amended and the present neutrality law, which has amply protected us, dropped and substitute provisions inserted? This is directly in line with the other proposition involved in a former proposed amendment, and that was this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] proposed by his resolution that we revert to international law and completely repeal all neutrality legislation. That resolution was voted down. The resolution which I have introduced as an amendment to the Sol Bloom bill takes us to the legislation which has been in force for 4 years under the guise of neutrality, although it has satisfactorily kept us from being engaged in war.

I ask this very pertinent question: Is there some very strong, outstanding reason why we are called upon at this time to repeal the law that has been satisfactory to the present administration, which has well served the purposes of this country, and under which the country has felt safe?

The people are jittery today, and any change in that law, irrespective of the worth or value of the law enacted, is going to make the people of this country very uncertain as to the future conduct of our administration.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I want to inquire of the gentleman with reference to his amendment, and I have it before me. The way I interpret the amendment, it strikes everything in the resolution except what is known as the cash-and-carry section of the old law. Am I right?

Mr. SCHIFFLER. No; the gentleman is not. It was intended to strike out all of the provisions of the resolution now pending before the House for consideration and substitute the language of the cash-and-carry provision as it existed in our law up until April 30. It provides that as a new provision of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, as the amendment is now offered as a substitute, I will not insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of order.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be folly on the part of the House to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER], because by so doing we would eliminate the most vital feature of the law with reference to the shipment of arms, and also it would eliminate any legislation with reference to who shall define the phrase "state of war," or who shall declare that a state of war exists, and so forth. It is the gentleman's intention, as he states, to substitute the cash-and-carry provision of the old law, but that would leave the measure in an incomplete state. By the adoption of this amendment we would have only a fragmentary piece of law. There would be no provision of law by which anyone could find out if a state of war existed; there would be no power by which the various remedies and provisions of the neutrality law could be enforced. I think, therefore, the amendment is ill-advised and incomplete, and I ask the members of the Committee on both sides of the aisle to vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHIFFLER), there were—ayes 43, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] has an amendment pending to section 2. The amendment is offered in the form of a section to follow section 1.

Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] desire recognition on his amendment?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do; and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. We are now considering a new section, and there is no limitation on time?

The CHAIRMAN. No limitation has been imposed.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The amendment offered by the gentleman substitutes a new section 2. The section 2 as contained in the resolution will not be considered until after disposition of the gentleman's pending amendment; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I impose myself on the House once more merely to remind you what you are now voting on. This amendment would restore an arms embargo to the Bloom bill. It would restore a limited form of embargo and covers only arms and ammunition.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTON. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, he has dropped out the words "implements of war" which are in the present embargo provision?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have.

Mr. BARTON. Those are words that could be stretched to cover all sorts of products and materials. The gentleman is confining his amendment to arms and ammunition which are commonly referred to in international law as lethal weapons; is that correct?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. My amendment is confined solely to lethal weapons.

Mr. BARTON. Specifically, would the gentleman's provision embargo trucks, automobiles, or airplanes?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It would not embargo commercial trucks, automobiles, or airplanes, or anything else that could be used for both peace and war, such as a knife, fork, food, or anything else that could be used in war or peace, but is confined solely to weapons of offense and defense under the ordinary definition of arms and ammunition.

Mr. BARTON. Does the gentleman feel that in this modified embargo he has offered a compromise that might possibly be acceptable to those who want an embargo and also to those who do not want to tie the hands of our Government?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is my hope.

This amendment, as I said before, would not suit a strict interventionist or a strict isolationist, but I feel that the time has come when in carrying out the American tradition and ideal of limiting the sale of means of murder we can all get together on this middle ground.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would the gentleman's amendment include such raw materials as foodstuffs?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It would not.

Mr. GEYER of California. Would the gentleman's amendment include scrap iron?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It would not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would it include bombing planes?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. It would include bombing planes and any other military planes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman says his amendment refers only to lethal weapons?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman's amendment refer only to lethal weapons as that term is defined in the dictionary?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I consider that my amendment is synonymous with the definition in the dictionary of lethal weapons.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman accept the definition as stated in the question asked him by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] regarding lethal weapons?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman says that his amendment covers just what the dictionary refers to as lethal weapons; and does not that include practically anything that would kill a man? Would not that mean a shillelagh? Let us be honest about it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. A shillelagh is used not only for beating people up but for walking, and therefore, I believe, it would not be included.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And it is peculiar to the Irish.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BELL. May I ask whether the gentleman's amendment prohibits the sale of munitions entirely, or does it merely prohibit Americans from transporting them?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The amendment forbids the exportation of arms and ammunition or attempting to export them or causing them to be exported from any place in the United States to any belligerent state.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to his amendment to permit the Munitions Control Board to define "lethal weapons"?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. No; the definition of "arms and ammunition," under my amendment, would be left to the courts, where it belongs, and the courts in construing this term would, of course, have access to these debates and to international law. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this will probably be the most important amendment offered before the conclusion of the consideration of the bill. It is a compromise amendment. It is certainly very much of a compromise amendment for me, because for years I have fought to put a ban on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. I have even gone further than practically any Member of Congress. I would like to prohibit the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war in time of peace as well as in time of war, but I realize that such a ban would not be accepted. I realize this is a compromise amendment, and I am prepared myself to go that far and go along with the gentleman from Ohio in leaving out the words "implements of war," so that we will have a specific ban upon arms and ammunition.

Everybody knows what "arms and ammunition" means. They are deadly weapons. They are lethal weapons. They are cannon, rifles, shells, and machine guns, and so on, that are manufactured for war and for war purposes alone.

This is a compromise, and of course we hope to get support on both sides. Furthermore, if this amendment does prevail, I expect to go along with the bill. If the amendment is voted down, then I propose to offer a motion to recommit the bill to the committee. If that motion carries, and I believe there is a good chance of carrying it, then the old law will be continued, which puts a ban on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. That is the law today. It has no cash-and-carry feature, but it has the arms embargo and all the other provisions of this bill.

On the other hand, if you want a compromise, we offer you this compromise of leaving out "implements of war." This permits everything to be sold except lethal weapons. It permits the sale of oil, of cotton, of copper, and everything else except deadly weapons. I believe that would be accepted and welcomed by the American people as a proper compromise.

The question comes down to this: Do we propose by putting through the Bloom bill as it is, without any embargo provision, to permit the traffic in arms so that we will follow that traffic in arms into the next war? That is what the Bloom bill does as it stands unamended. If there is a world war, we will become the arsenal of the world; we will become the potential slaughterhouse of the world to kill people with whom we are at peace. I believe, for one, that that is an un-Christian act for a great, peace-loving country such as ours, for the sake of war profit and blood money, to sell arms and ammunition to kill people with whom we are at peace; and if we do it, of course, we will be dragged into the war.

So, for all these reasons, briefly stated under the 5-minute rule, I am absolutely opposed to the traffic in arms, but I am willing to go along with the gentleman this far and limit the embargo to the shipment of arms and ammunition, and leave out implements of war. In the past, implements of war have caused a great deal of confusion over finding out exactly what they are. There is still a great deal of misunderstanding about it. There is no misunderstanding in the State Department about what deadly weapons are, or lethal weapons, or arms and ammunition. This is a concrete, clear-cut amendment.

I hope some gentlemen will come to our support on the other side, and if you do we can put this amendment in the bill and we will accept the bill and then we can go home instead of staying around here for the next 2 months waiting for the Senate to act. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, we think this is the most important amendment of all.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course it is, because it is practically striking the enacting clause out of the bill.

Mr. FISH. We offer this as a compromise, and therefore we want to be heard on it. You will admit it is the most important amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. An amendment to strike the enacting clause out of the bill would be a very important amendment, and that is practically what this is.

Mr. FISH. Can we not give each one of these gentlemen 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might observe that there has been 15 minutes of debate in support of the amendment and no debate in opposition.

Mr. FISH. I think we ought to have an hour's time.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the motion making it 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 57, noes 88.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BREWSTER and Mr. BLOOM.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 110, noes 113.

So the amendment to the motion was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the motion making the time 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 71, noes 94.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the motion, and the tactics of the gentleman are entirely dilatory, because we have already voted on the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to demand a teller vote on the amendment to the motion.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. FISH and Mr. BLOOM.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 126, noes 143.

So the amendment to the motion was rejected.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 93, noes 123.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN and Mr. BLOOM.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 88, noes 146.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we now agree upon 25 minutes within which to end the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I do hope the Committee will be in order so we can proceed in an orderly manner. I can assure you there is no intention on this side of the aisle or on the part of the Committee to shut off debate. What was done here a few minutes ago was not done with any idea of depriving the Members on that side of the aisle of an opportunity to speak or to limit debate. I thought that after they had had 10 minutes and we were willing to take 5 minutes and add 5 minutes to their time, it was the right thing to do.

Mr. FISH. This is the most important amendment to the entire bill. We have had 2 or 3 hours on other amendments, while this is the most important one and, naturally, we want to be heard on it.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman was heard and I did not object to the gentleman speaking in favor of the amendment, although it was my right to speak following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS]. I hope we may have order from now on.

The CHAIRMAN. The following-named gentlemen were standing when the limitation of time was fixed: Mr. REED of New York, Mr. HAWKS, Mr. BENDER, Mr. O'CONNOR, Mr. SHANLEY, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, Mr. BLOOM, and Mr. BREWSTER. Each of these gentlemen will be recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEALEY. Will that consume all the time that was allotted for debate on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That will consume all of the time that has been fixed by the Committee on the pending amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, you allowed 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]. The gentleman from Ohio does not desire to use that time, and I would like to ask that that time be given to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the temper of this House is not such that we cannot settle down to the seriousness of the question involved here. I want to say in the few minutes that I have that each of you Members on the floor of this House represent a segment of a sovereign people. At no time in years have 130,000,000 people centered their attention upon the actions of this Congress as they are doing today.

I want to bring to you again, as I did earlier in the afternoon, just what war means. I remember being on the English front. An English officer told me that when they were putting their tunnels through under a hill occupied by the enemy to blow them to bits, in digging that tunnel they tunneled through 30 feet of putrid human flesh.

Those were boys that were buried there. I tell you that the mothers of this country have been under a delusion as to the cause for which their sons were fighting. They are under no delusions now, after 20 years have passed.

There are men here who were down at the docks when the ships came in and mothers stood watching for their boy to come down the gangplank. He did not come. Then what did they do? They lifted their eyes and through a veil of tears they saw Old Glory floating from the mast and then a mother was heard to say, "Thank God my sacrifice has not been in vain."

I say to you they realize now as never before that their boys did sacrifice on foreign soil, but not to make the world safe for democracy; not a war to prevent wars. The people asked you, and by almost unanimous vote you put upon the books a neutrality law to stop the shipment of arms in another war. It has brought comfort to those people. They believe, they have hope that it has some influence in keeping us out of war. I say to you do not destroy that hope now.

I shall vote for this amendment, but not wholeheartedly. This bill ought not to be bandied around. It ought to be recommitted to the committee. It never should be sent to another part of this Congress to be dealt with in a way that will disturb the peace of mind of the people. I say stand upon the law which we now have. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS] for 3 minutes.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to again remind the Members of the folks back home. Each of you, Democrats as well as Republicans, represent a district of approximately 300,000 citizens of this country. I hope you are not going to be herded into action on as important an amendment as this one, herded into action which means that you are not voting your constituency, but that you are voting the will of one man. It is your responsibility as Representatives in this Congress to vote the will of the people back home.

We finished talking about international law a short time ago. I do not believe there are 10 men in this House who know the A, B, C's of international law. I know I do not. Fortunately, that amendment was defeated. You are going to vote on an amendment shortly which all during the last campaign the folks back home, not only in my district but in your district as well, demanded. They demanded an embargo. They demanded that this Congress of which you and I are Members today formulate a policy that will make it impossible for this country to participate in the slaughter of other citizens of other nations of this world.

We were almost herded into 10 minutes of debate on this very important amendment. We only obtained 25 minutes. I want to tell you that it is going into the RECORD right now. It is being written by the Official Reporter of Debates, who is sitting in front of me. He is recording the action that you have taken, and if you can go back home, after all the letters you have received, after the full force of the feelings that were packed into that last election is considered, if you can go back there and satisfy your people that 25 minutes' debate on this important amendment was sufficient time, then you are a better man than I ever hope to be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] for 3 minutes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, passage of that provision of the Bloom bill, which repeals the existing embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, will have most serious consequences for the future welfare of this Nation.

The eyes of the world are upon the action of this Congress today. This legislation is of tremendous importance, and is fraught with many possibilities vital to our own future happiness and security. The failure to place an embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent nations before the actual beginning of such a war, will place this Nation in a most precarious position.

For a neutral to alter or change its policies, once a war is in progress, so as to affect unequally one belligerent or another, is contrary to the accepted practices and precedents of international law and may constitute a hostile or unneutral act toward a belligerent so affected.

Let us not be beguiled by the argument that we should not fetter ourselves now but should be free to meet conditions as they present themselves. Once hostilities have begun therefore, if we repeal the present law prohibiting the shipment of lethal weapons of warfare, it will be too late to enact such a provision again, however desirous it may be for our own peace and security.

This position was clearly and expressly declared in the letter of this Government to Germany written by President Wilson in 1915.

This Government holds and is constrained to hold, in view of past indisputable doctrines of accepted international law, that any change in its own laws or neutrality during the progress of a war which would unequally affect the relation of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principles of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change, and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States.

It must seem perfectly clear, therefore, that the banning of shipments of these articles once a war is in progress would most certainly adversely affect one or more belligerents and thereby violate our neutrality toward the nation so affected.

The sentiment of the people of this country is overwhelmingly opposed to our trafficking in lethal weapons of warfare. To aid those countries whom circumstances would best enable to secure such arms, ammunition, and implements of war, would most certainly have the effect of placing us in the position of a partner in the waging of death and destruction with the nation or nations to whom we supplied such material.

We must approach this problem with honesty and realism and not be misled by an ingenious idealism which may precipitate us into the very heart of another great war. Our paramount problem and duty today is to write such a law as will best enable us to maintain our own peace and neutrality.

Though we may differ in our views as to which is the best policy to pursue, I know that we are all animated and inspired by the highest patriotic motives, and that our objective is to find the best means of insuring the future peace of this country. For my part, I am convinced that the best way we can achieve that objective is to enact now, while we have the opportunity, a bill which above all will provide for a strict embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to any belligerent or any other nation which may be acting as a medium through which such a belligerent may receive such articles. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] for 3 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, let me say in advance that it is not easy and it is far from pleasant for me to take a position against the leaders of my party; however, I yield to no man as to my democracy; but, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of personal conviction. As I said upon the floor Wednesday of this week, it rises above party politics, and I am going to say and vote my convictions as I see my duty as an American citizen and act for the best interest of my country as I see it. [Applause.]

My objective is to do everything I can to keep my country out of European squabbles. I will fight to the finish the enactment into law of this bill as written because I feel it means war to my country.

Mr. Chairman, let us tear the mask off of this bill and look it square in the eye and drag the thing before the House as it really is. Let us let sunshine on it. This is not a neutrality bill: it is an intervention bill. [Applause.] What power is given the President of the United States under this bill? The power is given him to permit the lending of credit and money to England, France, and other countries under the operation of this act. Do you want to again lend money to nations that, after you had furnished them the best blood of American manhood, and after we had furnished them billions of dollars of our people's money, that refer to us as the greatest Shylocks on the face of the earth when we suggested repayment? Do you want to come to their relief again? Have we no memory left? Are we without reason?

I want to state one other thing and I want the Members to get this. The pending amendment involves a great principle and it is this, whether or not the House of Representatives tonight is going to commit itself to a desire for profits and gold and sacrifice the blood of American youth over and above the desire for peace throughout the world; can you have peace and sell the killing agencies which aid the continuance of war? [Applause.]

Let us not be fooled about this bill. Read section 4 and you will see there that the President of the United States is given power to bring us to the financial relief of any nation that he sees fit. Is there anyone in this House that has any doubt as to what nations we are going to favor in case of war, if it breaks out in Europe? Has anyone any doubt about that?

Mr. Chairman, do not be kidded about this proposition. They are not fighting over a moral question; they are not fighting over democracy; they are fighting over land, over trade, and over power. [Applause.]

The adoption of the Bloom bill would simply mean we are voting to preserve the status quo in Europe, about which we know nothing. We are voting, if you please, to preserve and leave to England and France the colonies that they took from the world by conquest and aggression and from Germany and her allies at the close of the World War. Should we sacrifice our Nation and our boys for that? I, for one, refuse. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, fortunately there is one Chamber in which debate is still unlimited. Free speech still remains. I venture to predict before that Chamber has finished the dissection of this measure the Members of the Congress and the people of the country at large will understand fully the implications of the action that is here proposed. I further predict this is going to go to the country as one of the great issues in the next year in connection with the impending campaign, because the people of this country do not want us to take any action that will start us down that road we followed 20 years ago to war.

Mr. Chairman, we adopted a policy of arms embargo 5 years ago which has been repeatedly reemphasized. Last year there was only one dissenting voice, and that voice is now missing. We solemnly determined, from the lessons of the last war, that an embargo upon arms and ammunition was the best measure we could take to prevent war.

How will war come? Exactly as it did before. Gradually our economy will be transformed; billions of dollars will be expended here in creating great munition factories; and, finally, we will find our economy upon such a basis that only by entering the war can we save ourselves from inevitable collapse. That is the program and the plan—not of you gentlemen, not even of those in executive authority. I make no challenge as to their sincerity in the collective security which they advocate. It is the plan of those sinister influences that furnished the propaganda which involved us in the World War, in which some of us volunteered 20 years ago to make the world safe for democracy.

Where is democracy today? Russia and France are ruled by dictators. England is seeking to hold its colonies intact. I ask that America adopt an American policy which will look after our own interest and not those of any other country in the world; then America will be united and we will go forward as the lost horizon of that civilization that seems almost ready now to disappear. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] for 6 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee when voting upon this amendment will lay aside appeals to passion and prejudice and consider this strictly upon its merits. If the Members will do that I have no doubt as to what the result will be. The impassioned appeal made has not been predicated upon facts.

I call attention of the Committee again that in all the speeches that have been made not one of those who has spoken in favor of this amendment has pointed out one reason why repeal of the arms embargo will get us into war. With 2 full days of debate, various gentlemen stated the conclusion that the arms embargo being repealed would get us into war, but no one in general debate or in the discussion under the 5-minute rule has pointed out a reason.

It is not the sale of arms. It is the transportation and delivery of arms and goods that will likely involve us in war. Further, I point out that the arms embargo that we have had has been difficult of enforcement. Representatives of the State Department when appearing before our committee said it was difficult in most instances to know whether or not arms were intended for shipment to belligerent nations or not. The law provides that when arms were shipped to either belligerent nations or neutral nations for reshipment to belligerent nations they are prohibited, and many times it has been difficult, the State Department representatives said, to ascertain whether that is true.

If that was true in the case of the minor wars in Europe, the Albanian War, the Ethiopian War, and the Spanish War, I submit it would be much more difficult in the case of a major war with the major countries involved to enforce and carry out that provision with respect to the shipment of arms.

I furthermore point out, Mr. Chairman, as I said in my opening discussion under the rule, that the appeal is made that to repeal the arms embargo is to play sides. The answer is that it does not play sides. As international law provides, arms can be sold to all countries. If we repeal that provision now we stand upon international law and international right, and no one can claim that international law is unneutral. It is unneutral to leave this law in effect now, because it is in violation and contravention of international law.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am sorry; I cannot yield. I have so little time.

Let me point this out to the Committee that, as I said and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] so well said, if war should break out and if conditions should arise under which the American people should demand the repeal of the arms embargo on account of the conditions then existing, repeal after war had broken out would be an unneutral act. We can visualize conditions that might arise that would cause us to do that. If there is any likelihood of doing that, let us do it now while there is no war, so that our act will not be unneutral, but will be in conformity with international law.

Then, for another reason, Mr. Chairman, for a reason that ought to be a controlling reason with this House, I am for the repeal of the embargo because I believe it will help to prevent war. Gentlemen have said that to leave this embargo in effect would encourage war. When we passed the neutrality law I said that the arms embargo would not prevent war, but would serve to encourage other nations. I hoped other nations would follow our example and pass similar laws, but they did not do so.

I say to this House that in view of the conditions as they now exist, to leave this law on the statute books is not to discourage war but to encourage war by causing war to break out. As authority for that statement I read the testimony of a very distinguished witness who appeared before our committee, and who is not a member of my own party, former Assistant Secretary of State Hon. William H. Castle. He is a member of the Republican Party. This is what he had to say:

Mr. JOHNSON. But so far as prohibiting the exportation of arms to belligerent nations, you doubt the wisdom of that, because, as you say, the failure to declare what we are going to do is a deterrent to war-inclined nations?

Mr. CASTLE. It is certainly a deterrent to war-inclined nations.

Mr. JOHNSON. In other words, if we had no law now prohibiting the exportation of arms to belligerent nations you think that might be deterrent to the outbreak of war in Europe at this time?

Mr. CASTLE. I think it might be very strongly so.

There is a man who served in the State Department for many years, a man not biased or prejudiced by partisan politics, a man who has studied international conditions, and his testimony is substantiated and corroborated by many witnesses on both sides of the aisle and of different parties. They all agreed that the repeal of this law would be a deterrent and might prevent the outbreak of war in Europe. The best way to prevent our involvement is to do what we can to prevent the outbreak of war in Europe, and I appeal to you not in the name of sentiment or sentimentality but for no other reason than that I believe that in order to safeguard our country and prevent a war we ought to vote down this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Vorys amendment may be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Vorys of Ohio: Page 2, after line 15, insert the following:

"Sec. 2. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms or ammunition from any place in the United States to any belligerent states named in such proclamation."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts moves that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Members of the House realize that under this amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Vorys], and which reads as follows:

On page 2, after line 15, insert the following:

"(c) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms or ammunition from any place in the United States to any belligerent states named in such proclamation"—

France and England could buy airplanes and automobiles, the things that they want, according to testimony that came to us from the administration, so those who feel that France and England need assistance in that way ought to have no hesitancy in voting for this amendment. We have all been told that France and England do not need arms and ammunition; they do not need the so-called lethal weapons so much as they do airplanes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sorry, I cannot yield now. I have taken very little of the time of the Committee except for a question or two.

I wonder if the Members of the House also have thought of the fact that probably Germany, if she is planning to strike, will strike at once if we lift the arms embargo.

Naturally, Germany if she is going to fight this war to a finish, if the arms embargo is lifted, will strike immediately or before France and England have a chance to arm further.

Also, I want to remind the House of a resolution that I introduced which provides that we shall remain in continuous session. I have had letter after letter from people all over the country who implore us that Congress stay in session in order to take any action that may be necessary in an effort to keep us out of war. Our staying in session would be a warning also to Mr. Hitler that we intend to watch what he does. Also we can watch other nations, the entire European situation, and the situation in the Far East. Every Member here in this House, just as in 1914 and 1917, has legislated as he thought best for this country, and wants to legislate to do the right thing for America first, last, and always.

I voted against the other so-called neutrality act. I know we cannot legislate neutrality, but with all our hearts we want to keep this country at peace and to do the best thing that is possible under conditions as they arise.

I am going to withdraw my amendment, but it was the only way I could secure recognition at the present time. I believe every Member here should have hours and hours to debate the subject, to consider it from all its aspects. It is by far the most important thing we have had at this session of Congress or that we shall have during this entire Congress. I earnestly hope that we stay in session continuously.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And the gentlewoman is a member of this great committee and she tells this House that this so-called Bloom bill is not a neutrality bill, but an intervention bill?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is no doubt in my mind that if the bill is passed at this juncture it would obviously be a bill to aid France and England. Not by the farthest stretch of the imagination could it be called a measure of neutrality. I have felt that it is an intervention bill. I voted against it in committee, I shall vote against it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I shall vote against it in the House. The Vorys amendment imperils the Bloom bill somewhat. I hope the Members will think over my ideas on this subject. They come from a very deep conviction. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 112, noes 121.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. VORYS of Ohio and Mr. BLOOM.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 159, noes 157.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BELL: On page 2, after line 15, following the amendment just adopted, add a new section, as follows:

"EXPORTATION OF ARTICLES AND MATERIALS

"Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereupon be unlawful for citizens of the United States or vessels flying the flag of the United States to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States directly or indirectly to any State named in the proclamation, any articles or materials, and it is declared to be one of the purposes of this act to prevent and prohibit the sale or exportation of such articles or materials except upon a cash-and-carry basis."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the motion which was just acted upon, because I believe, and I think many Members on both sides of this great body believe, that an absolute embargo upon arms would not hold for 30 days in the event that war was declared in Europe. I do believe, however, that a great program was proposed by our great Secretary of State, which, if enacted in all of its spirit, will keep us out of war; and I know that every Member of this body on either side of the House has deeply implanted in his bosom at this moment a great desire that America shall stay out of any war that may trouble the world.

The amendment I have just proposed is the other half of the cash-and-carry plan that was thought to be in this bill. I believe the committee has announced that it will offer an amendment to take out of the bill the so-called war-zone proposition in section 3. This will leave only the cash plan taken care of. My amendment provides that no American citizen shall transport arms to Europe or cause them to be transported to Europe in American ships.

It has been said many times on the floor of the House during this debate that it is not believed we can pass a bill that will be a real neutrality bill that will keep us out of war. The only way we can judge the future is by the past. Almost every Member of this body can think back and remember those fatal days of 20 years ago. You remember the beginnings of that other World War. You remember it was not very long after that war had started until American vessels were being loaded with arms and ammunition, with wheat and bacon and other commodities to the belligerent nations of Europe, and it was not very long until those vessels began to be sunk by submarines. It is said that we have no facts to guide us. We have today facts that are in the minds of every man and woman here tonight. The fact is that if our vessels, unarmed or armed, start across the ocean carrying their products to Europe, those vessels are going to be torpedoed and sunk, or at least some of them are. We know that to be a fact before we start.

The American people are a brave, hardy, and a high-spirited people. How many of you remember statesmen 20 years ago going before the people of this country and saying the dignity of our great Nation must be maintained? A vessel had been sunk on the high seas. So-called international law said we had a right to go there. Perhaps we did, but we know that the sinking of that vessel was one of the great contributing causes that took us into the World War. We know that today. We did not anticipate it, perhaps, then.

The amendment I am offering does this. It prohibits American vessels from carrying any commodity of any sort to belligerent nations. It does not prohibit European nations from coming over here and buying arms or ammunition or wheat or corn or any other commodity so long as they come over here and take it away in their own vessels and pay for it before they leave our shores.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Would not your amendment, if adopted, virtually repeal the amendment that the committee has just adopted, because the amendment prohibits the exporting of arms to foreign countries. Your amendment would provide that if a foreign nation wanted arms here and was willing to pay for them in cash, and carry them away, it could have them. Therefore, would it not virtually repeal the amendment we have just adopted?

Mr. BELL. No. My amendment would not exactly repeal that. This amendment goes further in one direction and not so far in another. My amendment prohibits American vessels from going upon the high seas and carrying any sort of a commodity to a belligerent nation. It does not, however, prevent, as your amendment does, any belligerent nation from coming to America and buying munitions and arms or anything. Your amendment does that, but my amendment goes further than yours. It prohibits any sort of commodity from being carried in American vessels.

Mr. MOTT. But would it not repeal the arms embargo? The last amendment, if I understand it correctly, prohibits altogether the exportation of arms.

Mr. BELL. I would not say that it does.

Mr. MOTT. But your amendment would permit it under some conditions; is that not right?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I believe as firmly as I ever believed anything in my life, that as long as American vessels cross the ocean, laden with any sort of arms or munitions or any sort of commodity that warring nations need and must have—and there are times when wheat is just as necessary to a belligerent nation as munitions—our vessels are going to be sunk, and if our vessels are sunk I can see the tempers of the American people begin to rise, and they will demand of the American Congress that we declare war. I want that never to happen again.

The only harm that this amendment of mine could possibly do is perhaps take a few dollars out of the hands of some shipping lines, who may say we are unjustly depriving them of some profits. But I ask you, Is there a man or a woman in this House tonight with heart so hard or soul so dead that he would place in the balance the blood of our youths and the tears and agonies of our mothers against the profits of a few shipping lines? If you are for the mothers and for the sons of this Nation, if you are for the glorious future that this Nation has before it if we will but keep the peace, then I pray you to vote for this amendment. Do not let our vessels go across the waters laden with any kind of commodity which will cause the sinking of an American vessel and get us into war.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In view of what the gentleman has just stated, why not embargo these materials just as much as you embargo arms, and be done with it?

Mr. BELL. I will answer you in the words of two of the most distinguished gentlemen on your side of the House. An absolute embargo I do not think will last for 30 days, but I do think that the amendment I am now proposing will keep us out of war, because there are men in this House who believe that we ought to sell arms and munitions.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KEE and Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise, a member of the committee?

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I have been asked to read the amendment, and I will read it quickly:

Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereupon be unlawful for citizens of the United States or vessels flying the flag of the United States to export or transport or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported from the United States directly or indirectly to any state named in the proclamation any articles or materials, and it is declared to be one of the purposes of this act to prevent and prohibit the sale or exportation of such articles and materials except on a cash-and-carry basis.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, every amendment that has been offered to this bill today has been just another handcuff or shackle attempted to be put upon the people of the United States. Just another attempt to interfere with their freedom of action.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] simply means driving the American flag and American shipping from the seas of the world. Under the law that you have now and under this bill as it has been offered and as it will pass this House you are providing that shipments of all classes of commodities can be made from this country, the only inhibition being that prescribed by the amendment put in by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] denying shipments of arms and munitions. There is no embargo against the shipment of any other commodity.

You have released the embargo upon practically every commodity this country produces, and now you are asked by this amendment to embargo all American shipping. You are permitting the shipment from this country to every other country in the world in time of war, and to the belligerents, of all the materials necessary to manufacture the implements of war, all the materials necessary to manufacture explosives, all the materials necessary to manufacture guns; you are permitting the shipment of cotton, of sugar, of wheat, and corn and other foods, of chemicals and oils, and lubricants and machinery; of everything, in fact, except the two items—ammunition and explosives. You are now asked to say by this amendment that these articles, practically every commodity grown or manufactured in this country, can be carried by the ships of every nation upon earth except ships flying the American flag. Ships under the American flag, therefore, should this amendment be adopted, must upon the outbreak of war—immediately upon the outbreak of hostilities—be tied to the wharves of this country or anchored in our harbors and taken out of commission. The flag will come down from every ship of American registry. This is not only a burden upon American shippers but it puts them out of business. It would be absolutely a foolish and futile thing to do.

The bill under consideration contains a provision requiring that before any goods or commodities of any kind can be shipped from this country to a belligerent nation in time of war, title to the goods and commodities must be passed to the government of a foreign country or some foreign corporation or person. When anything is shipped under the act we are considering, there will not be an American citizen who will have a single dollar's worth of interest in the articles.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not in this case, for 3 days I have tried to get 1, 2, or 3 minutes to talk on this bill. Hereafter I shall object to any requests to speak in excess of 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels in fairness that the Chair should state to the gentleman from Michigan that his name has been called twice for recognition, but the gentleman did not respond.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. For a brief question.

Mr. KEEFE. The bill under consideration—the Bloom bill—contains a so-called cash-and-carry provision which requires foreign nations to pay cash over here in America before they can take any goods away. Why were they required to come here and pay cash?

Mr. KEE. We require them to come here and pay cash because we want the title to those goods to pass to foreign nations so that American citizens will have no interest in the goods in the event they are lost or damaged in transit.

Mr. KEEFE. Is there anything in this bill, then, which prevents a ship of the American merchant marine manned by American seamen being loaded with goods for which cash has been paid, and carry those goods right over into the face of the guns of the enemy? Is there anything in this bill that prevents that?

Mr. KEE. There is nothing in this bill which would prevent it.

Mr. KEEFFE. Then unless the bill is amended American ships will be permitted to load with contraband or goods which have been paid for here and take them right into the war zone. Are you not subjecting American seamen to this hazard?

Mr. KEE. It is being done under the present law, and they have a right to do it under the present law.

The question the gentleman from Wisconsin has asked shows the absolute futility of adopting an amendment of this kind. You are absolutely stopping the shipment of any American goods, manufactured goods, or any products of the United States, in any American bottoms, tying our ships to our wharves, and driving our flag from the seas; but you are letting the vessels of every other nation of the world come here and get these goods and carry them away. Why destroy the American merchant marine by denying to ships of American registry and sailing under the American flag the right we accord to all other nations of the world.

The amendment is unfair and disastrous in its effect, and should be voted down.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield to see if we can reach an agreement upon time?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment because I think it is an utterly unfair discrimination, restriction, and limitation upon the American merchant marine. This amendment says that nothing shall be carried in any American ship. To my mind this is a pusillanimous and cowardly proposal. It takes the American merchant marine and the American flag right off the seas, when the Congress of the United States is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to build up the American merchant marine. It provides too that our wheat, our copper, our cotton, and the other great products of our mines and farms cannot be shipped in American bottoms to these foreign nations.

If the Members of the Congress know just what this amendment does, I do not believe they will vote for it. It should receive very little support. If the gentleman had added the following words to his amendment "that American ships shall carry these products outside of arms and ammunition (deadly weapons) at their own risk" then I would support it and at the proper time I propose to offer such an amendment. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate it has been a long, hard, anxious day, but I want to remind the Members again of the bill that is now pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which would provide war-risk insurance at the taxpayers' expense for foreign vessels as well as our own foreign cargoes, their men and personal effects. Clearly the Members of the House will not want to force the taxpayers to pay war-risk insurance on foreign vessels, their men, their cargoes, and their personal effects. No country in the world has ever had this form of insurance.

Mr. KEEFFE. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFFE. In response to the suggestion that has just been made, if the Congress adopts the amendment which would prohibit the use of American merchant ships in which to carry goods that have been bought and paid for under the provisions of this law, bought and paid for because it is the intent of this committee that we shall not become involved in war by having American goods go into the war zone, we still are going to permit the American merchant ships that the taxpayers of this Nation own to take those goods, that no American firm or no American individual has any interest in whatsoever, and transport those goods directly into the face of the war zone in Europe. The bill when you first proposed it had a somewhat sensible provision that permitted war zones to be outlined by somebody into which these ships could not go, but as the bill is framed now these ships can go right into the face of any belligerent nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Texas reserved a point of order against the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not prepared to tell the gentleman what he understood.

Mr. HINSHAW. May I inquire whether a point of order has been reserved against the amendment by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. BLOOM. There was a point of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] reserved a point of order.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it proper that that point of order be brought up now and be disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter within the control of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER as an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. BELL: At the end of the pending amendment insert "that upon the declaration of war or upon a condition of war actually existing, it shall be the duty of all Americans to go in the house and shut the door so we won't never have no war no more."

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reread this amendment, because it is the only way I know of we can keep out of war. Here it is: "That upon declaration of war or upon a condition of war actually existing, it shall be the duty of all Americans to go in the house and shut the door, so we won't never have no war no more."

That is the only way we are going to be certain to keep out of war. I have sat here and I have been a good deal amused at men who ordinarily talk common sense. A good many of them seem to have gotten off on the wrong foot.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Apparently the gentleman has peace at home.

Mr. KELLER. The gentlewoman is quite right and I am sure speaks from a similar fortunate experience of her own.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I must yield to the gentleman, because he is one of those who spoke wisely and well today.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I wonder if a large cyclone cellar would not be better. They ought to crawl in the hole and pull the hole in after them.

Mr. KELLER. Yes. We have talked about peace in a most war-like manner. A few men, thank goodness, on both sides have talked thoroughly sensibly to us—WADSWORTH, MAAS, EATON, LUTHER JOHNSON—first speech—Izac, and RAYBURN. Men who have studied this proposition and who have read their history know that we cannot through legislation prevent war under all conditions. [Applause.]

Now, nobody wants war. Yet, if a stranger sat here tonight in the balcony and listened to some of the speeches, he would think everybody wants war except the man who is speaking at the time, because the fellow who talks accuses everybody else indirectly of wanting war and implies broadly that he principally wants to stop war. He is the little hero who stands out in front of the American people, wraps the American flag around himself and says, "All these guys do not know what it is all about, but I do. I am the one who wants peace. Give me the chance and I will bring you peace." A boy in the cloakroom today said, "Nobody is talking about war but the Members of Congress." And the boy was right.

Mr. Chairman, I am ridiculing the various Members and the men who have talked that way because they ought to be ridiculed. The people ought to give them a good laugh, which is coming to them. I hope from now we will talk sense on this question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. KELLER. For a question, yes; but not for a speech.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will not the American people have a great big horselaugh when they read the gentleman's amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLER. I hope they do with the gentleman from Wisconsin as the most appropriate leader of the horse chorus. That is the intention of the amendment, of course. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] for 2 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the Committee because I did not quite finish the question I was asking the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. I do want to convey this thought to you. If you do not think there is a plan all wrapped up that is involved in this proposed neutrality legislation, you get the bill which is now pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries which proposes to establish a Bureau of War Risk Marine Insurance, and set aside $100,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States to be used for the purpose of financing the carriage of these goods, in which no American has any interest, over to the warring nations of Europe.

Under the terms of that bill the War Risk Insurance Board would not only insure the hulls of the American merchant marine but would also insure the hulls of foreign-flag ships that would carry those goods in which we have no interest. It is all part of a well-defined plan that, if we get into war, the goods are going to move, and if the merchant marine of the United States is to be swept off the seas you will see it swept off fast enough when we get to carrying these contraband goods in the face of the warring nations of Europe. The sad part of it is, Mr. Chairman, that the poor people whom I represent in Wisconsin will be taxed to pay the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] for 3 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning of this debate, and I still believe it, we cannot legislate neutrality. I will not cover that ground again. During this debate and after listening to the speeches of some of the Members on the Republican side of the House, I thought we had risen above party politics. I thought they were interested in neutrality and actually interested above everything in keeping America at peace. I thought they were interested in the fact that they truly wanted real neutrality. Many fine speeches were made to the effect that they did not believe that we could legislate neutrality. Your leading Republicans spoke on the floor of the House along those lines, but to my utter surprise and disgust the amendment for the embargo was placed in the bill. Those very Members who made their speeches so spiritedly to the effect that we cannot legislate neutrality did so for the press only. Hypocritical in the extreme, they walked through the tellers behind their leader on this subject, the Honorable HAMILTON FISH, and voted against the very things they had talked about on the floor of the House. How can we expect to have a program of neutrality when Members are not any more sincere than that?

When are you going to be honest with yourselves? I ask you this in all sincerity. You leaders over there on the Republican side know to whom I refer. You know that you talked one way and walked down behind the leader and voted the other way because you consider you made statements to the effect that you were not in favor of the things for which you just voted. It is my sincere hope that when we come to the point where you will be forced to put yourselves on record with a vote of either "yea" or "nay" on the embargo amendment, you will at least vote along the lines you talked about on the floor of the House. You will get a chance to do it, and I feel certain you will not be able to back away from it because you would not want it to be known that you double-crossed the people of your district.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKEKELSON] for 3 minutes.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here the whole afternoon listening to discussion of the many causes which bring about war. There is one issue that has not been raised this afternoon, and that is gold. The cause of all wars is gold and credit. It was credit that caused the World War and it was credit that brought about the first infringement of international law in regard to war. It is well for you to bear in mind that the international dollar is now secured on 15.521 grains of gold and that all international credit is paid in gold. Today the stage is set perfectly for another war because we have $13,500,000,000 in gold in our Treasury, and foreign nations can take our bonds and take our commodity money that we are using here today, and that can pay for all the war material they want to buy. They now have a credit in the United States of nearly $13,000,000,000. That is the amount of gold certificates now outstanding, and that money will be used under this amendment to carry war materials from the United States to whoever wants to buy it. That is the thing you want to stop if you want to stop war.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that foreign governments that are arming to the teeth owe the American Treasury $13,000,000,000, does not the gentleman believe it would be wise if we would follow the advice of former President Jackson and pass legislation to collect the money they owe us for the past war instead of giving them more money to carry on future wars?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Yes; I do. I believe we should collect the war debt. I also want to say that I believe we should place an embargo on the gold so it cannot leave the United States. Then there will be no war because they will have no money to pay for a war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] for 3 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the only reason I have wanted time the last 2 or 3 days was for the purpose of asking specific questions with reference to the bill. If I can, I should like to get the answers to these questions from the acting chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOOM]. The questions are these:

Does this bill as it has been presented to the House permit the use of the Federal Reserve Banking System in the handling of credits which are created by aliens who come to this country and purchase goods from the manufacturers of this country and then proceed to ship the goods to foreign lands?

Mr. BLOOM. It does not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Chairman says it does not permit that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The foreigners have credits now in excess of $7,000,000,000 in the Federal Reserve banks of this country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If this bill does not permit what I have just inquired about I wish someone on the committee would explain to the House what it means where it says that the 90-day commercial-transaction paper can be used. I have been informed authoritatively by the Federal Reserve banking officials that it does permit the use of the Federal Reserve banking machinery for the purpose of financing these transactions.

I wish to ask the chairman another question. Does this bill permit citizens of the United States to ship these goods or does this bill prevent the citizens of the United States who manufacture the goods from shipping them, but at the same time permits aliens to come into this country and purchase these goods and make the shipments?

Mr. BLOOM. Whatever is purchased in this country, before it leaves any port in the United States, the title must be transferred. All title and interest must be transferred before they are permitted to go from any port in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was my understanding of the bill. So as I further understand the bill, an alien could come to my factory where I desire to employ people and produce goods and sell them, and through his power under this bill, he can come in and dictate my labor conditions, my labor relations, otherwise I get no business from that alien in connection with the shipment of these goods. It seems we are setting up a perfect control—

Mr. BLOOM. How does that statement apply to any part of this bill? I do not see where the gentleman gets that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, anyone who carefully reads the bill must come to the conclusion only aliens can take title to goods to be shipped. They can finance, build, and operate plants, dictate labor policies, blackmail, sweat down, and coerce the American owners and operators of American industry. American industry, to the extent it sells goods for export, must do so under the terms of the alien who places the order and puts up the cash and ships the goods. Such a proposal is impossible and we should reject it.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the pending amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not recall that we voted on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]. The gentleman did not withdraw it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IZAC: Page 2, after line 15, insert a new section, as follows:

"Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, to export or ship from, or take out of the United States, or attempt to export or ship from or take out of the United States, any goods, wares, merchandise, munitions, materials, or supplies of any kind or character which there is reason to believe will, if exported, be used, directly or indirectly, in violation of the sovereignty, or the independence, or the territorial or administrative integrity of any nation whose sovereignty, independence, and territorial and administrative integrity the United States is obligated by treaty to respect."

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point against the amendment, but if the gentleman wishes to proceed, I will reserve it.

Mr. IZAC. Yes; I will ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order, although I do not concede that a point of order lies against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] reserves a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. IZAC. My friends, there you have the other extreme. If you insist on the amendment that you have just passed placing an embargo on arms and munitions, why not be consistent and go the whole way? You remember that the whole western coast of France was lined with the automobiles of Ford and Dodge during the World War when we got into it. They did not need, as I said this afternoon, our 3-inch guns and 3-inch shells, but they did need our automobiles.

Now, you are providing under the amendment you have adopted, a prohibition against the export of the things they do not need. Why not go along with me and prohibit the export to those nations—those aggressor nations, if you please—that need the oil and the automobiles and the copper and the other implements of war that are to be manufactured into munitions of war when they get across the sea?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman is worthy of consideration, but I do not think it belongs in this joint resolution. I do not think it is germane to the resolution, and I believe if the gentleman from California now speaking and the gentleman from New Jersey and others who have spoken on the subject would ask the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, the committee would be pleased to take that up and have complete hearings on it. I think it would be ill-advised for us to consider the matter now when we have not had hearings upon it and do not know what the effect may be as concerned our relations with other countries.

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs—we have heard from the ranking member—I would like to ask the chairman if he will agree to consider this proposition in the form of a bill as soon as this neutrality thing is out of the way?

Mr. BLOOM. I will say that I have already stated to the committee that we would be very glad to take up the resolution at any time and consider it as soon as we get this legislation out of the way. I will make that promise.

Mr. IZAC. I do not want to take up the time of the Committee, but I think this is a question that should be gone into very thoroughly, because if you are going to be consistent about this thing you must embargo the very things that go into munitions. One aggressor nation today is importing from the United States at the rate of $200,000,000 a year and less than $1,000,000 is for munitions of war.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman realizes the necessity for consideration of this matter by the Committee rather than in this bill?

Mr. IZAC. I admit it would be probably better to go into this question thoroughly, and as long as the gentleman assures us that he will go into it, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELOSON. The gentleman realizes that all bonds held by foreign nations and commodity money held by foreign nations are payable in gold to those nations, and that the money will be used for buying war material in the United States?

Mr. IZAC. Our committee had before us the experts from the Treasury Department who stated that in their opinion, of the seven or eight billion dollars in securities, domestic securities held abroad, a very small percentage of that could be turned into liquid assets when a nation went to war and tried to cash them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac] is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRAVEL ON VESSELS OF FOREIGN STATES

SEC. 2. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to travel on any vessel of the state or states named in such proclamation, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "foreign" and insert the word "belligerent."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, there are other committee amendments to section 2 which are at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: On page 2, in line 18, strike out the words "it shall" and insert the word "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: On page 2, line 19, strike out the words "thereafter be unlawful for any" and the last word "to" and insert after the words "United States" the word "shall."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: On page 2, in line 20, after the word "travel", insert "except at his own risk."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: On page 2, in line 21, strike out the word "except" and insert the word "unless."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOLEY: On page 3, after section 2, insert the following new section:

"TRAVEL ON AMERICAN OR OTHER NEUTRAL VESSELS

"SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall be thereafter unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, for citizens of the United States to travel as passengers on any American or other neutral vessel carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any state or states named in such proclamation.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a) the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder, shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, the proper consideration of this bill requires that we should lift ourselves above the passions and prejudices of partisan politics. As Americans we should not permit blinding partialities or narrow prejudices to prevent our seeing and understanding the full import of that which we are about to do. We are at this moment engaged in important business. No business which has come before this Congress may so vitally affect the welfare, the happiness, and the ultimate destiny of our people as the business which now engages the attention of this House.

Upon the proper solution of the problem of neutrality may well depend the ultimate success, the survival, and the supremacy of the Government to which we are all devoted. The problem challenges our intelligence and the very finest virtues of our patriotism. It is a problem, however, which we may not be able to satisfactorily solve, but to be sure it is one which is worthy of our deep interest and our most careful consideration.

You know and I know that neither a policy nor a law nor a treaty will assure neutrality or guarantee peace. When war comes and we are faced with actualities, platitudes and pious pronouncements will not prevent bloodshed. Yet we should make every constructive and conscientious effort to aid the grand cause to which our attention is at the present time devoted.

I have heard this debate patiently; I have considered the questions involved diligently; I hope that it may be given to me to decide them wisely. I confess that I have been profoundly impressed with the very intelligent, sincere, logical, and persuasive arguments which have been made in behalf of the pending measure.

The argument against rigidity and in favor of flexibility in neutrality legislation has appealed to me very strongly. I am convinced that our laws should permit freedom of action in times of emergencies—freedom of action which will enable us to meet and to cope with complicated world situations as they may from time to time arise. I realize that there is a possibility that our Nation may at sometime in the future be embarrassed by rigid legislative enactment and that our Nation may, because of some ill-considered law, be prevented from making magnificent contributions to the cause of world peace.

I know that the American people love and want peace. I know that those whom I have the honor to represent hate war and love peace, and as a Member of Congress I am anxious to make some contribution, even if by just a vote, to the great cause. But is this bill in its present form a legislative contribution to the cause of peace? You know and I know that the best that we may say for it is that it is but a feeble effort. Yet as American statesmen, as Members of this law-making body, we should make every conscientious and constructive effort to aid the grand cause which is now receiving our attention. Therefore, if we are to pass another so-called neutrality bill we should do our dead level best to perfect it before passage. We should be careful not to do violence to the ancient ethics of civilization to which this Nation was dedicated long ago. We should guard against the possibility of aiding the strong in aggressive exploits of the weak.

Likewise we should never again offend or outrage our traditional policy of minding our own business and not interfering in the affairs of other nations. When in the practice of the arts of peace we permit ourselves to be led from the policy of noninterference we will soon find our fond hope of noninvolvement blown to pieces and our Nation again being led into a foreign conflict and on to a foreign field of carnage. Our foreign policy must be a dual policy of nonintervention as well as noninvolvement. In this bill both questions are involved. Even if we abandoned all neutrality legislation and returned for our protection to the ancient and traditional concepts of international law, still we would not have a guaranty of peace.

After all is said and done the consummation of our ardent hopes and desires for world peace will ultimately and finally depend, not upon professions in behalf of peace; invocations against the follies of war; nor upon some policy, law, or treaty, but upon the enlightened judgment of the American people. Public opinion is still king in America; it is today the most powerful force in the life of this great democracy. Unless the dynamic power of public opinion supports and approves what we do here today or hereafter our laws will be as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, signifying nothing. No law which we may enact can be regarded as an infallible Palladium of peace.

As laws cannot control public opinion, neither will laws repel the belligerent spirit, the reckless and rapacious tide of violence which is rushing on from one vortex to another in the unhappy world in which we live today. As we contemplate the future and speculate upon our place in the world of tomorrow we must realize that our real power lies not in the extent of our domain, nor the wealth of our resources but in the intelligent integrity and spiritual fortitude of our patriotic people. The character of our people is our best fortress, a fortress which will fall neither under the first nor the last assault. So any law which we may enact must appeal to and be approved by the fine sensibilities which are inherent in the lives of our people. The drama which is being enacted in the troubled and distracted world in which we live is a challenge to us to approach the performance of our duties and the solutions of the problems of our great Nation with a high degree of circumspection and caution.

Let there be no misunderstanding about the bill under consideration. It repeals outright the embargo on arms, armaments, ammunitions, and implements of war. It again legalizes that which today is regarded as a nefarious business, the trading and trafficking in instruments of destruction and death. The bill under consideration is not a "cash-and-carry bill." It is ostensibly, but not actually, even a "cash bill." It does not require the cash payment for but only the divesting of all right, title, and interest of American citizens in and to the cargo destined for ports of belligerent States. While it is not a "cash-and-carry bill" the feature which requires that all American citizens surrender all of their right, title, or interest in and to cargoes destined for ports of belligerent states, appeals to me as a very worth-while provision and I believe it will meet with the approval of the American people.

I am impressed with and believe that public opinion will support and sustain the provision of this bill which permits American citizens to travel on vessels of belligerent states only at their own risk, but I do not believe that either Congress should approve or that American public opinion will support or sustain legislation which makes possible the reenactment of the tragedy which wrung our heart when the Lusitania was sent to the bottom of the sea and its precious cargo to watery graves. On the other hand, public opinion will support and sustain us in all of our efforts to avoid incidents which are calculated to involve us in war.

Believing as I do that the American people will support and approve legislation that will tend to prevent such incidents, I offer an amendment a copy of which I have furnished to the committee. I understand that section 3 of the present bill is to be deleted and my amendment will be a substitute for the present section 3 and will read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall be thereafter unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, for citizens of the United States to travel as passengers on any American or other neutral vessel carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any state or states named in such proclamation.

(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

Without some such provision as proposed by my amendment this bill will permit arms, ammunitions, and implements of war to be carried not only in vessels of belligerent states, not only in our own general cargo vessels, not only in our merchant-marine ships which are engaged strictly in foreign commerce, but the bill will actually permit the shipment of cargoes of arms, ammunitions, and implements of war in the bottoms of American passenger ships. This is the feature of the bill to which I most strenuously object. There just is not any reason on earth why this great and wealthy nation should make itself a savage and a monster in its fight for world commerce by permitting the bottoms of American passenger ships to be filled with arms, ammunitions, and implements of war when we know that the upper decks will be freighted with a cargo of human lives—innocent men, women, and children who are near and dear to the hearts of other American citizens who are left at home. It is brutality of the rankest sort to permit innocent American citizens to sleep in a false sense of security above kegs of dynamite and other instruments of war and destruction as they sail in our passenger ships upon the high seas. We shall not permit our cupidity or greed to cause us to be willing to attempt to justify such conduct.

The amendment which I propose will make it unlawful for citizens of the United States to travel as passengers on any American or other neutral vessel carrying arms, ammunitions, or implements of war to any state or states named in the proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this bill.

I do not believe that the American people will become greatly alarmed over the destruction of a cargo of arms and ammunitions of war, certainly not when the title to the cargo must, under this bill, pass to governments or citizens of other countries before leaving our ports. Neither am I willing to believe that the American people will be greatly alarmed or willing to fight because an American ship loaded with a cargo of contraband war materials has been sent to the bottom of the sea. The loss of a cargo or of a boat is but a property loss. If an American ship engaged in foreign commerce with a belligerent state is sent to the bottom of the sea because it is carrying contraband materials it is, of course, reasonable to assume that some American sailors will lose their lives, but the loss will be one which is the result of a risk incident to their employment. They will at least be conscious of the fact that they are trafficking in instruments of destruction and sleeping in beds of death as they ride the waves across the sea. We may regret the loss of an American ship or sailor but we will abhor the destruction and the loss of a shipload of innocent American passengers.

I do believe that if we permit arms, ammunitions, and implements of war to be transported upon passenger boats American citizens will feel that they have been outraged, and in the event one of these passenger boats, laden with a cargo of contraband goods and likewise laden above the main deck with a human cargo of precious lives, is submarined and sent to the bottom of the sea the minds of our people will become inflamed and the incident is likely to lead us into conflicts with other nations.

It does not make any difference what part of our foreign commerce is carried on in the bottom of American passenger boats, certainly we can afford to use our passenger boats for passengers and cargoes other than cargoes of outlawed materials. If we want to fight for our foreign commerce at least we should be frank and fair with American citizens who desire to travel on our ships and we should not permit the mixing of human cargoes with other freight which has been outlawed.

While I am not so greatly concerned about the inconvenience or loss to American commerce on account of the amendment which I offer, I have obtained from the Department of Commerce information which some Members of the House may wish to consider. I am advised that on March 31, 1939, there were 160 general cargo vessels, a total capacity of 897,000 gross tons, engaged in foreign commerce, and that while some of these 160 ships do not carry any passengers at all, most of them carry a few passengers. I am advised that none of these 160 ships are authorized to carry more than 12 passengers. Certainly we could afford to forego the privilege of transporting 12 passengers on each of these ships.

I am advised that on March 31, 1939, there were 68 American vessels engaged in foreign trade which carry both passengers and cargoes. What my amendment proposes to do is to separate these 228 ships into two categories. The 68 ships would only be permitted to carry passengers and legal cargoes, while the bottoms of the other 160 ships would be free for commerce of all kinds.

Upon the adoption of my amendment the world would be on notice that our passenger ships were not engaged in the unholy business of transporting instruments of death. Unless my amendment is adopted, and if we go on and permit our citizens to ride on top of cargoes of destruction, it does not seem possible that we will be able to keep this Nation out of war. I therefore hope that the amendment may be seriously considered by the Members of this House, and that it may be adopted.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is the gentleman's amendment offered to section 2 or section 3?

Mr. COOLEY. The effect of the amendment is to insert a new section following section 2.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It is not directed to section 2?

Mr. COOLEY. It does not change section 2. Section 2 of the bill provides that American citizens traveling upon ships of belligerents do so at their own risk. What I want to provide is that it shall be unlawful for any American citizen to ride upon any American vessel that carries dynamite or other implements of war in its bottom.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Would not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, if adopted in the House, accomplish the same purpose?

Mr. COOLEY. But the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio may be eliminated from the bill. That does not excuse us on this occasion for failure to declare ourselves on the principle involved and to take away the right of American citizens to ride upon ships carrying implements of war, and thus prevent another tragic incident such as the Lusitania.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. As I understand the amendment the gentleman has offered, he would make it unlawful for a citizen of the United States to do that?

Mr. COOLEY. Exactly.

Mr. BLOOM. That is just the objection that was raised to the original section 2 of the pending bill when we tried to make it unlawful to do that very thing.

Mr. COOLEY. I do not know what pressure was brought to bear upon the gentleman to cause him to yield up the word "unlawful" and substitute the language that was put in this section. I think we must make it unlawful for an American to travel upon an American vessel carrying such contraband materials; otherwise they would not be traveling at their own risk but would be traveling at the risk of the Federal Government with the Army and the Navy to protect them.

Mr. BLOOM. A certain number of Members thought it was rather harsh and severe to make it a crime or make it unlawful for a person to travel on any of these ships. The idea of changing it to traveling at their own risk was to do away with making it a crime for them to travel on these ships. That is the whole thought.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. For a brief question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that the Lusitania was loaded down with armaments of war and if it had been unlawful for people to have traveled on the Lusitania under those circumstances it might have presented our entrance into the World War?

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. As I read section 9, it forbids any American vessel to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, or ammunition or implements of war.

Mr. COOLEY. The reason I am offering this amendment is because, as I understand it, the committee will ask that section 9 be deleted from the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. They are going to attempt that.

Mr. BLOOM. Section 9 is not in the bill. That will be offered as an amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Section 9 will not be in there?

Mr. BLOOM. Section 9 is not in the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Do I understand from the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that he would be willing to accept an amendment if the language was changed from "unlawful" to read that a passenger would be permitted to travel at his own risk?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not think there would be any objection to that.

Mr. COOLEY. Why should there be any objection to making it unlawful? Does not the gentleman think it would be one of the greatest crimes on this earth to again permit American citizens—men, women, and children—to be upon the upper decks of a boat, having no knowledge of what the boat may be loaded with, and permitting those men, women, and children to go out on the high seas and to be blown to pieces in their beds through a false sense of security?

Mr. BLOOM. The committee has been all through that. I do not object to it, but the idea is that a great many members of the committee thought it was rather harsh and severe to make it a crime for a person to travel, if he had to travel, on these ships. We changed it. The committee decided to amend it and we did so just now by having it provide that they travel at their own risk.

Mr. COOLEY. You do not have one word in this resolution, and you know it, you do not have one syllable in this resolution that will protect the lives of American citizens traveling on American vessels or vessels of other neutrals; but you have a provision in there with reference to their traveling upon vessels of belligerent states. I think it would be one of the greatest crimes of this century to again permit that which happened on the night that the Lusitania was sunk.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no pride of authorship in this. I am sincere in my desire to see a provision written into this bill which might prevent an incident calculated to lead this Nation into war. Secretary Hull said in this report filed with the committee:

Our involvement in controversies is more likely to arise from destruction of American lives.

We can do all the committee wants to do; we can turn over 160 merchant-marine boats to ship all the arms they want to ship; but I say these 68 passenger boats should carry nothing but passengers and legal cargo.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Would it not be the better plan to make the vessels responsible and prevent their accepting passengers?

Mr. COOLEY. If so, that could be done in conference.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment is limited only to American ships?

Mr. COOLEY. No; the American ships or ships of other neutral nations.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wanted to make that clear.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Does the gentleman have any provision in there to also protect our seamen?

Mr. COOLEY. No. I had that thought in mind, but I felt if we should lose a ship or if a sailor loses his life, he does so as the result of risk which is incident to his employment. He goes to bed at night knowing that the boat is loaded with dynamite and munitions of war; but what right have we to let them decorate the upper decks of these ships with men, women, and children when below they are carrying ammunition and implements of war?

Mr. GEYER of California. The seaman is there because he must go. The passenger is usually going on pleasure. I am wondering if we could not word this to protect the seaman.

Mr. COOLEY. I certainly hope the Committee will vote for this amendment.

Mr. GEYER of California. I am for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. I do not see how there can be any objection. All the members of the Committee have had an opportunity to consider it, and they should not vote against it because they do not like the word "unlawful." I hope when the vote is taken the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take the floor during the discussion of this bill because the able members of this Committee on both sides have given us a very fine debate. I was deeply grieved and utterly amazed, however, when this Committee a while ago adopted the so-called Vorys amendment. I cannot believe that on second thought and on a separate vote the House of Representatives will concur in that amendment.

The immediate reason for my rising is to speak on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. The gentleman's amendment would penalize an innocent American citizen for stepping upon an American ship carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war, although he may not have known what the ship was carrying.

It seems to me, with all respect to the very able gentleman from North Carolina—and I mean what I say when I say he is able—that he does not realize the import of the amendment he asks this Committee to adopt this evening, in that it would have the effect of making it unlawful for me or for you or for any other American citizen to step upon a vessel carrying war materials, when we would not know whether it carried war materials or not. Frankly, I do not believe, even though the Committee went so far on the Vorys amendment, that it will go so far as to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the Chairman of the Committee and to provide in my amendment that American citizens shall travel on these boats at their own risk.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOLEY) there were—ayes 32, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

AREAS OF COMBAT OPERATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), and he shall thereafter find that the protection of citizens of the United States so requires, he shall issue a proclamation, whereupon it shall be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe, for citizens of the United States or vessels flying the flag of the United States to proceed through any areas defined from time to time by the President to be areas of combat operations and so specified in his proclamation.

(b) The President may from time to time modify or extend his proclamation, and when the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist he shall revoke the same and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 11, strike out the words "and exceptions" and insert "not inconsistent with the purposes of this joint resolution."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: Beginning on page 3, line 5, strike out all of section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS AND TRANSFER OF TITLE

SEC. 4 (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any state named in such proclamation, or of any political subdivision of any such state, or of any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government, political subdivision, or person: Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interests of the United States or its citizens, he may, in his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulations as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transaction.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to a renewal or adjustment of such indebtedness as may exist on the date of the President's proclamation.

(d) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States directly or indirectly to any state named in the proclamation, any articles or materials until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. The shipper of such articles or materials shall be required to file with the collector of the port from which they are to be exported a declaration under oath that there exists in citizens of the United States no right, title, or interest in such articles or materials, and to comply with such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated from time to time by the President. Any such declaration so filed shall be a conclusive estoppel against any claim of any citizen of the United States of right, title, or interest in such articles or materials. Insurance written by underwriters on such articles or materials shall not be deemed an American interest therein, and no insurance policy issued on such articles or materials, and no loss incurred thereunder, shall be made the basis of any claim put forward by the Government of the United States. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to trade on or over lands, lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States.

(e) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 15, after the word "transaction", insert a semicolon and the following: "the President shall make public every 90 days any and all exceptions granted under this proviso, together with the amounts of credits involved."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: Page 4, line 12, after the word "section", insert "for a period of not more than 90 days without renewals."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: On page 4, line 8, after the word "person", strike out the semicolon and the balance of section 4 (a) and insert a period.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this proviso is what I would call the "Uncle Shylock" proviso of this bill—the "Uncle Shylock" proviso because just preceding this the bill states:

Or of any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government, political subdivision, or person.

In other words, we are not going to make them any loans unless it is to the benefit of the commercial interests of the United States. If you think that is a fair provision and a proper one, one that can be looked upon with any spirit of equanimity by the people of the United States or any other nation of the world, I will be glad to eat my words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: On page 6, line 11, insert a new section as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any American or neutral vessel to accept passengers which carries arms and ammunitions."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I trust that in spite of the confusion on the floor that Members have heard the proposed new section offered by me and now pending for consideration. The amendment is short, plain, and speaks for itself. It simply states that it shall be unlawful for any vessel, whether neutral or American, to accept passengers when that vessel is loaded with ammunition or armaments of war. As was pointed out here just a few moments ago, it is well known that the Lusitania was loaded down with armaments of war when it was torpedoed. Even before the Lusitania sailed, the State Department had information that it carried armaments and munitions. Not only had the State Department this information, but it had also been advised that there was every probability that the vessel would be torpedoed; yet passengers were permitted to be loaded on that death trap and taken to a watery grave. I speak deliberately and weigh my words when I say to you that had Congress passed the simple amendment I have here offered, and same had become the law at that time, it might have prevented the most cruel and devastating war the world has ever witnessed. Certainly there can be no harm done by accepting this amendment.

This amendment does not propose to place the burden upon the passenger, who might unsuspectingly board a vessel loaded with arms, as did the amendment that was offered just a few moments ago by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], but it does put the burden upon the shipowner, where it rightfully belongs. [Applause.] Should this plain, simple amendment be enacted, there will be no question as to its exact meaning. It will not take an international lawyer to interpret what it means. Its practical effect would undoubtedly be that American or neutral vessels would not accept munitions of war if they actually carried passengers, nor would passengers be permitted to ride on ships carrying armaments and munitions. I submit that it is a fair, sane, and reasonable amendment and if adopted might prevent another world conflict. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma) there were—ayes 62, noes 116. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: Page 6, line 2, after the period, strike out the balance of line 2 and all of lines 3 and 4.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], I would like to inquire if he heard the amendment read.

Mr. BLOOM. I am very sorry, but I did not hear the amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. The amendment seeks to strike out the last sentence in paragraph (d) of this section in lines 2, 3, and 4, of page 6.

Mr. BLOOM. The language is, "The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to trade on or over lands, lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States."

Mr. HINSHAW. That is correct and I have offered this amendment striking out that language and I want to ask a question. I can hardly believe it possible that I may be right in reading this language. On page 5, in the beginning of section (d), it says:

It shall thereafter be unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States, etc., any articles or materials until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government—

And so forth. However, on page 6 it is stated that this subsection "shall not apply to trade on or over lands, lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States."

As I read that, it would mean that the provisions of the subsection would not apply if anyone wanted to export to foreign countries by way of, say, Mexico or Canada. Is that correct?

Mr. BLOOM. No; just going into those neighboring or bordering countries, and that is as far as it goes.

Mr. HINSHAW. But it has the words there "on or over lands, lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States."

Mr. BLOOM. That would mean going into Mexico or Canada or any bordering States on any inland waterway.

Mr. HINSHAW. But it could be exported from there.

Mr. BLOOM. That would be impossible. How could we export from there?

Mr. HINSHAW. Suppose that Great Britain goes into war with some other nation; Canada being a part of Great Britain, under such circumstances the first part of section (d) does not apply.

Mr. BLOOM. We have no interest in it after it leaves this country and goes into a bordering country. How could we really export from those countries? We are through with it as soon as it leaves here.

Mr. HINSHAW. Why should it be any more unlawful to ship by sea than to ship through Canada? In fact, as I see it, we could ship from Chicago or Buffalo via the St. Lawrence and the provisions of this subsection would not apply.

Mr. BLOOM. That is just a matter of different ideas.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment in view of the fact that the Committee does not seem disposed to consider amendments at this late hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: On page 3, beginning in line 23, strike out all of section 4.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment in order to get an opportunity to make some inquiries with reference to the bill.

As I understand this bill, referring particularly to the amendment just offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], I wish to ask the Chairman of the Committee if a manufacturer producing goods in Rockford, Ill., can place his goods on a ship going down the Mississippi River and land those goods at New Orleans and not be guilty of attempting to transport or export goods under the operation of this bill?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not believe there is any doubt about that. Does the gentleman think there would be?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. I am trying to get some specific information for manufacturers. In other words, the manufacturers of this country will probably have to operate under this bill within a short time, if the Congress enacts it into law. We have had a great deal of discussion here, but very little dealing with the specific, technical details of the bill. That is what our manufacturers will be interested in knowing about, without having to go to an attorney and pay three or four thousand dollars in attorneys' fees to have the matter explained to them. As I understand the chairman, a manufacturer will not be operating in violation of the provisions of this bill if he uses these inland waterways as a part of the transportation system in moving these goods to foreign shores.

Mr. BLOOM. To foreign shores?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, I cannot understand just what the gentleman is inquiring about.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Our manufacturers will use the inland waterways for the purpose of shipping goods. Suppose I am a manufacturer at Rockford, Ill., and I solicit orders from someone in Europe under the operation of this law, and I succeed in getting the business and the European agent comes to my place in Rockford and purchases the goods f. o. b. shipside New York City or New Orleans, for instance, and I put those goods on the inland waterways and ship them by water to shipside, will I be violating the provisions of this act?

Mr. BLOOM. No. You would not be violating the provisions of this act as long as you comply with all the rules and regulations—

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is not my question. I am asking a specific question.

Mr. BLOOM. If you will permit me to answer it, the title to all these goods is transferred to some other than a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But suppose the transfer does not occur until the goods reach shipside at New Orleans, for instance?

Mr. BLOOM. Well, it could not leave any port of the United States until it is transferred. Now, if your agreement with this buyer is that the goods shall be transferred at the port of New Orleans or New York or some other place, that is the agreement that you make with them, and they cannot go on until the title is transferred; so that up to that time you have possession of the goods.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, that answers the question. The language of the bill says that no one shall attempt to export or transport or cause to be exported or transported. Will my soliciting this business cause me to become involved in the clutches of the law in an attempt to export or transport or cause to export or transport?

Mr. BLOOM. I am not a lawyer, but until your contract is finally terminated, until you have lived up to your end and the purchaser lives up to his end, you have not attempted to do anything. It says these goods shall be transferred before leaving any port within the United States to be exported to a foreign country. Now, you have a right to wait until that time. You cannot do anything else until they do get to the port. There is no question about that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask this question: Does this bill not place the American manufacturer in a position where he must necessarily do business through a national of some other country, or say an alien agent? Is that not the situation the American manufacturer finds himself in?

Mr. BLOOM. No; not at all. He could do business with anyone he sees fit to do business with, but when the goods are ready to be sent away from any port in the United States, then the transfer of title must operate then and there. It is the transfer of title. That is the only thing that is necessary here. It must be transferred. No right, title, or interest shall be in the name of any citizen of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What kind of payment will constitute the transfer of title?

Mr. BLOOM. That is up to you.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is up to the manufacturer?

Mr. BLOOM. That is up to the manufacturer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, he can accept a 6 months' note or a year's note or a 90-day note?

Mr. BLOOM. You cannot go beyond the 90 days. There are no notes to be extended beyond that time, but the idea is this: When you say "transfer of title," whether you pay all for it or what you pay, the United States Government cannot follow in, but we must be assured or the gentleman must be assured that no citizen of the United States has any right, title, or interest in those goods, and the title to those goods is transferred to some foreign corporation, individual, or whatever it may be.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And this foreign corporation can discount its paper and make it eligible for commercial rediscount under our Federal Reserve System, if the banks desire to do business with them?

Mr. BLOOM. This is done in accordance with the rules and regulations. As the gentleman knows, these things are transferred on 60 or 90 days' credit. Sixty or ninety days' credit is given until the goods get to a certain point. That is what this calls for, a commercial credit, no renewals of any kind, and only for 90 days; that is all.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact, however, that a self-serving declaration by the shipper that there is no right or title in any American citizen will serve to give that shipment clearance and also, under the terms of this bill operate as an estoppel against the assertion of such claim by any possible seller.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that is the case whether the goods are paid for or not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Whether the goods are paid for or not, and that is unconstitutional.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. THORKELOSON. It is possible that American bonds and credit may be used to buy these goods.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand so.

Mr. Chairman, although I feel that this bill as it has been presented to the House will eventually be voted down, directly or indirectly, I think that as a matter of record we should speak very frankly about its provisions. As I understand the measure, exactly as it has been submitted by the committee it will extend to the President powers never before delegated or assumed by any one man in all modern history. I believe the bill would extend to the President what might be termed "supernatural powers"; that it would rob Congress of many of its present powers constitutionally granted, such as to declare war, because it virtually or actually does give to the President the power to issue proclamations carrying the force and effect of declarations of war—that a state of war exists between nations other than our own—and the bill would rob the people of this country of their protection through constitutional power given to Congress to do the war declaring.

It is reasonable to assume this bill would abrogate treaties and take away from the Senate its power to make and enforce them. The discretionary powers granted by this bill to the President would virtually destroy the powers of States, Governors, legislatures, and the personal rights of the people. It would subject industry in this country to a licensing system in order to sell goods to our own Government; it would force our industries to open their books to the prying eyes of political appointees; it denies to our people the right to appeal to and be heard by our courts and this because the courts would be without jurisdiction over the appointees of the President. The President could select "areas of combat"; throw the force of our financial strength and the value of our source of material to selected world powers favored by him, and these powers can be exercised without the slightest check on the part of the people of this country. Such powers I shall not support being given to our President. I feel sure the House will not adopt the bill as it has been submitted to us.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: On page 6, line 4, insert a new subsection, as follows:

"(e) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under authority of section 1 (a), and he shall also find that in order to preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and thereafter except, under such limitations and exceptions, as he may prescribe it shall be unlawful thereafter for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent states for the use of any belligerent state."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, not as a committee amendment but on my own individual responsibility, and it is done only because of the fact that since section 3 has been eliminated there is no provision in the bill regulating American vessels in the carriage of goods. It strikes me that there ought to be something in the bill by which, under certain circumstances, limitations could be placed upon American vessels in shipping goods if the danger should become so great that it might hazard the peace of the United States or hazard the lives of our citizens.

The language of this amendment is identical with that carried in old section 2, which expired April 30, giving this authority to the President under certain conditions. This is all I care to say.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Has the gentleman looked into the embargoes that have been placed on our commerce, has he studied their effect?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This would not be an embargo or become effective, rather, unless conditions grew so grave that the President thought it was necessary to invoke some restriction upon our vessels in carrying goods. It would not be invoked automatically. It could be invoked only if necessity arose that might require it.

Mr. KELLER. It gives additional power to the President.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The power has got to be lodged somewhere, and that is the proper place to put it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman say that this is the precise language of section 2 of the act that was in effect up until April 30.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. As well as I could write it. I wrote it very hurriedly. I intended to copy that provision word for word.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to the effect that these ships should go at their own risk?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think that is not necessary. I think that has already been done. This simply restricts the shipment of goods for the use of our ships if certain conditions should arise to require it. I do not think we need to add the words "at their own risk."

Mr. FISH. I do not quite understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This has nothing to do with reference to risk. This would give the President the authority to prohibit their carrying goods if the conditions were such that to do so would endanger our peace. It is not with reference to their own risk but with reference to their right to carry goods to belligerent nations.

Mr. FISH. I think we want to make haste a little slowly on this amendment. It seems to me this is a very far-reaching amendment and perhaps gives tremendous discretionary power to the President actually to control all our commerce and pick out aggressor nations and say we will not ship our goods to those nations.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. In the gentleman's opinion does this amendment prevent American vessels from carrying arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerents? Does the gentleman think it would have that effect? If the Vorys amendment stays in the bill that would never become a question. This gives the President authority to prohibit a shipment of goods to belligerents in our ships. But if the Vorys amendment goes out the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be that our American vessels would be prohibited from carrying arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerents?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman's amendment confer a wider power upon the President than was conferred in section 3, which has just been eliminated?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I do not think so. Section 3 that was eliminated did not restrict itself to ships only, but it also restricted American citizens traveling upon our own ships or on the ships of other countries. That section authorized the President to select the zones within which our ships could be prohibited from going or our citizens, either upon our own ships or upon the ships of others. This is to give the President authority, if conditions grow so grave, to prevent our ships from carrying goods to belligerent nations, not to other nations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is this not the comparative result: Under section 3 the President was authorized to delimit the zone of combat operations. He had to mark them out on the map of the world, and, having done so, he forbade any American ship or citizen going into that zone.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have taken that out of the bill. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, it is this: The President can declare in effect all of the seas, the whole world, and say that no American ship shall take the seas, if he regards it as dangerous.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman I think is mistaken. The President has the authority to restrict our ships from carrying goods to belligerent nations and only if it becomes necessary so to do. I may add, I have offered this amendment because the elimination of section 3 from the bill leaves no restriction then upon American vessels, and I think that is an important feature. It might become serious and cause our involvement in a war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me that covers a worldwide area.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It is only for our ships.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would the gentleman permit the amendment to be read again?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read again by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment again.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Johnson amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON].

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is thrown in here at a late hour. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is right. This amendment gives the President actually more power than section 3, which was stricken out. Everybody seems to be agreed—the whole committee is agreed—that section 3 should be stricken out, because it gave the President the power to establish combat zones or areas wherever he desired. He could surround Italy with a combat area and say our ships could not go to Italy but could go unimpeded to Great Britain. It gave the President the power to determine the aggressor nation, and the arguments against section 3 were so strong after the committee reported it out it unanimously took that provision out of the bill.

Now, the gentleman from Texas proposes that we give the President the power to control all of the seas and say that American ships cannot go to any nation, if he says so. If my interpretation is correct, then it is the old aggressor-nation power over again. It is the power to determine the aggressor nation. If I am right, then it is a delegation of the war powers of the Congress, because there is not much difference between the aggressor-nation power and the constitutional right of Congress to declare war. It would simply mean we were delegating those war powers to the President to determine the aggressor nation, or to establish a Jeffersonian embargo on American ships.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman's fears are not well founded. There is nothing in the resolution that authorizes the President to discriminate against one nation or the other. They are all treated alike. It simply means that when the war situation gets so grave that it may imperil the lives of our citizens or our peace, or cause our involvement, the President can restrict the shipment by American ships to all belligerents of all commodities that might get us into trouble.

Mr. FISH. It gives the President the full power to determine what nation shall get these goods.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman is wrong. It includes all belligerents. There is no discrimination. He makes the selection against all nations.

Mr. FISH. The amendment reads: "Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under authority of section 1, he shall also find that in order to preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States he shall so proclaim and thereafter, except under such limitations and exceptions as he may prescribe for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent states for the use of any belligerent state.

Mr. BREWSTER. In other words, the President will prescribe such exceptions and limitations. He could put in any exceptions or limitations there that he himself might determine were desirable.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The exceptions refer to the goods that might be shipped. It does not refer to the countries. It might be all right to carry some commodities and not others. You have some discretion. I think the gentleman is entirely wrong when he fears there is anything in there that he can apply against one or the other.

Mr. BREWSTER. There is nothing that says he cannot.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This resolution is based upon treatment of all countries alike.

Mr. BREWSTER. Where does it say that?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It does not apply to one. It applies to all alike.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have not spoken on this bill as yet but I am very much concerned about this amendment. As far as my personal views are concerned I believe along the same lines as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I do not know what this amendment will accomplish. I do not know if it is a committee amendment. I see one of the Members nodding his head "no," but I would like to have official confirmation as to whether or not it is a committee amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. It is not a committee amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. This amendment is very far reaching. I do not believe we ought to delegate extraordinary powers in peacetime.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I stated when I began my remarks that it was not a committee amendment, that I had not conferred with other members of the committee, and that I only am responsible for it, and no one else.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thoroughly respect the gentleman's views and his opinions, but I believe the amendment is very far reaching. The implications of this amendment are unlimited. I do not want to vest that power in any President in the absence of emergency conditions which require it. I have profound respect for the present occupant of the White House. I respect every occupant of the White House whether he is elected as a Democrat or a Republican or if, in the future, he may be elected as the candidate of any other political party. I respect the office as well as the occupant, but I also respect my duty and my obligations as a Member of the Congress of the United States.

This amendment appears to be hastily drawn. Its contents may have been carefully considered by the drafter, but it appears to have been hastily drawn. We have just stricken out of the bill the "combat-area" provision, and that was a wise action. To put this provision in a bill would, in my opinion, be very unwise. Let us proceed, no matter what our views are, with a rational mind, and with caution. Whether or not one is for the lifting of the embargo, let our differences of opinion be impersonal. Let us respect each other. But let us not, because of any reason, put into this bill something the implications of which we do not know. This amendment, as I see it, is exceedingly far reaching, and I am constrained to vote against it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman says we do not know what the implications of the amendment are, and that it was hastily drawn. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the language is identical with section 2 of the act which expired on May 1, and which was passed by both Houses in 1937. This is not a new amendment and it was not hastily drawn.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the Congress of the United States placed a limitation on it when it was originally adopted the Congress must have intended that it expire on the date that it did expire. This may be the best amendment in the world for all I know, but I do know that I know nothing about it now, and I know that my colleagues know nothing about it, at least those with whom I have talked. Certainly, under such conditions it would be irrational and unwise to adopt such an amendment. Without attacking the amendment on its merits, I contend that under such circumstances caution should compel and prompt us in the exercise of a wise judgment to defeat the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL: On page 4, line 13, after the word "obligations", strike out the remainder of line 13 and all of lines 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 and insert "when and only when security in excess of the amount of the commercial credit or short-term obligation shall be deposited in this country and pledged to secure said commercial credit or short-term loan."

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed purely to protect against the unfortunate circumstance of creating credit abroad which we cannot collect. The fact that this amendment is important is borne out by the first part of section 4, in which the committee has provided that no one can make any loans to any foreign country. If anyone makes a short-term loan to another person it is perfectly obvious, and it is perfectly well known to all of us, that that short-term loan can become a long-term loan if the person who has borrowed the money does not pay it, unless there is some security available out of which the short-term loan can be collected.

It is my object in this amendment to provide that any time a short-term loan is made it can be collected, because the amendment requires that the security be deposited in this country. This is not an unusual provision. Anyone who starts to carry on a business and wants to make a loan at a bank is frequently required to put up collateral against which he can have a running balance. Any country that wants to borrow from the United States on commercial credit or on short-term loans can do the same thing in this country. They can put over here goods which they produce or they can put over here securities which their citizens own. This is just a precaution to keep this country out of trouble.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it would prevent the use of international banking machinery, operating through arrangements or credits in foreign lands and then coming on through on this side, by providing that the borrowers must deposit the security in this country before the transaction is completed.

Mr. KUNKEL. It provides against the situation the gentleman mentions and also provides against it with respect to an individual, a banking institution, or anybody. It will cut it off at the start, and it will prevent any pecuniary interest in war being created in this country. I believe this is one of the most important amendments that can be put into this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In that case, who would be the judge of the sufficiency of the security?

Mr. KUNKEL. Undoubtedly the President of the United States.

I wish to call the attention of the Committee at this point to the fact that this amendment does not curtail any power. It merely makes it easier and more reasonable for the President to exercise the power that is conferred on him by the section. It does not try to curtail by a single iota any power that is granted, but makes it easier for the President to exercise that power in a reasonable way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KUNKEL) there were—ayes 87, noes 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 4, beginning in line 8, after the word "person", strike out the proviso, the remainder of the paragraph, down through line 18, on page 4.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the importance of this amendment.

Section 4 reads as follows:

Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any state named in such proclamation, or of any political subdivision of any such state, or of any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government, political subdivision, or person.

This provision obviously is to prevent the very thing that dragged this country into the other World War, by credit extended to foreign nations by the Wall Street and international bankers.

Now, here is the portion of this section that I am asking to be stricken from the bill. I wish to strike the following language:

Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interests of the United States or its citizens, he may, in his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulations as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transaction; the President shall make public every 90 days any and all exceptions granted under this proviso, together with the amounts of credits involved.

Mr. Chairman, this provision written in this bill would give the President of the United States the authority to set aside the rule laid down in the beginning of the paragraph to the effect that neither this Nation nor any of its citizens nor any institution in the United States can extend credit to any foreign nation engaged in war.

My amendment is for the purpose of denying the President the right to exercise such discretion. Right here I want to say I have every respect and faith in our great President, but no man should be given this power. I think the exercise of that very discretion might lead us into complications, such as we were led into when we entered the World War.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman, my colleague from Montana.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Is it not a fact that if one nation has credit in the United States and the United States holds bonds, if payment of such bonds is denied, it will lead to war?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to say as a rule that is true. Also, just exactly as the gentleman said a while ago in reference to his amendment. These short-term loans become long-term loans when not paid. We made short-term loans to other nations during the World War and they have become such long-term loans that they have never been paid and never will be paid.

Mr. THORKELOSON. As a matter of fact, these short-term loans become permanent loans?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, my good and esteemed friend.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also true that the financial section of this bill is really what they are after?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why, of course.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They do not care about the rest of it if they can get this part of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Anybody, of course, can read this and see that the President of the United States has been given power that might get us into another war, and when I say this I am speaking of the President in the abstract.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. And is not the intent of the gentleman's proposed amendment along the lines of the Johnson Act?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly; and this provision in the bill would repeal that part of the Johnson Act.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my good friend.

Mr. KNUTSON. And this bill is strictly in the interest of the international bankers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To a certain extent.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my fine friend.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And under this bill we are giving the President all this authority in the interest of the international bankers and we are giving this authority to a President who is an ex-international banker and whose family was recently joined in holy bonds of matrimony with the house of Du Pont.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, I will not agree to that.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my dear colleague from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I just want to warn my good friend and colleague, whom I love and admire, that the Republicans are trying to make a yes-man out of him, and I want to protect him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I am not afraid of the Republicans making a yes-man out of me, and the Democratic side cannot make a yes-man out of me, either.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to our beloved majority leader, whom we all love and admire.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman said a moment ago that they were giving power here that the President of the United States could use to get us into war. Does the gentleman have any idea that the present President of the United States wants to get us into war?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; a thousand times no; but no one man should be given that power. That must be left to Congress. But here is the point—you extend credit to those nations over there, and powerful influences will be used to see that the flag will follow the credit extended as it has heretofore, and I propose not to permit that if I can stop it. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I modify my request to make it 10 minutes, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman understand this bill to the effect that the Federal Reserve banks can issue Federal Reserve notes or currency against the paper that is held by aliens, turn it into the banks for the purchase of this material?

Mr. HINSHAW. I presume if the notes are discounted at the Federal Reserve bank, they would become the basis for the issuance of Federal Reserve notes.

I am going to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] who preceded me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, this section is identically the same as the present law with reference to the credit section, except that it has been modified by two amendments. One of the amendments is the last part of section A, which is in italics, "the President shall make public every 90 days any and all exceptions granted under this proviso, together with the amounts of credits involved."

That is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON]. The other amendment is on line 12, which has been offered by the committee, after the word "section," "for a period of not more than 90 days, without renewals."

This does not give the President more power than he has had heretofore, but gives him less power. This section is not new. It has been the law all the time and it is based on the so-called Johnson Act with reference to the acquiring of credits by countries in default to this country. As the House well knows, the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was the author of a resolution passed some years ago, by which loans are prohibited or the sale of bonds is prohibited in this country by any government that is in default to the United States. We thought it was wise to apply that same language with reference to belligerent nations so as to prohibit the accumulation of further war debts in this country. So this section is simply in conformity with the Johnson Act, and the exceptions are based upon the same language of the Johnson Act.

There is no reason for alarm with reference to it. The gentleman's amendment ought to be voted down. Otherwise it will destroy the language with reference to that section.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that if we adopt this language, the President has the right to declare, in his discretion, that it is for the interest of the people at large to permit credit to be extended to foreign belligerent nations?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No. The gentleman is entirely wrong. His fears are based upon a misapprehension of the facts. It does not enlarge the credits. It does not permit the credits to be enlarged.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will not the gentleman admit that if a short-term loan is not paid it becomes a long-term loan and sometimes a permanent loan?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Well, it is not intended to be that. This is the same language as contained in the Johnson Act. It has never been abused.

I think the amendment should be voted down.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHAFER of Michigan) there were ayes 7 and noes 82.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: On page 6, after line 11, insert a new section as follows:

"Sec. 5. During the existence of any proclamation issued by the President under the provisions of section 1 of this act no American vessel carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall carry any American citizen."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I did not catch the reading of the amendment in its entirety, but from what I heard of it I think it is similar to an amendment that has already been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be true, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, it is different from other amendments. My amendment is limited to American citizens.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order against the amendment.

The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this is another method of approach to the problem which was brought to the attention of this Committee first by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], and later by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

This amendment makes it unlawful—I will read it so you may know just what it provides:

During the existence of any proclamation issued by the President under the provisions of section 1 of this act no American vessel carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall carry any American citizen.

This is different from the Johnson amendment, in that the Johnson amendment referred to both American vessels and neutral vessels, and referred to passengers generally, whereas this amendment is limited to American vessels carrying arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and they are prohibited from carrying any American citizen as a passenger. My amendment is different from the Cooley amendment in that the Cooley amendment made it unlawful for ships carrying implements of war to carry passengers or for passenger vessels to carry implements of war.

I cannot see how we can justify any American vessel carrying implements of war and at the same time carrying passengers. It is one of the things that would cause us more trouble than anything else. It is bad enough in time of peace to allow passengers to travel on ships carrying explosives and implements of war, but it is infinitely more dangerous to allow such practice in times of trouble, of wars and threats of war.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. TINKHAM. Has the honorable Representative from Florida read section 9 which we are now approaching? I read it:

SEC. 9. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state, named in such proclamation, to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war, except small arms and ammunition thereof which the President may deem necessary and shall publicly designate for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels.

Will not the adoption of section 9 entirely meet the objectives aimed at by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I think not. I think the primary purpose of section 9 is to prevent the arming of American merchant vessels; and I think that is carried out by the statement in the title of the section itself.

The purpose of my amendment is to prevent an American ship carrying arms or ammunition from carrying American passengers. As I stated before, it is bad enough to allow passengers to travel on ships carrying cargoes of dangerous weapons and explosives. Certainly we should prohibit in time of war a vessel from carrying American citizens into a war zone. This does not take any right away from the passenger, but it puts a positive obligation on the ship. It applies to American vessels and American citizens and does not get into the question of neutrals.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman's amendment applies only in the event a proclamation is issued, and that, of course, indicates certain belligerent states.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The gentleman is correct, only in the event a proclamation is issued under section 1 naming a belligerent state.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman believes that no American citizen should be permitted to ride on a ship carrying those deadly weapons in wartime.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Certainly not.

Mr. COOLEY. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Does not the gentleman believe that cotton ought to be named in this bill as a lethal weapon?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. My amendment does not deal with the classification of arms, ammunition, munitions, or implements of war, and I would rather not get into the discussion of that controversial matter.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida; but inasmuch as it differs from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma and the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, I withdraw my point of order. Since the question has already been debated, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETERSON of Florida) there were—ayes 47, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOLEY: Page 6, line 11, add a new section as follows: "That whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under authority of section 1 (a) it shall be the duty of the Federal Government to ascertain whether any American vessel about to leave any American port is carrying arms or ammunitions of war, and in the event it is, then it shall be the duty of the President to cause to be advised of the fact any citizen of the United States seeking to secure passage thereon, and to prohibit any citizen of the United States from traveling as a passenger upon said vessel."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs if his committee will accept this amendment?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not think we can accept the amendment. All these amendments have been voted down once. To do what the gentleman is seeking by his amendment would involve the employment of thousands of people in this one piece of work.

Mr. COOLEY. All I am asking by this amendment is to have American citizens who are about to go upon a boat for passage across the sea advised as to the cargo below the main deck of the boat.

Mr. BLOOM. But the gentleman makes it incumbent upon the Federal Government to do certain things.

Mr. COOLEY. I make it incumbent upon the Federal Government to ascertain whether or not the ship is carrying war material. If it is, then it is the duty of the President to issue an order prohibiting any passenger from traveling upon that boat.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As the bill stands at present, there are not going to be any ships going to belligerent countries carrying arms and ammunition.

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman's amendment is retained in the bill, that is true, but in the event that amendment goes out we are right back where we started. I feel it would be a crime to permit innocent people to walk aboard a ship not knowing that they are sleeping over deadly weapons and I ask that the Federal Government, that must certainly know the nature of the cargo with which the ship is loaded, advise the passenger of the nature of the cargo so that he might forego the privilege of riding on the ship.

I do not think we are asking too much in requesting this. I think the membership of the House understands the purpose of the amendment and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. DARDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. The bill carries no inhibitions against shipments to South American republics. Suppose a war should break out in Europe and a boat was leaving for South America. What would the gentleman do with that boat?

Mr. COOLEY. This amendment is applicable to American ships about to leave American ports.

Mr. DARDEN. Suppose they are going to South America.

Mr. COOLEY. If they are carrying ammunition and implements of war, then the citizens should be advised as to the nature of the cargo so that they might forego passage on the ship.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman I feel this is one of the most important amendments that has been offered this evening. It is similar to an amendment I offered a few minutes ago, except it is a little better.

Mr. COOLEY. I thank the gentleman for the contribution.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I wish to inform the gentleman that I will accept his amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it not a fact those ships carry from 100 to 350 men in a crew? They are all Americans too. What shall we do with those people?

Mr. COOLEY. If they are members of the crew and they are lost on the high seas that is as a result of a risk of their employment. They know the nature of the cargo the ship is carrying. On the other hand, the women and children of this Nation, before they are blown up on the high seas, should at least have knowledge of the fact that they are riding on ships which are carrying instruments of destruction. You know and I know that the one thing that will get this Nation into war is to have a ship blown up on the high seas carrying women and children who are innocent and who have no knowledge as to the nature of the cargo.

Mr. THORKELSON. The seamen should not be subjected to the risk either.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment may be agreed to.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOLEY) there were—ayes 53, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOLICITATION AND COLLECTION OF FUNDS

SEC. 5. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to solicit or receive any contribution for or on behalf of the government of any state named in the proclamation or of any association, organization, or person acting for or on behalf of such government. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the solicitation or collection of contributions to be used for medical aid and assistance, or for food and clothing to relieve human suffering, when such solicitation or collection of contributions is made on behalf of and for use by any person or organization which is not acting for or on behalf of or in aid of any such government, but all such solicitations and collections of contributions shall be subject to the approval of the President and shall be made under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe.

(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939, had come to no resolution thereon.

COLLATERAL SECURITY FOR FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2618) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes. The bill has been passed by the Senate and an identical bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Banking and Currency. This bill simply extends for 2 years the time within which the Federal Reserve banks may use direct Government obligations as a cover for Federal Reserve notes in place of commercial paper. Similar extensions have been granted on three different occasions. The original act was passed in 1932.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that this is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking therefrom the words "until June 30, 1939" and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "until June 30, 1941."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STABILIZATION FUND AND ALTERATION OF THE WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. SOMERS of New York submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINES

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6977, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Senate amendment: In line 11, strike out "October" and insert "September".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Utah if the text of the bill is identical with the text of the bill as it passed the House, with the exception of the time limit?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The only difference is that "October 1" has been stricken and "September 1" inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

Mr. NICHOLS submitted the following conference report on the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
JACK NICHOLS,
AMERSON KENNEDY,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
GEORGE J. BATES,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN H. OVERTON,
WILLIAM H. KING,
M. E. TYDINGS,
PAT MCCARRAN,
ARTHUR CAPPER,

RELIEF BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on House Joint Resolution 326, the relief bill, may have until midnight tonight to file their report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Mr. J. Carroll Cone describing the first trans-Atlantic flight of the Yankee Clipper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement and a copy of a letter of the Secretary of State on the trade-treaty program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members speaking on House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939, may be permitted to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Will not the gentleman include in his request all Members of the House?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I modify the request and ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill under consideration today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a broadcast delivered by Hon. PATRICK J. BOLAND on June 28, 1939, over the National Broadcasting System.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a short editorial appearing in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief article on neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from the Austin American.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELOSON, Mr. RICH, Mr. WHITE of Ohio, and Mr. KELLER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RISK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short letter from a constituent on the subject of neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address over radio station WJR by Mr. Thomas E. Stone, chairman of the Council of Associated Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the remarks I made this afternoon a few excerpts from letters relating to the subject discussed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mrs. NORTON for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. JACOBSEN, at the request of Mr. LeCOMPTE, for 2 days on account of death in family.

HOOR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what his program is going to be tomorrow and the order in which the legislation is to be considered?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know that at this time. The W. P. A. conference report and the stabilization matter will come up first.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Which one will be taken up first?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot tell the gentleman that tonight. I can give him the information pretty early tomorrow. I cannot inform the gentleman now, because some of the people I want to converse with are not present.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The only reason I ask the question is because some of the Members over here are quite disturbed over the order in which the matters will come up. I think it would help the gentleman to get his request granted if we knew about that.

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot tell the gentleman because I do not know, but they will be the first two matters to come up tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 5269. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5427. An act making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6392. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Department of Commerce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, June 30, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries at 10 a. m. Tuesday, July 11, 1939, for the consideration of H. R. 6881, to implement the provisions of the Ship Owners' Liability (sick and injured seamen) Convention, 1936.

The notice of June 27, 1939, advised that public hearings would be held on Tuesday, July 11, 1939, at 10 a. m. (E. S. T.) on H. R. 6881, a bill to implement the provisions of the Shipowners' Liability (sick and injured seamen) Convention, 1936.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father Who art in heaven, let these moments of prayer be our quickening circumstance, the touch of which shall draw out the slumbering soul in us. Bring us to those heights where we are chastened and cleansed with the vision of our faults and errors, where we can see the transient in the light of the everlasting and the great world about us with its sin and suffering, its crying injustices and abuses, in the light of the throne of God. Teach us how to bear each others' burdens and to look with charity upon each other's faults, that, knowing the springs of thought and deed, we may forsake the winding ways of greed and selfish joy, and follow the footsteps of the blessed Christ along the highway of eternal right. We ask it in His name. Amen.

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 29, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On June 19, 1939:

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

MAY REPORT OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of May 1939, including a statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month, showing the name, amount, and rate of interest or dividend in each case, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the boards of supervisors of the counties of Hawaii, Kauai, and Maui, T. H., favoring the enactment of legislation to amend the Hawaiian organic act in certain respects, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by members of the Marlboro Shoenworkers Association, Inc., of Marlboro, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Bloom neutrality measure, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Charleston, Landisburg, Danese, and Maplewood, all in the State of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of pending legislation to prohibit the immigration of aliens until the number of unemployed persons in the United States has decreased below the 5,000,000 mark, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Wheeling (W. Va.) Post, No. 1, American Legion, protesting against the enactment of legislation to provide for the forced retirement of Army officers who have reached a certain grade in age, regardless of their physical capacity, ability, or usefulness to the service, and the promotion of officers in the Army based entirely on seniority, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IMPORTATION OF WOOLEN GOODS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present a letter from Keltie & Co., of Boston, in reference to the effect of increased importation of woolen goods on employment in the woolen mills and ask that the same be treated in the nature of a petition, be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance. In the same connection I ask that a table prepared by the United States Tariff Commission, at my request, showing United States imports of woollens for consumption, from January 1937 to April 1939, be printed in the RECORD and also referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter and table were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KELTIE & Co., INC.,
Boston, Mass., June 27, 1939.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As we understand the State Department is planning to reopen the agreements with France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Sweden, and Finland, we wish to call your attention to the fact that for the first 5 months of this year 4,368,000 yards of cloth were brought into this country from England alone.

A mill customer of ours advises that in the first 5 months he has given steady employment to 150 people in the making of 227,000 yards of woolen goods. Comparable imports this year have served to render 20 such mills idle. At the moment we can count about 30 such mills idle within 100 miles of Boston, the idle workers meanwhile having little idea of the reasons why.

This unnecessary idleness causes losses to the farmer, to the handlers of wool and byproducts, to the woolen mills who are trying to operate against this foreign competition.

I am sure that every worker connected with the wool industry would appreciate knowing that the men in Washington whom they have chosen to represent them are doing everything to check this flood of imports and to get them back to work.

Respectfully yours,

KELTIE & Co., INC.
RALPH J. KELTIE.

MR. GANNETT'S PROPAGANDA COLUMN SERVICE FREE

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, Frank Gannett is at it again. Here is a letter which I have just received from a newspaperman in Oklahoma:

BRISTOW, OKLA., June 26, 1939.

Hon. JOSH LEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LEE: You may have already examined the enclosed—and very interesting—letter from Mr. Gannett, and his offer to furnish this column free. I'm passing it on to you for any use you may desire to make of it.

Sincerely yours,

L. M. NICHOLS.

This is the letter he received from Frank Gannett:

[Frank Gannett, president, The Gannett Newspapers. Executive offices, Rochester, N. Y. Chairman, National Committee To Uphold Constitutional Government]

JUNE 23, 1939.

Mr. L. M. NICHOLS,
Bristow Record, Bristow, Okla.

DEAR MR. NICHOLS: Will you not personally read the enclosed statements by former Congressman Pettengill? I feel that these two articles have such importance that they should have the widest possible distribution. Both deal with questions vital to a free press and free radio. If you feel these views are important we are pleased to be able to give you the opportunity of placing them before your readers. Both copies are offered, on and after the release date, for your use in any way you see fit.

If you have become convinced, as I have, that former Congressman Pettengill's 8 years' experience and intimate, continuing contacts in Washington make him an important commentator on current dangerous trends, will you not consider adding his twice-a-week column as a permanent feature?

The papers, with almost 2,000,000 circulation, that are now using it are finding growing reader interest. It is being distributed by America's Future, Inc., a non-profit organization.

For information write Glen Hancock, America's Future, 205 East Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK GANNETT.

Mr. President, it would be interesting to know why America's Future, Inc., distributes these 2,000,000 releases free of cost to the newspapers. It would be interesting to know who pays the bill.

Mr. President, Mr. Gannett refers to former Representative Pettengill's contacts in Washington. I believe one of the contacts he had was living in the same house with utility lobbyists. I am personally acquainted with former Representative Pettengill. I consider him a sincere man, an honorable man. He and I never agreed on many questions. When I had it in mind to support some bill, and found out that he was for it, I usually went back and read it again. Mr. Pettengill did not offer himself for election again in Indiana, and I understand that one of the reasons is that it was thought that he did not have enough support to be reelected on account of his antiadministration record.

I have read the two articles submitted, and they are both vigorous attacks upon the liberal policies of this administration.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator from Oklahoma mean to imply, by his reference to the fact that former Representative Pettengill, as he says, lived in the house with someone representing utilities, that there was anything ulterior or improper about that?

Mr. LEE. Not at all. I want that made very clear. Nothing dishonorable concerning Mr. Pettengill is intended.

Mr. BURKE. Why mention it in connection with the matter the Senator brought up?

Mr. LEE. Simply to show that his inclination was very much against the present policies of the administration, and to put the public on notice that the contents of that column will be antiadministration propaganda. I am glad the Senator mentioned that matter because I would not for anything give the impression that I have anything but the highest regard for Mr. Pettengill as a man and as an honorable man, but his views are very different from mine, and I wanted to point out that fact to show that he represents the same political policies as that represented by the utility lobbyists.

Mr. BURKE. If I may be pardoned a suggestion, I think the reference showed more about the attitude of the one who made the reference than it did about former Representative Pettengill.

PREVENTION OF PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the light of previous statements made by me on the floor, and in order to keep the record straight, I rise for just a moment today to say that the House Committee on the Judiciary has kept faith with me in reporting Senate bill 1871. I am informed that the House committee did so report today. I am further informed that the committee struck out the last sentence in subdivision (a) of section 9 and removed it entirely from the bill.

This action of the committee is not in violation of the agreement, which I mentioned here on the floor, which was had with me, for that agreement only extended to reporting the bill and obtaining a rule for a vote. The committee had the right to act as it has acted, but its action, Mr. President, does kill and does destroy the vital part of the bill which seeks to ban pernicious political activity of Federal employees. Section 9 might just as well be stricken out in its entirety, for that sentence, the one which was stricken out, is the substance, not only of section 9 but of the entire bill, with relation to political activities of Federal employees.

This action of the committee presents an open, direct, and positive challenge to the leadership of the Democratic Party. That leadership, having openly declared in favor of the objectives, is now confronted with the opportunity of writing its professed beliefs into the law. The issue is clear-cut. That issue cannot be met by any claim of defective language. Hiding behind so-called imperfections of language cannot excuse or justify the emasculation of the measure.

While the language of the civil-service rule contained in section 9 seemed to be a reasonable approach, there is nothing sacred about that language. If it is poorly drafted, it is a simple matter to rewrite the provision and put into effect the objectives the leadership have claimed to approve.

Shall Federal employees be permitted to engage in political activities? Shall they continue to control and dominate conventions? This, Mr. President, is the issue. It is definitely drawn. The challenge must be met. Let it be met openly. If the objectives are to be killed, let them die honorably. Let not faith in the purposes of section 9 be betrayed by objection to form of language or structure of words.

The further progress of the bill will be watched with interest.

MATTERS OF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have received a letter, of date June 29, 1939, from Mr. Joseph A. Padway, counsel for the American Federation of Labor, advising that the American Federation of Labor supports Senate bill 915. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1939.

HON. MARVEL M. LOGAN,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR LOGAN: Bill S. 915, dealing with the Logan administrative law legislation, has had my consideration on behalf of the American Federation of Labor. I have discussed it with the legislative department and with President Green. Mr. Green stated that if in my opinion the bill was advantageous to labor that I should so state, and that it would receive the support of the American Federation of Labor.

It is my opinion that the bill is in many respect beneficial to labor and it has our support. It appeals to us as being fair, just, and most necessary.

Respectfully yours,

J. A. PADWAY,

Counsel, American Federation of Labor.

AGREEMENT FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNOBTAINED-TO BILLS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] desires to bring up a matter briefly before we take up the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the matter which the Senator from Louisiana will bring up the Senate proceed to consider unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE AND APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I regret to say, in reference to the revenue bill for the District of Columbia, that the conferees of the Senate and the conferees of the House are in disagreement. I further regret to make the observation that the Senate and House conferees are in disagreement in respect to the supply bill for the District of Columbia. They are in disagreement although we have had several conferences upon the supply bill and have had a conference of several hours upon the revenue bill.

The main item in controversy in both the tax bill and the appropriation bill is the payment to be made by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia.

The Senate on three different occasions has supported the view represented by the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, that the Federal payment should be approximately the sum of $8,000,000. On the other hand, the view of the House of Representatives is that the appropriation should not be in excess of $5,000,000.

Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate this issue so vital to the District of Columbia. I have taken the position—and the committees of the Senate and the Senate itself have agreed with me—that there should be a fixed formula of contribution, so that this question may be set at rest forever, and in order that the payment to be made by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia be fixed upon a basis so that this bitter controversy will not be annually arising as it has arisen from year to year.

We have traditionally made the Federal payment upon a percentage basis. It is true that in the beginning the appropriations made by Congress toward the expenses of the upkeep of our National Capital were upon a lump-sum basis. Payments have been made by the National Government to the District of Columbia from the time there has been a District of Columbia. From 1790, the time when the District of Columbia was organized, up to 1878, the payments by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia government averaged 38.7 percent of the District expenses.

Then, in 1878, when the reorganization form of government was prescribed for the District of Columbia, a special committee of Congress went fully into the question of the Federal payment, and it came to the conclusion that there should be a copartnership between the National Government and the District of Columbia government toward the upkeep of our National Capital, and that the Federal payment should be 50 percent, and that the remaining 50 percent should come from revenues derived by taxation upon the residents of the District. In other words, the National Government matched dollars with the District of Columbia government.

Mr. President, that policy was enacted into law in 1878, and for 42 years, from 1879 to 1920 the plan of Federal payment was a 50-50 plan; in other words the Federal Government and the District of Columbia government bore the burden in equal proportions.

In 1921 the basis of payment was altered and the percentage of contribution by the Federal Government was reduced to 40 percent and it continued from 1921 to 1925, 4 years, upon the ratio of a 40-percent payment by the Federal Government and a 60-percent tax burden upon the residents of the District of Columbia.

Beginning in 1925, Congress departed from the fixed percentage plan of payment and evolved what is known as the lump-sum basis of Federal payment. The lump-sum basis is not supported by any percentage, it is not supported by any rational basis. It is whatever each succeeding Congress determines, either through a spirit of liberality or a spirit of frugality, shall be paid toward the upkeep of our National Capital by the Federal Government. So it has happened that during the period from 1925 to the present time the Federal payments have varied from a high of $9,500,000 to a low, the present low of $5,000,000. Under the lump-sum plan, covering the period 1925-39, the percentage of payment made by the Federal Government to the District government has averaged about 20 percent of the general fund appropriations.

The Congress of the United States has a constitutional obligation in respect to the District of Columbia. We are by the Constitution the masters of the District of Columbia. We have exclusive legislative authority over it. Washington does not belong to the Washingtonians, it does not belong to the residents of the District of Columbia. It is our National Capital, it is the property of the whole Nation. It belongs to every man, woman, and child in the United States, and we all should, and we all do, I dare say, take an interest and a pride in our National Capital.

Because the District is the seat of our Government, the framers of our Constitution gave us exclusive legislative authority over it. We determine what taxes shall be levied against the residents of the District of Columbia. We determine how every dollar of the revenue shall be expended. All the avails of taxes collected are paid into the Treasury of the United States. We, the Congress of the United States, sitting, at is were, as a board of aldermen or a city council, determine how the funds shall be expended.

We require the District of Columbia to pay many items which ought to be borne as a Federal expense and treated as a Federal obligation. We do so because we have the authority to do it and because, regardless of any complaint which may be made by the residents of the District of Columbia, we, having the authority, can prescribe exactly what shall be done with their money.

For instance, the District of Columbia government supplies all of the Federal buildings in the District with water free to the Federal Government. It supplies the water at the entire expense of the residents, and the water consumers of the District foot the whole bill. It has been estimated that the value of the supply of water the District of Columbia furnishes to the Federal Government amounts to almost $500,000 per annum, figured at commercial rates. We put that burden on the District because we have the authority to do it and to make the people bear it.

Again we say to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, "You have to furnish free education not only to the children of the District of Columbia but to the children of the State of Maryland and to the children of the State of Virginia. You have to give them free library service, and you have to give them free medical attention, such as is afforded under the regulations of the Board of Education and the Health Department of the District of Columbia." That item alone amounts to something over $300,000 per annum. Then we say—and I think properly in this respect—that the children of Federal employees located in the District of Columbia, the children of Senators, of Representatives, of the Cabinet officers, of everyone who comes here in Federal official service, must be furnished free education and free textbooks and free municipal library service.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I noted what the Senator said about the Federal Government paying nothing for the water which the District supplies to it. It seems to me that is on the face of it an injustice to the District of Columbia. But I am wondering if the waterworks were paid for by the taxpayers of the District of Columbia or whether the Government itself paid for them. I ask that question for information.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall be very glad to give the Senator the information.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that the water supply of the District cost a great deal of money. The system is quite an expensive one. I wonder if the Government gets free the water used in Federal buildings as partial compensation for the money expended to pay for the original cost of the waterworks system of the District of Columbia. And is it not a fact that the Government of the United States contributed very materially to the cost of that system?

Mr. OVERTON. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that I desired to obtain the same information, and I took the matter up with the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia and asked him to make a survey and report. In fact the survey was being made at the time. It is now completed. Here is what it shows. Back in the old days there was payment by the United States for the building of the aqueduct which supplies the city of Washington with water, but the total contribution which has been made by the Federal Government, from 1852 to date, towards the water system of the city of Washington amounts to only $12,411,352. On the other hand the residents of the District of Columbia have expended upon the water system the total sum of $53,291,350. Therefore the proportion of the Federal payment to the District payment is as 12 is to 53, or less than one-fourth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am wondering whether that is a fair proportion. Of course Federal buildings use only a small percentage of the total water that is supplied. The figures which the Senator gives show that for practical purposes the water system cost about $65,000,000. The Federal Government paid as its share of that a little over $12,000,000. The remainder was paid from moneys received from taxation, I suppose.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; from the general revenue and from the charges made for water consumption upon the residents of the District of Columbia. So it was paid both by taxation against the property owners of the District of Columbia—

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand that the people have to pay for the water, but the original outlay was paid from an appropriation made by Congress, I suppose.

Mr. OVERTON. The total appropriation required to maintain the water system in the District of Columbia is $1,200,000, per annum in round figures, and the water supplied to the Federal Government approximates $500,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is there any more reason why the Federal Government should get free water for its contribution to the construction of the water system than that the taxpayers, who put up five times as much, should have free water?

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator for that contribution. I agree with him. The Federal Government is no longer making any contribution, and it has not for some time.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Federal Government pay toward the upkeep of the water system now?

Mr. OVERTON. No. The total cost of operation and capital outlay is borne by the District of Columbia.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand, but the Federal Government contributes toward it?

Mr. OVERTON. It makes no contribution.

Mr. NORRIS. It makes no contribution whatever?

Mr. OVERTON. None whatsoever.

Mr. NORRIS. I still do not feel quite clear about the matter. The Federal Government makes a contribution every year into the general fund of the District, I suppose.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And the city pays for the upkeep of the waterworks. But I presume the District gets as much, perhaps more, from the people who pay for the water, than the upkeep costs. Is not that true? And if that is true, the taxpayers do not pay anything more than the Government does. What I want to know is whether the contribution which is made annually by the Federal Government to the District government does not go into the fund with which the operation of the waterworks system is kept up.

Mr. OVERTON. It does not. The water fund is kept separate and distinct from the general fund and the Federal payment is only to the general fund. There is a Federal payment which is made annually toward the upkeep of the National Capital by the Congress of the United States, and I am referring to these different items to show that the District of Columbia pays for every dime of contribution it gets from the Federal Government. I mention the water supply as one instance. I think it is wholly unfair to require that the resident water consumers in the District should pay today for the operation of the entire system of waterworks supplying inhabitants and supplying all the Federal buildings, and that they should bear the total cost as they are doing today, and as they have been doing for many years, and that the Federal Government should be exempted from the payment for water simply because in times gone by it has paid ten-million-and-some-odd-thousand dollars toward the capital outlay for the construction of the waterworks system supplying the city of Washington.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is anything paid in to the maintenance fund of the water system of Washington except what is collected from those who pay for water?

Mr. OVERTON. That is all. And it is kept as a separate and independent fund. The residents of the District of Columbia pay not only for their own water, but they pay for the water used in all these Federal buildings, and they pay for water in all the national parks and streets and other public places.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wish to ask the Senator another question. If the District were to furnish free water to the Federal Government at the expense of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, would it be facetious to say that the District should also furnish plumbing to the Federal Government?

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think it would be too far-fetched.

I pass on from that item. All the mammoth Federal buildings are under the care and protection of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia. It has been estimated that the service rendered by the District of Columbia toward protection of the Federal property from fire amounts to between $200,000 and $300,000 per annum. We require the District to do that. We further require the District to maintain all the streets and sidewalks abutting the properties belonging to the Federal Government. We require the District to discharge all the costs of street lighting in connection with Federal properties, including national parks. We require the District to clean all the streets and remove the snow and ice on the sidewalks and the streets abutting Federal properties. The District government is obliged to take charge of the garbage and refuse from the Federal buildings and dispose of it.

We exempt the Federal Government from the payment of any gasoline tax or any automobile tax in the District of Columbia on all federally owned cars, and the District is obliged to issue permits and title certificates to the federally owned cars without any charge whatsoever.

The District of Columbia is required to have an extraordinary police force because it is the National Capital.

Mr. President, I ask that there be order in the Senate. I am discussing a matter on which I shall later ask for a yeand-nay vote by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators who wish to confer will please retire to the cloak room.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, whenever a Federal parade occurs, as many as 800 policemen are detailed for duty. It is proper that they should be. It is proper that when the President goes through the streets of Washington there should be police lined along the streets. But we do require the District of Columbia alone to bear all the added burden of police protection for the Federal buildings, and the Federal parades, and for all that is required here in our National Capital.

Furthermore, we require the District of Columbia to pay for the cost of the detention of witnesses and prisoners in Federal cases, and the incarceration of prisoners convicted of Federal offenses. We today require the District of Columbia to pay 60 percent of the cost of our Federal district courts in the District of Columbia, and 30 percent of the cost of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. I say to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that I do not think such a situation obtains in his own State or in any other State of the Union. I do not think we require a State payment toward the cost of the operation of Federal courts. We could not require States to do that. But because we have exclusive legislative authority over the District of Columbia we force the District to assume that burden, and many other burdens to which I have referred and others to which I shall refer later.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I am in entire accord with him.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator. I am very glad indeed to have the support of the able Senator from Nevada in the contention I am making.

We are spending thousands of dollars annually toward the reclamation of the Anacostia flats along the Anacostia River, for the benefit of the Federal Government. The title to all the reclaimed land goes to the Federal Government, but we require the District of Columbia to bear the burden of the entire cost. Furthermore, because Washington is the National Capital, and we want big national parks, whenever we desire additional park area we acquire it in the name of the Federal Government, but we make the District of Columbia pay for every rood and acre of it. The title to all the parks in the District of Columbia is in the Federal Government. They are known as national parks, and they have tremendous areas because they are national parks and part of the seat of our National Government. However, we require the District of Columbia to pay for all the maintenance of those parks, for the lighting, and for centers of recreation. While the Department of the Interior designates the National Capital Parks police force to man these Capital parks, we require the District of Columbia to pay the entire compensation of such police force.

Mr. President, I have given only a partial list of the exactions we make upon the District of Columbia. It has been estimated that the services rendered by the District of Columbia to the Federal Government amount to as much as $12,000,000 per annum. It is true that there have been lower estimates. When it comes to the question of putting values upon services and upon property the minds of men differ. The lowest estimate which has been called to my attention is an estimate of something in excess of $2,000,000 per annum, but other estimates reach as high as $12,000,000 per annum. The estimate of $12,000,000 per annum was made by all the departments in the District of Columbia which have appraised the services being rendered by the District to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I think it would probably be fair to say that a just valuation upon the services rendered by the District of Columbia to the Federal Government is sufficient to cover the Federal payment made for the upkeep of our National Capital, whether it be $5,000,000 or whether it be $8,000,000, as is presently contended by the Senate.

However, Mr. President, it is not merely a question of the services rendered. The Federal Government has a tremendous area of Federal property within the District of Columbia. The area belonging to the Federal Government is something more than 29 percent of the total land area of the District. Of course, all that Federal property is exempt from taxation. However, we do more than that. Because we have a National Capital here, and because we have the legislative authority to do so, we exempt many other properties from taxation. We exempt all embassies, and properly so. We exempt buildings belonging to patriotic organizations, such as Constitution Hall and the property belonging to the Society of the Cincinnati. The total exempt property in the District of Columbia, including the Federal property and the other properties which we have legislatively exempted from the burden of taxation, amounts to more than 55 percent of the land area in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. Let me finish this one thought. In other words, we force the entire burden of real-estate taxation in the District of Columbia upon only 45 percent of the land area of the District.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the remark which the Senator has just made is a very interesting and potent one in this discussion, namely, that 55 percent of the land area of the District is exempt from local taxation. Has the Senator any figures to show what percentage of the total contribution would be accounted for by the 55 percent of exempt land and buildings if it were taxed?

Mr. OVERTON. It might be interesting to the Senator from Maryland for me to call his attention to a report contained in a message from the President of the United States transmitted this year to the Congress. The report was prepared at his instance, I believe by the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and some other official. That report shows that if the local rate of taxation were applied merely to the federally owned property, the revenue derived therefrom for the District of Columbia would be $10,569,981.

Mr. TYDINGS. What percentage is that of the total revenue? I know the Senator has the figure.

Mr. OVERTON. The total general fund of the District of Columbia is now slightly over $40,000,000, including a Federal payment of $5,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. So, it would be 25 percent.

Mr. OVERTON. It would be 25 percent. That fact, in and of itself, would support a larger contribution than $8,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has approached this whole matter in a spirit of absolute fairness. He has worked untiringly on the committee to establish justice between the District of Columbia and the Federal function, and I think this body, as a mark of confidence, ought to stay with him until the end of the fight, because he has the facts to support his argument and he has approached the matter with no selfish thought. He deserves the thanks not only of everyone living in the District of Columbia but of everyone in the country for the work he has done.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from Maryland for his complimentary references to me, but I wish to amend his remarks in part. To some extent I did have a selfish interest in this matter because, fortunately, or unfortunately, I was drafted as chairman of the subcommittee on the supply bill for the District of Columbia. I know that each year a controversy arises as to what the Federal payment should be. The controversy seems to be endless. Therefore I read a great many reports which had been made by different committees of Congress, most of which based the Federal payment upon the theory of excessive ownership of Federal property. Then I evolved the theory which is contained in Senate bill 1190, which has now been passed by the Senate, based upon the ratio which the net land area belonging to the Federal Government, after making certain deductions, bears to the total land area of the District of Columbia. That formula is flexible and is reduced to mathematical accuracy. Of course, the contribution will be decreased as the Federal ownership is decreased, and will be increased as Federal ownership increases.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator made the statement that he had some slight selfish interest in the matter. After listening to his explanation I cannot find that selfish interest; and I say to the Senator that by unanimous consent his amendment to my remarks has been rejected.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Referring to the colloquy between the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the further statement that future years will probably show an increased amount of land taken out of the taxable area for Federal use, is there not an element to be considered in the fact that the development of the land through Federal improvements has greatly increased the taxable value of all the rest of the area of the District?

Mr. TYDINGS. And increased the burdens.

Mr. OVERTON. It has increased the value, especially of adjacent property. However, as the Senator from Maryland says, it has likewise correspondingly increased the burden upon the taxpayers of the District of Columbia.

Because we are the masters of the District of Columbia, we will not permit the seat of our National Government to become an industrial city. We will not permit pay rolls here which would correspond to pay rolls in industrial cities generally throughout the United States.

We do more than that. Because we want to have a beautiful National Capital, we restrict building. No building may be in excess of a certain height. That is in order to have a city beautiful, and a city of magnificent distances, as Washington has been described.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. What is the tax rate on real estate in the District of Columbia?

Mr. OVERTON. At present the tax rate is $1.75 on a full-value assessment.

Mr. WILEY. How does that compare with the rate in other cities of the United States?

Mr. OVERTON. I will say to the Senator that I wanted that question settled, I hoped for good; so when I was preparing to conduct hearings on the bill which I introduced, and to which I referred, I appealed to the Bureau of the Census to put someone to work to institute a comparison between the tax burden borne by residents of the District of Columbia and that borne by residents of comparable cities. They spent several weeks upon it. They put at the head of their staff Mr. Chester E. Rightor, who is chief statistician on taxation of States and cities. He submitted a report to the subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee having this matter under consideration. It was his report that the tax burden on the residents of the city of Washington is the average of the tax burden borne by the residents of comparable cities. It was his further report, however, that he included in the tax burden the taxes that were levied in various cities outside Washington to service their bonded debt, which is an appreciable sum. Washington has no bonded debt, and if, therefore, the tax avails that are used for the purpose of the public-debt service were eliminated from the calculation, the city of Washington in its tax burden would be fourth in rank of the 12 cities that were investigated and reported upon.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Along the same line, as the Senator knows, because Congress makes the appropriations for the District of Columbia, and as the Senator from Louisiana has stated, the District has no bonded indebtedness, that has forced the District to bear very heavy burdens through all these years, in order to keep expenses current. If we were to depart from that policy, we could lower the tax rate in the District. In my opinion, if the District of Columbia had pursued the same policy that the large cities of America have pursued of borrowing and deferring to the future, as the Senator says, it would not only rank fourth but, with all the improvements made in the city, I should not be surprised but that it would rank first if it had resorted to the artifice of borrowing for permanent improvements.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WILEY. According to my own experience and from talking with a number of Members of this body in comparing values of real estate, I would say that the tax rate here is probably about one-half of what it is throughout the Nation, especially in the Middle West.

Mr. OVERTON. What does the Senator call "the tax rate"? Does he include all the State taxation, the county taxation, the special district taxation, and municipal taxation?

Mr. WILEY. I have not had a summary made; I am merely using my own experience. Take real estate. Let me digress from that subject for a moment to remark that the Senator stated there is not any pay roll here. I want to say that the Government has made the best kind of a pay roll for Washington. It has brought here 140,000 pay rollers to work for the Government. They are getting high wages, some of them very high wages. In other words, I do not think Washington is so badly off in spite of the "manhandling" which, it is implied, the Government has given Washington.

Referring, however, to the question of taxation, if the Senator will take his own home in his own State—

Mr. OVERTON. Will the Senator permit me to state that I thank him for the expression as to "manhandling" which he has contributed to the debate.

Mr. WILEY. Very well. If the Senator will take his own home in his State, or if he will take the home of any other Senator, and compare its value with the value of a similar home in Washington, he will find that the home owner in Washington is three or four times better off, because the way the Government runs Washington adds value to the property. Any man who had a home here 10 years ago has received a substantial appreciation.

Furthermore, if the Senator will take a property in his own State—let us assume a property valued at $10,000—how much taxes would the Senator pay in his own home town on such a property? If he should then take a property in Washington valued at $10,000, he would see that the owner in Washington is paying about 50 percent less than the Senator is paying in his own home State.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator may know a great deal more about taxation than I do, but I think the Bureau of the Census knows more about that subject than either he or I.

Mr. WILEY. Take the example I have given. Will the Senator apply it for me?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; I will take the example, but I will say that, in my own State, the assessed valuation is far below the cash value of the property. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] correctly states, the assessment runs from 25 to 50 percent not only in my State but in a great many other States. The States and the counties and the local subdivisions of government have proceeded upon the theory that it is better to have a high tax rate and a low assessment than it is to have a full assessment and a low tax rate.

In further answer to the Senator, let me say that the residents of the States are required to do something that the residents of the District of Columbia are not required to do. The residents of the Senator's State and mine pay taxes for the maintenance of the State. The funds so derived are expended all over the State, and the citizens of the State benefit from the taxes they pay into the coffers of the State. Furthermore, they have a voice in the government of the State; they have a legislature; they are eligible to election to the legislature of the State and to its governorship. They have full control; they are citizens with the right to vote, the right to hold office, the right to regulate the affairs of their State and of its local subdivisions. Furthermore, let me say to the Senator that the residents of his State and my State pay county taxes. They have a right to elect their county commissioners; the Senator himself could become a county commissioner. They derive benefits from the county governments. Then there are districts within the States. For instance, in Louisiana we have reclamation districts; we have levee districts; we have school districts. The citizens pay money for the support of their schools, their levees, and for the reclamation of their land. No one for a moment can undertake to compare the tax burden of the city of Washington, which is, in effect, a municipal government, with all the tax burdens that may be piled upon the Senator in his State, because he contributes to the support of his sovereign State and of its local subdivisions and derives the benefit therefrom.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WILEY. Does the Senator base his argument on the fundamental proposition, which we have heard discussed so often in this Chamber, of ability to pay in the matter of taxation? Does the Senator not think Washington is better off than most cities from the standpoint of ability to pay?

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator is speaking of pay rolls, I should say that 90 percent of the Government pay roll makes no contribution to the expense of the District of Columbia. I am making that statement offhand, without any knowledge of the actual figures, and without having made any investigation.

Mr. WILEY. I am talking about the taxpayer's ability to pay.

Mr. OVERTON. Well, his ability to pay is determined by the value of his property which is assessed at full value in the District of Columbia, at least, all urban property is. Some of the outlying property is assessed at 80 percent of its value.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. The mere matter of the assessment does not mean anything unless we get the whole picture. Coming back to the $10,000 example—

Mr. OVERTON. Let me interrupt the Senator. That is the reason why I went to the real experts in our Federal Government, to the Bureau of the Census. They have made their report, and I would be very glad to furnish the Senator with a copy of it. It is full; it is complete; and it ought to be convincing. In the report the experts say that the tax burden of the city of Washington is comparable to the tax burden of other cities.

Mr. WILEY. I will not interrupt the Senator again, but coming back to the $10,000 example, if the Senator will take a home in his own State that has a valuation of $10,000—I do not say a home assessed at $10,000, but that has a value of $10,000—and compare taxes paid on that home with the taxes paid on a home in the city of Washington of $10,000 value, I think he will find the taxes here are less.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not like to refer particularly to my own property in my home city and to what the assessor there does, because I have to visit his office annually. He determines what the assessment shall be. Let us talk about it generally. I will say to the Senator that, generally, the assessments in the different cities run, as the Senator from Oklahoma has well said, from about 25 to 50 percent of the true value of the property.

Of course, if anyone writes to an assessor in any State, the assessor will say, "I am assessing at full value"; but, as a matter of fact, assessors do not assess at full value; and I am satisfied that in the Senator's own State they do not assess anywhere approximating full value.

Mr. WHEELER. They assess property much more than 25 percent of value here in the city of Washington.

Mr. OVERTON. They assess at full value. The government of the District is right under the eyes of the Federal Government and the assessor dare not do otherwise.

Let me refer to another situation that exists here. While we are discussing the taxation, it must be remembered that the area of the District of Columbia is circumscribed; it is prescribed by the Constitution. I am sorry the Senator from Wisconsin is leaving because I wanted him to hear this.

Mr. WILEY. I will be glad to remain to hear what the Senator may say.

Mr. OVERTON. The area of the District of Columbia is circumscribed. It was originally 10 miles square. We gave back to Virginia what Virginia had ceded to the Government and the area of the District of Columbia is now 7 miles square. There has been a tremendous suburban development around Washington, both in Virginia and in Maryland. What does a city in the Senator's State or in any other State do when there is suburban development? The city extends its corporate limits; it takes in the additional area, and makes the people there who enjoy the benefits of the municipal government contribute to the expenses thereof. In the District of Columbia, however, those who have gone out and developed suburban areas in Maryland and Virginia get the benefit of the District government without expense, and the District of Columbia is powerless to help itself. It is surrounded, as it were, figuratively speaking, by a Chinese wall that it cannot surmount. Its area is inflexibly fixed, and it has the additional burden of taking care of these suburban dwellers without any contribution on their part for the maintenance of the District of Columbia government.

Thomas Babington Macaulay, in his essay on Von Ranke, referred to the traveler from New Zealand who some day might take his stand upon a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's. With the increased Federal acquisition of property and the constantly increasing exemption from taxation of property in the District of Columbia and the inability of the District of Columbia to extend its area, I think we may very well conceive that the time will come when there will be in the District of Columbia one lonely taxpayer, upon a lonely lot of ground, having to bear all the burdens of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate at too great length. Let me explain briefly the formula which I have undertaken to evolve, which has met with the approval of the District Committee and has met with the approval of the Senate.

I thought, as some have suggested, that it might be well to compute the value of the Federal property and compare it with the value of privately owned property; but when we get to values we get into a controversy. The Senator from Montana would have one idea, for instance, as to the value of the Capitol Building, and I would have another; and who is going properly to appraise the Senate and House Office Buildings, or the Department of Agriculture Building, or the Zoo, or countless other Federal structures? So I concluded that it would be best to base the formula on land area.

Therefore, I take the landed area belonging to the Federal Government, and from it I deduct all the area embraced in avenues, streets, and alleys, because every municipality has avenues, streets, and alleys. The highway areas should properly be deducted from the landed area we are going to charge up against the Federal Government. It is true that Washington has broader avenues than the average city, and perhaps a much larger highway area than the average city; but yet it is only fair to deduct from the landed area belonging to the Federal Government all the area embraced within the highways.

Then we have park areas. Every city has a park area; and I charge up against the Federal Government only the park area which experts, upon investigation, have determined to be the average park area in comparable cities. We have in the city of Washington an excess park area of 44 percent. Therefore, I deduct 56 percent, representing the average park area, from the landed area of the United States.

Then there is in the District of Columbia certain land which is utilized by the District of Columbia government, and I deduct that land.

Those are all the deductions that I think in fairness should be made.

Then I take the net landed area after those deductions; and the ratio which the net Federal landed area bears to the total landed area in the District of Columbia is the percentage ratio of the proposed Federal payment to the District of Columbia government. That ratio, under the present United States holdings, is 20 percent. Twenty percent of the general fund amounts, in round figures, to $8,000,000, and that is the proposed Federal payment.

In conclusion let me say, as I remarked in the beginning, that this matter has been a subject of controversy from year to year and over a period of many years. I believe that the upshot and result of each controversy has been that the Federal payment written into the annual supply bill by the House has prevailed. On three different occasions this session the Senate has expressed a different view and thought the Federal payment should be increased from the $5,000,000 fixed by the House to the amount of approximately $8,000,000 fixed by the Senate.

I desire to say that when we reached this impasse between the conferees on the supply bill and a similar impasse between the conferees on the tax bill, I proposed that, rather than have no appropriation bill and no tax bill for the District of Columbia, we split the difference for the coming fiscal year. I said to the conferees, "I have respect for the House. It is an independent and coordinate branch of our Government. The House ought to have consideration for the views of the Senate. Since the Senate has unanimously said on three different occasions that the payment by the Federal Government should be approximately $8,000,000, and since the House has said that it should be $5,000,000, let us fix the amount in the supply bill at $6,500,000, and let us fix the ratio in the tax bill at 16 percent instead of 20 percent. The Federal payment now represents 12 percent of the general-fund appropriation, and under the bill as passed by the Senate the Federal payment would be 20 percent of the general-fund appropriations of the District of Columbia, and halfway between those two percentages is 16 percent."

The conferees on the part of the Senate refuse to recede any further. They are willing to split the difference, but they are not willing to make a complete surrender of their views and the views of the Senate to those of the House.

Mr. President, as soon as the conference report comes from the House reporting the disagreement between the conferees, I expect to bring up the matter again without further explanation—I hope it will not be necessary—and ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahay	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gillette	McCarran	Slattery
Barkley	Glass	McKellar	Smathers
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Taft
Borah	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Nye	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

By unanimous consent the Senate has decided to proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

HOOVER'S ATTITUDE TOWARD UNEMPLOYED

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed with a brief discussion at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. What was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington stated that he rose to a question of personal privilege, and he asked unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, last Sunday evening over a national broadcast the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and I discussed the question of unemployment relief. During the course of my discussion I made the following statement:

The first question confronting us is whether, in a democracy, government has the responsibility of assisting those who, through no fault of their own, are unable to find employment in private industry.

This may have been debatable when President Hoover was arguing that Government funds should only be used to help the railroads and the banks. It is not even a subject of dispute today.

On the following day former President Hoover made public a telegram which he had sent to the Senator from Kansas on Tuesday of this week, and the Senator from Kansas, without any objection on my part, had the telegram inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In the telegram former President Hoover made this statement—and I do not intend to read the entire telegram, but just the first and last sentences:

Over the radio today in debate between you and Senator SCHWELLENBACH, the Senator stated rightly that our Government must prevent hunger and cold among our citizens. With that I agree. But he continued to repeat the old lie that during my administration I argued against such action by the Government.

Former President Hoover then discussed some of the activities of the Government during his administration, and concluded with this statement:

I would greatly appreciate it if you would interest yourself in publicly correcting this continued misstatement of Senator SCHWELLENBACH.

HERBERT HOOVER.

Mr. President, I think it is unfortunate that a man who has been thus honored by the people of the United States would permit himself to get into such a fit of temper that he would indulge in language such as has been used by former President Hoover. I was interested, a few days ago, in reading the record of the hearings on the relief bill, to see that an apology was made to the Committee on Appropriations because of the fact that one of the witnesses had previously used language similar to that used by the former President, and the witness appeared before the Committee and apologized, recognizing that no gentleman would ever use such language in a public statement.

While the facts which I shall present will, in my opinion, disprove what former President Hoover said in his telegram, I want it distinctly understood that I am not descending to the methods or the language used by former President Hoover, and that I am not calling him a liar just because of his statement that I am a liar.

I do not like to go back into what is more or less ancient history, but I think all my colleagues remember that for the first part of the period beginning in October 1929 and thereafter during the depression period President Hoover took the position that there was no depression, that everything was all right, and that if the people just would not become frightened but would trust to him and the industrialists of the country, all of their problems would be solved. There were repeated statements about the number of unemployed which were in direct contradiction to the facts as known by anyone who investigated the conditions in any one of our cities or towns. But during the early part of that period the attitude of President Hoover was that there was no depression and no appreciable increase in unemployment.

On November 15, 1929, Mr. Hoover said:

My own experience has been, however, that words are not of any great importance in times of economic disturbance. It's action that counts.

As an outgrowth of that statement the only action which President Hoover or Congress took at that time, and the only action that was taken, was to decrease the taxes levied upon those in this country who had large incomes, in the amount of $160,000,000 a year, thereby decreasing the power and ability of the Federal Government to be of some assistance in the solution of the unemployment problem.

In the telegram to the Senator from Kansas, President Hoover points out the increase in public works during his administration as indicating that he did have some interest in the problem of unemployment. I think it might be of value to have some figures at this point as to increases in public works and the expenditures therefor during the period when Mr. Hoover was President.

In 1928 the Federal Government spent on public works $201,000,000; in 1929 it spent $261,000,000; in 1930 it spent $297,000,000; in 1931 it spent $460,000,000. There was an increase in Federal public works expenditures of $259,000,000.

To Mr. Hoover that may have seemed like a large amount, but that figure should be taken and considered in connection with all the public and private expenditures upon construction in this country. Taking the combined Federal, State, and local public works, in 1928 the sum expended was $3,631,000,000; in 1929 it was $3,555,000,000; in 1930 it was $3,632,000,000; and in 1931 it was $3,000,000,000. In other words, the decrease in State and local expenditures just balanced the amount of the increase in Federal expenditures, and the amount which was expended by the governments of the country was in no way increased.

It is more interesting, however, to take into consideration all of the costs for both public and private construction during that period. In 1928 they amounted to $10,091,000,000; in 1929 they were $9,018,000,000; in 1930 they were $6,946,000,000; in 1931 they were $4,800,000,000; and in 1932 they were $2,750,000,000. So there was a decrease of over $7,000,000,000, while the Federal Government was increasing its construction expenditures by the amount of only $259,000,000.

Mr. President, Members of this body who were here at the time will remember that in March 1930, some 6 months after the depression began, a number of Senators, including the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the former Senator from Michigan, the late Senator Couzens, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] joined in demanding recognition of the problem of unemployment by the national administration and by the Congress, and on March 7, 1930, President Hoover replied to that demand as follows:

All the evidences indicate that the worst effects of the crisis upon employment will have been passed within the next 60 days—

This was in March 1930.

With the amelioration of seasonal unemployment, the gaining strength of other forces, and continued cooperation of the many agencies actively cooperating with the Government to restore business and to relieve distress.

That is an evidence either of the unwillingness or inability of President Hoover at that time to appreciate the situation with which the country was confronted.

On June 4, 1930, a delegation headed by Mr. Amos Pinchot, brother of the then Governor of Pennsylvania, called upon the President to urge a program for the relief of unemployment, and I quote from Mr. Pinchot, who reported the conversation with President Hoover. He said this:

With calm confidence he spoke of the results that were being gained through the conference he had called of great business leaders and of their fine response to his appeal not to curtail the volume of their activities. He showed us, in authoritative style, that every agency of both the Federal and State governments was working at top capacity to relieve the situation.

Mr. Pinchot quoted directly from President Hoover. This was in June 1930:

Gentlemen, you have come 6 weeks too late.

In other words, President Hoover then in June 1930 thought the depression had been over for a period of 6 weeks.

However, in the fall of 1930 President Hoover seemed to have some appreciation of the fact that we were in a depression, and he appointed a citizens' committee on October 21 of that year, with Col. Arthur Woods to direct the organization and to coordinate State and local activities on unemployment. The next day after his appointment Colonel Woods took up his work with this statement:

We are going at the problem with all the information and all the vigor that we can command. I think we will win by furnishing jobs and through social relief measures. It is largely a local problem.

President Hoover's attitude concerning that committee was expressed when he refused to call a special session of the Congress, and on October 24, 1930, issued the following statement:

No special session is necessary to deal with employment. The sense of voluntary organization and community service in the American people has not vanished. The spirit of voluntary service has been strong enough to cope with the problem for the past year, and it will, I am confident, continue in full measure of the need.

On December 2, 1930, President Hoover in his annual message to the Congress said:

Economic depression cannot be cured by legislative action or executive pronouncement. Economic wounds must be healed by action of the cells of the economic body—producers and consumers themselves.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that it is a matter of some interest to me to see that only one Republican Member of this body has any interest in what I have to say. I thought the Republicans would fly to the defense of the leader of their party. I beg the Senate's pardon—I see the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are listening. I beg pardon of the Senator from New Hampshire. I did not notice that he also was listening. However, in view of the fact that some of those who are seeking the Republican nomination for the Presidency are now advocating the same sort of program of having the problem go back to the local communities, I think they should have some interest in what the great leader of their party had to say upon this subject, particularly since he took care to inject himself into this question, and is evidently today considering that he might be a spokesman for the grand old Republican Party.

On December 2, 1930, President Hoover sent this message to Congress:

No matter how devised, an increase in taxes in the end falls upon the workers and farmers, or alternatively deprives industry of that much ability to give employment, and defeats the very purpose of those schemes. For the Government to finance by bond issues deprives industry and agriculture of just that much capital for its own use and for employment. Prosperity cannot be restored by raids upon the Public Treasury.

The leaders of both parties are cooperating to prevent any such event. Some of these schemes are ill-considered; some represent enthusiasts, and some represent the desire of individuals to show that they are more generous than the administration or that they are more generous than even the leaders of their own parties. They are playing politics at the expense of human misery.

Mr. President, that was the famous statement the President then made, that those who were interested in the welfare of that percentage of our population which was unable to secure employment was playing politics. Those persons who raised their voices in this body and at the other end of the Capitol were accused by the then President of playing politics with human misery. Yet ex-President Hoover thinks the American people are so short in their memories that he can now come out and deny that he took that position in 1930. He misjudged very badly the ability and the discernment of the American people, but this is the first time he has indicated that he does not believe the American people are even able to remember what he said during the dreadful period of those years.

Let us come now to January 1931. It will be recalled that I stated that the solution of this task was handed over by Mr. Hoover to Colonel Woods.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator seems to have a controversy with someone. Will he please, for the RECORD, state with whom he has the controversy?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I stated in the beginning, and I will repeat for the benefit of the Senator from Oklahoma. I made a certain statement Sunday night in the course of a radio debate with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. The next day former President Hoover very directly, in a message in which he sent to the Senator from Kansas, and which he made public, stated that I was a liar. While it might not be very important to have former President Hoover call one a liar, my personal view is that I am unwilling to have anyone call me a liar without answering; and, therefore, as a matter of personal privilege, I asked the opportunity to answer the statement made by Mr. Hoover.

Going back, it will be recalled that in the fall of 1930 President Hoover appointed a citizens' committee of which Colonel Woods was the chairman. In January 1931 Colonel Woods testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee as follows, in opposing any appropriations by which the Federal Government might be of assistance in the solution of the problems confronting the country:

We hope distress is going to be avoided; we hope every community is so organized as to be able to take care of any cases of distress in its neighborhood. I have confidence that that is the situation.

In other words, the attitude, not only of the President but of his committee, and of those whom he appointed, was that this was a problem which the neighbors in the community should take care of and would be compelled to take care of.

On February 3, 1931, President Hoover made this statement:

The American people should be given a chance to show whether they wish to preserve the principles of individual and local responsibility and mutual self-help before they embark on what I believe is a disastrous system.

The disastrous system was the suggestion that the Government had some responsibility, that the Government should be of some assistance. That was the statement I made last Sunday night, and that was the statement which was condemned Monday by Mr. Hoover as being a lie.

I feel sure they will succeed if given the opportunity.

This statement was made public in an effort to prevent a relief amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill of that year.

On May 22, 1931, President Hoover issued the following statement, which I quote:

I do not propose to call an extra session of Congress. I know of nothing that would so disturb the healing process now going on in the economic situation. We cannot legislate ourselves out of a world economic depression. We can and will work ourselves out.

Colonel Woods got tired of his job after a while, and he resigned, and a man by the name of Frank C. Croxton, who was assistant to Colonel Woods at that time, became chairman of the President's committee, and on June 8, 1931, he issued this statement:

There must be no let-up in the efforts of State, local, and private relief agencies to assist the needy.

All the way through, in every statement which was issued by the President or anyone representing him, it was the local relief agencies, the charity of the millions, that was to take care of these people.

On June 15, 1931, President Hoover went to Indiana and spoke before the Indiana Republican Editorial Association. He said:

We will prevent any unnecessary distress in the United States, and by the activities and courage of the American people we will recover from the depression. I warn against detouring capital away from industry and commerce either by taxes or loans on the assumption that the Government can create more employment by use of these funds than can industry and commerce itself.

How in the world President Hoover can deny the statement I made, in the light of that statement of June 15, 1931, is more than I can understand.

On June 29, 1931, the then chairman of the Red Cross, Judge Payne, had a visit with President Hoover at the White House on the question of unemployment, and as he left the office of the President he was met by newspapermen, as we always are, and he issued this statement immediately after leaving President Hoover and hearing the President's statement. I quote from Judge Payne. This is July 1931, mind you, almost 2 years after the depression started, at a period of time that anyone, any Senator, or any individual in the United States knew the great number of unemployed in the United States. This is what Judge Payne said after he had met with the President:

There is nothing extraordinary about unemployment conditions at this time. It is a local problem. There is no possible reason why the Federal Government should be called upon. This country can deal with the unemployment situation without any difficulty if it is kept where it belongs—at home.

Then the month of August came along, and President Hoover issued the following statement on August 7:

With the organized cooperation of local and State and Federal authorities, and the large number of relief and charitable organizations, the problem was successfully handled last winter. Already many States and municipalities have begun to lay the foundations for action necessary to meet their problems.

Then on August 10 Senator Fess went down and had lunch with President Hoover. This was August 10, 1931. The New York Times correspondent, interviewing the late Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], printed the following:

The Senator, who had luncheon with President Hoover, said the President was seeking diligently to find a plan adequate to deal with the unemployment situation without committing the Government to the dole idea.

From that time on, if one reads back through the newspapers of that date, he will find that any effort by the Government to be of assistance was castigated and characterized by the President as being the dole system; and an effort was made to make use of that term because it was thought it might be objectionable to the American people.

The committee which Colonel Woods started and Mr. Croxton finished died out in the summer of 1931; and on August 19, 1931, the President decided to have a new committee to take care of the problem of unemployment. On that date he appointed Walter S. Gifford, who was the head of the telephone company throughout the country, as chairman of the new committee to handle unemployment. The President issued this statement:

The task of proper assistance to the deserving is one which will appeal to the generosity and humility of our whole people. It is a task which our Nation will perform, for in no people is there developed a higher sense of local responsibility and of responsibility of every man to his neighbor.

Constantly he was harping upon the idea that the problem was a local one, in which the man should take care of his less fortunate neighbors who might be around him in his own block or in the next block.

Mr. Gifford later was called before the Senate Committee on Manufactures on the La Follette-Costigan bill, and he testified as follows concerning his work. I quote:

The central organization in Washington, my organization, was not to do anything other than to encourage the States to do the work.

In other words, when President Hoover appointed this committee, according to its chairman, he told the committee that the only thing it was to do was to encourage somebody else to take care of the needy. Continuing the quotation:

In other words, the responsibility was to be left squarely with the States, counties, and communities. * * * In brief, the principle underlying the relief activities throughout the country has been that first, if possible, the individual community would look after its own; next, if necessary, the county would help; then, if the county was unable to meet the needs, the State would help. Should the community and State responsibility be lessened by Federal aid, the sincere and whole-hearted efforts of hundreds of thousands of volunteers engaged both in raising and administering relief funds would doubtless be materially lessened. * * *

Federal aid might be a disservice to the unemployed, and the situation can be better handled as it is being handled.

That was the voice of the man whom the President put in charge of the program for the country. "Let John do it. Let the neighbors do it. Let the communities do it. Let the counties do it. But do not let the Federal Government have anything to do with it; because if the Federal Government had anything to do with it, the neighbors next door or in the next block might lose their enthusiasm and might not help out and send over the old clothes that they had, or their worn-out shoes, or perhaps a little breakfast for the children in the family which was unemployed." That was the system which President Hoover advocated.

On May 31, 1932, the President addressed the Senate. He said this:

I hold that the maintenance of the sense of individual and personal responsibility of men to their neighbors and the proper separation of functions of the Federal and local governments requires the maintenance of the fundamental principle that the obligation of distress rests upon the individuals, upon the communities, and upon the States.

Yet today he says that when I stated that that was his idea, I lied, or repeated an old lie. I will admit that I repeated a statement which was a matter of common knowledge throughout the country. As I stated, I am not going to do anything more than ask the implication with reference to the statement in former President Hoover's telegram of last Monday.

On July 11, 1932, Mr. Hoover vetoed H. R. 12445, of the Seventy-second Congress, entitled "An act to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such a program."

There were certain parts of that bill to which he did not object. As I said, he did not object to the part of the bill which permitted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend money to the banks. He did not object to the part of the bill which permitted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend money to the railroad companies. However, when it came to an appropriation of $332,000,000 for public works which would make it possible for the Federal Government to provide employment to some of the unemployed, he vetoed the bill and pointed out specifically that that part of the bill was the part to which he objected.

In November 1931, as a part of the President's program to arouse enthusiasm among the people to take care of their neighbors, a national broadcast was carried on. I remember it. I remember that I was particularly struck with the speech which was made during that broadcast by Mary Pickford, whom I had theretofore thought of only as a great actress, but who through her remarks of that evening distinguished herself as one who was really interested in the welfare of the great masses of the people. Will Rogers also spoke upon that program. I know that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. LEE] will be interested because of the fact that he comes from the State of Oklahoma, and the fact that one of the proudest things of which the people of Oklahoma may speak is that Will Rogers may properly be claimed by them as one of their citizens. In customary Will Rogers style, he spoke during that broadcast in November 1931. He said this:

Mr. Owen D. Young and Mr. Gifford asked me to annoy on this program. You have just heard Mr. Gifford, the biggest hello man in the world—

Mr. Gifford, as I explained, was the head of the telephone company—a very fine, high-caliber man, but what a job he has got! Mr. Hoover just told him, "Gifford, I have a remarkable job for you; you are to feed the several million unemployed."

"With what?" says Gifford.

"That's what makes the job remarkable. If you had something to do with it, it wouldn't be remarkable."

Mr. Merle Thorpe, who was editor of Nation's Business, was the assistant to Mr. Gifford on this committee; and on January 28, 1932, he made a speech. He was not speaking as an individual, not as the editor of Nation's Business, but as the assistant director of the President's program on unemployment. He said this:

I am not given to prediction. You will search in vain to find any statement from me during the past 2 years as to when the "corner" would be turned.

Even Merle Thorpe dodged and ducked at that particular favorite saying of President Hoover.

But I shall venture a prediction tonight: If we embark upon direct Federal aid for the unemployed, as we are being urged to do in and out of the Congress, we shall not see better times for a period of years, and then only after a political revolution, or worse.

It has been said that the only lesson we learn from history is that we learn no lesson from history. Rome did not begin by furnishing grain free to the inhabitants of Rome. Aspiring politicians, competing for public favor, insisted on lower and lower prices, until the citizens of Rome were furnished grain free of charge. The contest between politicians to bestow popular favor afterward placed pork on the free list, then wine, and then came free circuses. We all know the result. Historians are unanimous on this point: Character disintegrated and the proud citizens of Rome in the end lost their liberty and the Roman Empire was destroyed.

But we do not need to go as far back into history. England has built up the greatest vested interest of all times in her unemployment relief. A powerful bureaucracy grows and fattens upon it. Political parties are dependent for their lives upon the perpetuation of unemployment.

When England first began to take care of the unemployed, she, like Rome, had no idea that it would lead to the dole. England, as we are doing today in the United States, developed a sloppy sentimentalism that the Government should care for its people.

Just stop and think. President Hoover objected to my very mild statement the other night, but the assistant director of his committee on unemployment said that we were developing "a sloppy sentimentalism that the Government should care for its people." It was just sloppy sentiment so far as President Hoover and his committee were concerned.

When old-age pensions were adopted England took the first step to destroy the foundations of thrift. Labor exchanges and unemployment insurance were then introduced on the idiotic idea that it was the duty of the Government to find its citizens work.

The idiotic theory that the Government had some responsibility for finding work for its citizens. And yet President Hoover calls me a liar when I say that he was contending that it was not the responsibility of government to take care of those who through no fault of their own were unable to find employment.

The time came for the campaign. On May 21, 1932, President Hoover wrote a long letter to Mr. Richard S. Parker, president of the American Society of Civil Engineers, of New York. At this point I read briefly from one paragraph of it:

I am in receipt of your kind letter of May 19, and I have also the presentation of the subcommittee of the society suggesting that the depression can be broken by a large issue of Federal Government bonds to finance a new program of huge expansion of "public works" construction, in addition to the already large programs now provided for in the current budgets.

It will be remembered that President Hoover vetoed a $332,000,000 appropriation as being too large, and that the total amount of Federal expenditures from 1929 through 1932 increased only to the extent of $429,000,000.

The same proposals have been made from other quarters and have been given serious consideration during the past few days.

The back of the depression cannot be broken by any single Government undertaking. That can only be done with the cooperation of business, banking, industry, and agriculture in conjunction with the Government.

He then goes on to outline a program. Nowhere in that program is there a single suggestion of any responsibility on the part of the Government toward those who are unemployed, or of assistance to those who through no fault of their own are unable to find work.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire letter be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of May 23, 1932]

HOOVER'S WARNING ON PUBLIC WORKS BONDS

WASHINGTON, May 22.—President Hoover's letter to President Parker, of the American Society of Civil Engineers, read as follows:
MAY 21, 1932.

RICHARD S. PARKER,
President, American Society of Civil Engineers,
New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. PARKER: I am in receipt of your kind letter of May 19, and I have also the presentation of the subcommittee of the society suggesting that the depression can be broken by a large issue of Federal Government bonds to finance a new program of huge expansion of "public works" construction, in addition to the already large programs now provided for in the current Budgets. The same proposals have been made from other quarters and have been given serious consideration during the past few days.

The back of the depression cannot be broken by any single Government undertaking. That can only be done with the cooperation of business, banking, industry, and agriculture in conjunction with the Government.

RELIEF PROGRAM OUTLINED

The aid the Government may give includes:

(a) The quick, honest balancing of the Federal Budget through drastic reduction of less necessary expenses and the minimum increase in taxes.

(b) The avoidance of issue of further Treasury securities as the very keystone of national and international confidence upon which all employment rests.

(c) The continuation of the work of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which has overcome the financial strain on thousands of small banks, releasing credit to their communities; the strengthening of building and loan associations, the furnishing of credit to agriculture, the protection of trustee institutions, and the support of financial stability of the railways.

(d) The expansion of credit by the Federal Reserve Banks.

(e) The organized translation of these credits into actualities for business and public bodies.

(f) Unceasing effort at sound strengthening of the foundations of agriculture.

(g) The continuation of such public works in aid to unemployment as does not place a strain on the taxpayer and do not necessitate Government borrowing.

(h) Continuation of national, community, and individual efforts in relief of distress.

(i) The introduction of the 5-day week in government, which would save the discharge of 100,000 employees and would add 30,000 to the present list.

(j) The passage of the Home Loan Discount Bank legislation, which would protect home owners from foreclosure and would furnish millions of dollars of employment in home improvement without cost to the Treasury.

(k) Financial aid by means of loans from the Reconstruction Corporation to such States as, due to the long strain, are unable to continue to finance distress relief.

(l) The extension of the authority of the Reconstruction Corporation not only in a particular I called attention to last December—that is, loans on sound security to industry where they would sustain and expand employment—but also in view of the further contraction of credit to increase its authority to expand the issue of its own securities up to $3,000,000,000 for the purpose of organized aid to "income-producing" work throughout the Nation, both of public and private character.

OBJECTIONS TO PROPOSALS

1. The vice in that segment of the proposals made by your society and others for further expansion of "public works" is that they include public works of remote usefulness; they impose unbearable burdens upon the taxpayer; they unbalance the Budget and demoralize Government credit. A larger and far more effective relief to unemployment at this stage can be secured by increased aid to "income-producing works." I wish to emphasize this distinction between what for purposes of this discussion we may term "income-producing works" (also referred to as "self-liquidating works") on the one hand and nonproductive "public works" on the other.

By "income-producing works" I mean such projects of States, counties, and other subdivisions as waterworks, toll bridges, toll tunnels, docks, and any other such activities which charge for their service and whose earning capacity provides a return upon the investment. With the return of normal times the bonds of such official bodies based upon such projects can be disposed of to the investing public and thus make the intervention of the Reconstruction Corporation purely an emergency activity.

I include in this class aid to established industry where it would sustain and increase employment, with the safeguard that loans for these purposes should be made on sound security and the proprietors of such industries should provide a portion of the capital. Nonproductive "public works," in the sense of the term here used, include public buildings, highways, streets, river and harbor improvement, military and naval construction, etc., which bring no income and comparatively little relief to unemployment.

FORMS OF RELIEF CONTRASTED

2. I can perhaps make this distinction clear by citing the example of the recent action of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the matter of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. on one hand, and the recent bill passed by the House of Representatives for increased road building on the other. The railroad company applied to the Reconstruction Corporation for a loan of $55,000,000 to help finance a fund of over $68,000,000 needed to electrify certain of its lines. By so doing it would employ directly and indirectly for 1 year more than 28,000 men distributed over 20 different States. An arrangement was concluded by which the Reconstruction Corporation undertook to stand behind the plan to the extent of $27,000,000, the railway company finding the balance.

This $27,000,000 is to be loaned on sound securities and will be returned, capital and interest, to the Corporation. The Reconstruction Corporation is acting as agent to make available otherwise timid capital for the Pennsylvania Railroad in providing employment. There is no charge upon the taxpayer.

On the other hand, the proposal of the House of Representatives is to spend $132,000,000 for subsidies to the States for construction of highways. This would be a direct charge on the taxpayer. The total number of men to be directly employed is estimated at 35,000 and indirectly 20,000 more. In other words, by this action we would give employment to only 55,000 men at the expense by the Government of $132,000,000, which will never be recovered.

In the one instance, we recover the money advanced through the Reconstruction Corporation, we issue no Government bonds, we have no charge on the taxpayer. In the other instance, we have not only a direct cost to the taxpayer but also a continuing maintenance charge; and, furthermore, the highways in many sections have now been expanded beyond immediate public need.

BUDGET FACTOR EMPHASIZED

3. These proposals of huge expansion of "public works" have a vital relation to balancing the Federal Budget and to the stabilizing of national credit. The financing of "income-producing works" by the Reconstruction Corporation is an investment operation, requires no congressional appropriation, does not unbalance the Budget, is not a drain upon the Treasury, does not involve the direct issue of Government bonds, does not involve added burdens upon the taxpayer, either now or in the future. It is an emergency operation which will liquidate itself with the return of the investor to the money markets.

The proposal to build nonproductive "public works" of the category I have described necessitates making increased appropriations by the Congress. These appropriations must be financed by immediate increased taxation or by the issuance of Government bonds. Whatever the method employed, they are, inescapably, a burden upon the taxpayer. If such a course is adopted beyond the amounts already provided in the Budget now before Congress for the next fiscal year, it will upset all possibility of balancing the Budget; it will destroy confidence in Government securities and make for the instability of the Government, which, in result, will deprive more people of employment than will be gained.

HUGE PUBLIC WORKS OUTLAY NOW

4. I have for many years advocated the speeding up of public works in times of depression as an aid to business and unemployment. That has been done upon a huge scale and is proceeding at as great a pace as fiscal stability will warrant. All branches of government—Federal, State, and municipal—have greatly expanded their "public works" and have now reached a stage where they have anticipated the need for many such works for a long time to come. Therefore, the new projects which might be undertaken are of even more remote usefulness.

From January 1930, to July 1, 1932, the Federal Government will have expended $1,500,000,000 on "public works." The Budget for the next fiscal year carries a further $575,000,000 of such expenditures [compared with about $250,000,000 normal] and includes all the items I have felt are justified by sound engineering and sound finance. Thus by the end of next year the Federal Government will have expended over $2,000,000,000 on public works, which represents an increase over normal of perhaps $1,200,000,000.

Thus we have largely anticipated the future and have rendered further expansion beyond our present program of very remote usefulness and certainly not justified for some time to come, even were there no fiscal difficulties. They represent building of a community beyond its necessities. We cannot thus squander ourselves into prosperity.

MANY PROJECTS REQUIRE YEARS

5. A still further and overriding reason for not undertaking such programs of further expansions of Federal "public works" is evident if we examine the individual projects which might be undertaken from an engineering and economic point of view. The Federal public works now authorized by law cover works which it was intended to construct over a long term of years and embrace several projects which were not of immediate public usefulness. In any event, the total of such authorized projects, still incomplete on the 1st of July, will amount to perhaps $1,300,000,000.

If we deduct from this at once the budgeted program for the next fiscal year—$575,000,000—we leave roughly $725,000,000 of such authorized works which would be open for action. If we examine these projects in detail, we find great deductions must be made from this sum. Construction of many projects physically requires years for completion, such as naval vessels, buildings, canalization of rivers, etc., and therefore as an engineering necessity this sum could only be expended over 4 or 5 years; a portion of the projects not already started will require legal and technical preparation and therefore could not be brought to the point of employment of labor during the next year; a portion of these authorized projects are outside the continental United States and do not contribute to the solution of our problem; a portion are in localities where there is little unemployment; a portion are in the District of Columbia, where we already have a large increase in program for the next fiscal year and where no additional work could be justified. A portion are of remote utility and are not justified, such as extension of agricultural acreage, at the present time.

GREAT EXPANSION HELD IMPOSSIBLE

Deducting all these cases from the actual list of authorized Federal public works, it will be found that there is less than $100,000,000 (and this is doubtful) which could be expended during the next fiscal year beyond the program in the Budget. That means the employment of, say, less than 40,000 men. Thus the whole of these grandiose contentions of possible expansion of Federal public works fall absolutely to the ground for these reasons, if there were no other.

If it is contemplated that we legislate more authorizations of new and unconsidered projects by Congress, we shall find ourselves confronted by a log-rolling process which will include dredging of mud creeks, building of unwarranted post offices, unprofitable irrigation projects, duplicate highways, and a score of other unjustifiable activities.

6. There is still another phase of this matter to which I would like to call attention. Employment in public works is largely transitory. It does not have a follow-up of continued employment, as is the case with income-producing works. But of even more importance than this, the program I have proposed gives people employment in all parts of the country in their normal jobs under normal conditions at the normal place of abode, tends to reestablish normal processes in business and industry, and will do so on a much larger scale than the projects proposed in the so-called public-works program.

BALANCING OF BUDGET VITAL

7. To sum up, it is generally agreed that the balancing of the Federal Budget and unimpaired national credit is indispensable to the restoration of confidence and to the very start of economic recovery. The administration and Congress have pledged themselves to this end. A public-works program, such as is suggested by your committee and by others, through the issuance of Federal bonds creates at once an enormous further deficit.

What is needed is the return of confidence and a capital market through which credit will flow in the thousand rills with its result of employment and increased prices. That confidence will be only destroyed by action in these directions. These channels will continue clogged by fears if we continue attempts to issue large amounts of Government bonds for purposes of nonproductive works.

Such a program as these huge Federal loans for public works is a fearful price to pay in putting a few thousand men temporarily at work and dismissing many more thousands of others from their present employment. There is vivid proof of this since these proposals of public works financed by Government bonds were seriously advanced a few days ago. Since then United States Government bonds have shown marked weakness on the mere threat, and it is followed at once by a curtailment of the ability of States, municipalities, and industry to issue bonds, and thus a curtailment of activities which translate themselves into decreased employment.

It will serve no good purpose and will fool no one to try to cover appearances by resorting to a so-called extraordinary budget. That device is well known. It brought the governments of certain foreign governments to the brink of financial disaster. It means a breach of faith to holders of all Government securities, an unsound financial program, and a severe blow to returning confidence and further contraction of economic activities in the country.

What you want and what I want is to restore normal employment. I am confident that if the program I have proposed to the Congress is expeditiously completed and we have the cooperation of the whole community, we will attain the objective for which we have been searching so long.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then the Republican Party, in a condition of despair, appreciating the helplessness and hopelessness of their task, held a national convention and nominated Mr. Hoover for reelection. On August 11, 1932, in Constitution Hall in this city, with great dignity the then President went through the formality of accepting what he must have known was the worthless nomination which was tendered to him for reelection by the Republican Party.

I have before me a copy of his speech of acceptance. I do not intend to read it all; in fact, I shall read only a very small portion of it. On August 1932 the depression had been going on for a period of almost 3 years; millions upon millions of unemployed were treading the streets of our cities looking for work. Yet throughout the course of this entire address of acceptance there was not even the slightest semblance of a recognition by Mr. Hoover of the seriousness of the problem, or that he might have any responsibility, or that the Government might have any responsibility, or that the Republican Party, which from 1921 to 1929 had fostered and protected periods of speculative expansion in this country in order to permit a few who had so generously donated to the Republican campaign fund to have an opportunity to become rich, might have any responsibility. But, limiting myself only to that portion of the address which is of importance in this discussion, I quote from the bottom of page 5, as follows:

The function of the Federal Government in these times is to use its reserve powers and its strength for the protection of citizens and local governments by support to our institutions against forces beyond their control. It is not the function of the Government to relieve individuals of their responsibilities to their neighbors—or to relieve private institutions of their responsibilities to the public, or of local government to the States, or of State governments to the Federal Government.

Once again the same old clarion cry of the responsibility of the individual to his neighbors—

That quotation is from his speech of acceptance in 1932. Even after the lapse of the period of time I have indicated he still was not willing to recognize the seriousness of the situation or the responsibility of the Government.

There is one more quotation which I desire to read. During the course of the campaign on October 22, 1932, President Hoover went to Detroit and made a speech in regard to the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, and he said this:

Various conferences were carried on in an endeavor to arrive at an adequate relief bill, expanding activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but the Democratic leaders insisted not upon economy but upon inclusion in it of a new item of $322,000,000 of further expenditures from the Federal Treasury. Ultimately this bill passed Congress, containing not only these provisions but also measures putting the Government into wholesale pawnbroking with unlimited use of Federal Government credit. On July 11 I vetoed this bill.

I referred to the veto message a few moments ago.

On July 11 I vetoed this bill and again protested about the item of $322,000,000, requesting at least, that such a reservation to be made as would hold back the expenditure until it could be determined if the Budget be balanced.

It will be remembered that earlier in my remarks I pointed out that the only thing he did during the first year after the depression started was to bring about the enactment by the Congress of tax legislation which would reduce the amount of tax revenue of the Government by $160,000,000 a year. Yet more than 2 years later, when the Congress, recognizing the necessity for some assistance to the unemployed, appropriated $322,000,000 to be used on public works, President Hoover vetoed the bill, and in this campaign speech he not only mentioned that fact but he boasted that he had vetoed it.

I quote further from President Hoover's speech at Detroit on October 22, 1932:

In order to secure the relief bill at all, with these very vital provisions in relief of distress, employment, and agriculture, I was compelled finally to accept it with inadequate safeguards to that $322,000,000, and this expenditure has been forced upon the Government by the Democratic leaders.

Yet last Monday, in the course of his statement that I had lied about him, and in the course of his request that the Senator from Kansas correct the statement that I had made, he points with pride to the fact that there was a public-works program in the United States under his administration.

Of course, there was a public-works program, but not at the request, not by the assistance, not even with the acquiescence of President Hoover. When the matter first came before him he vetoed it, and, when he was compelled to sign the bill, he complained in his speech of October 22, 1932, that he was compelled to sign the bill because it contained other measures for agriculture and provisions for the R. F. C.

I do not believe any fair-minded individual can listen to these various quotations from President Hoover and from his leaders, the men whom he put in direct charge and who had direct responsibility to him so far as the unemployment problem was concerned, without agreeing with the statement I made last Sunday night concerning the attitude which existed during the administration of President Hoover on the part of President Hoover.

As I have said, I think it is unfortunate that former President Hoover should get himself into such a state of mind that he would use language such as he used last Monday. If the statements I have made, the quotations I have read, disprove the statement of President Hoover of last Monday, I am not asking anybody to conclude that I am calling President Hoover a liar; I am not doing so. I am simply asking Senators to conclude that President Hoover forgot.

He has forgotten everything he said from 1929 to 1932. He has forgotten all the unemployed; he has forgotten everything else that went on during that time; and I am asking Senators to believe that he now sincerely believes that when he was President of the United States he did everything he could do to help the unemployed, because I do not want to be in the position described by a witness before the Appropriations Committee who was compelled to apologize last week for calling somebody a liar, and he said he was sorry, because he realized that no gentleman in public ever called anyone else a liar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calhoun, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS. I present a conference report on House bill 6970, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 4.
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$294,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment after the sum "$35,000" insert the following: "payable from funds of the Work Projects Administration"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead

Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 6970.

Mr. HOLT. What report is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is the report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to consider unobjectioned-to bills on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 783) to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 784) for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 790) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1222) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 767) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 864) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 498) authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muscogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2971) for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 570) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) opposing sales of American cotton during the present world crisis to foreign purchasers below the cost of production was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2202) to establish a Public Works Agency was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2203) to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) for the relief of W. K. Richardson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1730) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to be transferred to positions under the competitive classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS IN WAR WITH SPAIN

The bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I hope we may have consideration of this bill in the near future.

I have previously invited the attention of the Senate to this measure, the so-called Spanish War travel-pay bill, and have urged that it be taken up and passed, for the reason that I have always felt that the claim covered by the bill was an obligation of the Government to a group of its brave volunteer soldiers, which should long since have been discharged. The bill has been on the calendar with a favorable report from the Committee on Claims for several weeks, after having previously passed the House.

I again urge the passage of the bill. In support of it, I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a statement made by a Kansan who was among the soldiers volunteering to remain in the Philippine Islands beyond the term of his enlistment for the purpose of assisting to put down the Philippine Insurrection, upon the promise of his commanding officer, the War Department, and the President that soldiers who volunteered to remain in the Philippines would be given travel pay. This statement is made by Mr. Harry W. Brent, of Topeka, Kans., former sergeant major of the Twentieth Kansas Infantry, and now secretary of the Twentieth Kansas Association. It is an interesting and convincing narration of the facts which constitute the background of the travel-pay claim.

The Twentieth Kansas Infantry was one of the volunteer organizations which participated in the Philippine Insurrection, and no regiment engaged in the Philippine campaign had a more brilliant record. I do not see how anyone can read the statement of Mr. Brent and fail to be impressed by the justice of the claim upon which House bill 289 is based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be placed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

PHILIPPINE TRAVEL PAY—WHAT IS IT?

Prior to the Spanish-American War, when a soldier's term of enlistment expired, and he was discharged, he was given travel pay from the place of his discharge to the place of his original enlistment, all of his unused clothing allowance, and 1 month's extra pay. During the Spanish-American War, 2 months' extra pay was allowed for foreign service. Travel pay was the term applied to that portion of the settlement and was for the purpose of paying his way from the place of his discharge to the place where he originally enlisted. In the old days, a march of 20 miles was considered a day's travel, so he was paid on the basis of 1 day's pay for each 20 miles of travel. The travel-pay proposition was not a new one, but was the customary way of settling with a soldier at the time of his discharge, and had been for many years. In the event of his reenlistment in the service he always received this travel pay at the end of the enlistment period, as a sort of bonus. This method of settlement was not changed until January 1, 1899, when it became necessary to make provision for the discharge of the Volunteers serving in the Philippines.

The Volunteer soldiers, who had enlisted for 2 years, or during the war, were entitled to their discharge when the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain became effective on April 11, 1899.

PRESIDENT ASKED VOLUNTEERS TO STAY 6 MONTHS

On February 4, 1899, the Philippine Insurrection started, and on April 11, 1899, all of the Volunteer soldiers were on the firing lines. On March 6 Adjutant General Corbin cabled General Otis as follows:

"Section 15 of the Army bill reads in part as follows:

"The President is authorized to enlist temporarily in service for absolutely necessary purposes in the Philippine Islands, Volunteers, officers, and men individually or by organization and about to be discharged, provided their retention shall not extend beyond the time necessary to replace them by troops authorized to be maintained under the provisions of this act and not beyond a period of 6 months."

The President inquires as follows: "If we are not able to get you sufficient forces to replace Volunteers under your command before exchange of ratification of treaty, will you be able to enlist your Volunteer force under this section?"

Immediately upon receiving this cablegram, General Otis called a conference of about 30 officers of the Volunteer organizations. He showed them this message sent by authority of the President and promised this group of officers that all those agreeing to stay the 6 months would receive travel pay and at the end of their service would be transported to their homes. The officers went out and contacted all of the units of the State Volunteer organizations, setting forth this cablegram and asking whether the officers and men would reenlist on that basis. The matter was handled differently by different regiments, some taking it right down to the men themselves and they voted to stay. Others were widely scattered and could not bring all of the men together, and the officers themselves of the different units or regiments spoke for the men and agreed to reenlist and stay for the period desired by Congress and the President.

Lt. A. H. Krause, Company H, Twentieth Kansas, suggested then that the men be mustered out and mustered in again, and there would be no question about the travel pay. The idea was "pooh-poohed" and he was almost ostracized for having the temerity to suggest that the Government might take advantage of a technicality.

GENERAL OTIS FACED A DESPERATE SITUATION

Here was the situation: Aguinaldo was pounding at the gates of Manila, and had a well-trained army of 30,000 to 40,000, equipped for the most part with a much better firearm than we had—the German Mauser having 500 to 1,000 yards more effective range than the old Springfield. General Otis had an army of 15,000 volunteers and about 5,000 regulars to cope with the situation. We were 10,000 miles from our home base, and after the receipt of the cablegram from Adjutant General Corbin, it was just 5 weeks before the treaty of peace became effective and all of these men were entitled to their discharge, and it would take 4 weeks to bring other men from San Francisco to Manila, even if they were ready to embark; but it would take 6 months to enlist, equip, and train an army to take our place. The Twentieth Kansas boarded their ship on October 27 and dropped anchor in the bay of Manila on December 1, taking 35 days to make the trip. Can you imagine a more desperate situation than that faced by General Otis at that time? If these volunteers took their discharge, General Otis would have had 5,000 men to hold back a horde of 30,000 to 40,000 Philippine patriots, whose principal idea at that time was to burn, ravage, and destroy. There was no time to dicker for better enlistment terms, so he went the limit of his authority in offering travel pay for this temporary enlistment and transportation home at the end of the service.

On March 16, 1899, General Otis replied to General Corbin's cablegram as follows:

"Believed after inquiry majority volunteer organizations willing to reenlist for 6 months from ratification of treaty, provided that upon original discharge are paid traveling allowances to places of muster-in, and that after expiration of second enlistment they are transported to those places by United States."

On settling with us at muster-out, the travel pay was not included, and when asked about it, the paymaster stated that it would require an authorization by Congress, but he said "Congress will undoubtedly pass such an act to pay you," but the Congress that was to authorize that payment has not yet assembled. This proposition was presented to the War Department, to the Court of Claims, and to the Comptroller General. In each instance the claim was turned down with the statement that it was not a legal claim, but that it was a moral claim. In a number of cases the various Government bureaus stated that in order for the claim to be legal we should have been mustered out and then mustered in again. If that had been done, we would have received our money many years ago.

QUALITY OF VOLUNTEER SERVICE

Secretary of War R. A. Alger, in his report on that period, said:

"Any discussion of affairs in the Philippines would be manifestly incomplete which did not include the highest eulogiums upon the western volunteers who remained in the Philippines fighting for their country's honor after they were legally entitled to discharge and return to the United States. The ratification of the treaty of peace February 6, 1899, practically entitled all volunteer regiments and the individual members of the Regular Army, numbering many thousands, who enlisted for the war, to immediate discharge from the Army. And yet some of these volunteers did not leave the Philippines until 4 months subsequent to that date, while several of the regiments remained defending their country's flag for 7 months afterward. This is an exhibition of sturdy patriotism which, it seems to me, has never been fully appreciated. No complaint ever came from these soldiers on account of the hardships ever forming part of war, or for the delay in being returned to their homes after they were entitled to discharge. They yielded to the situation as cheerfully as they endured the great and fatiguing privations of hauling guns and carts over the mountain passes and through trails of muck and mire, under the enervating blaze of a tropical sun, when even the native draft animals had been overcome with heat exhaustion.

"The Nation, indeed, owes these noble soldiers a debt which I trust Congress will not fail to recognize in some substantial way."

CONDITION OF MEN AFTER 5 MONTHS' CONTINUOUS SERVICE ON FIRING LINE

The following report of Maj. Henry F. Hoyt to the Surgeon General, United States Army, will give some idea of the hardships endured and its effect upon the men:

"I have the honor to submit herewith report of special examination as made by the writer of the First South Dakota Volunteer Infantry, one of the units of this division, on account of complaints from headquarters at Manila that 'so many men from this expedition have been sent in from duty for treatment.'"

"These men have been on the firing line, in the trenches, or on outpost duty almost continuously since February 4, 1899. Their sleep has been broken night after night by the now famous night attacks of the enemy, and during a great part of this time they have been exposed to the tropical sun at midday, poor water, no shelter at night, no bathing facilities or change of clothing, and from date of leaving Calumpit there was about 2 weeks of subsistence on 'travel rations' only. This somewhat extensive campaign has demonstrated the fact that the white man in the Tropics cannot endure the same amount of nerve tension and physical exertion that he can in the Temperate Zone.

"From many personal inspections, careful observation during this campaign, together with the result of the above examination, it is the opinion of the writer that the entire Second Division, Eighth Army Corps, is near a physical break-down, and it is herewith recommended that each unit be relieved from duty as rapidly as they can be replaced with fresh troops and sent in from the front for rest and recuperation.

"Very respectfully,

"HENRY F. HOYT,

"Major and Chief Surgeon, United States Volunteers."

MORAL CLAIM

The War Department, the Court of Claims, and the Comptroller General all admit that this travel-pay claim is a moral claim. The testimony of officers who were called in conference by General Otis upon receipt of the cablegram from General Corbin was to the effect that he offered travel pay to all who would stay for this period of 6 months, and asked these officers to go out to the various volunteer units and make that offer to them, and the overwhelming testimony is that these officers, acting as representatives of General Otis, did go out and contact every unit.

Excerpt from the statement of Col. Frank D. Eager, First Nebraska, to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on a bill to compensate officers and soldiers in the volunteer service who served in the Philippine Islands beyond the period of their enlistment:

"I was one of those of a group of probably 30 officers whom General Otis called to conference upon receiving this cablegram from President McKinley. * * * General Otis was very much concerned. * * * The Government was absolutely dependent upon the services of these volunteers. * * * But the promise was made in conformity with General Otis' cable that they would be paid this travel pay. Why did that seem reasonable to these men? I am a son of a veteran of the Civil War. Probably half the veterans of the Spanish-American War were sons of veterans of the Civil War. I knew of the bounty provisions that had been made in the Civil War, making a provision for this added service. The men accepted it. The question was asked by the chairman a while ago whether its corroboration was assumed by the War Department. I say 'yes' in this way, that they received and accepted the services of these men.

"This, gentleman, was a debt of honor that was incurred in good faith under the direction of Maj. Gen. Elwood S. Otis, commander of the United States Army in the Philippines, and he had the right to make that contract, because the War Department cannot deny that a major general commanding a separate detachment of the United States Army in a foreign field may enter into a contract in the name of the Government. Did not General Otis tell me and others of my command to go into the harbor and get a shipload of refrigerator beef, for which he gave the receipt of the United States to the ship for so many pounds of beef, and did not the War Department pay that bill afterward? If he could do that, why would any of his officers and soldiers think he could not say to me and have it carried out, that he would pay the travel pay to the soldier's home, which we claim independent of Army service under a major general in a foreign field with general authority to do anything he actually does? I have a bunch of letters for the record. Every one of them are from men who refer to them as promises, and to them it was a promise. I think that is all I have to say, but there are some debts as important as legal ones, and this is one of them."

LEGAL CLAIMS

If, in order for a claim against the Government to be legal, the item must be specifically mentioned in some legislative enactment, then, of course, our claim is without legal foundation. There is an old saying that the "King can do no wrong," and that would apply to governments also. If these volunteers had been dealing with individuals, there would have been no question about the legality of the claim, and if the claim of legality applies to governments, then there is no question about this being a legal claim.

The law providing for the temporary enlistment of the volunteers authorized the President to enlist them, and if the law authorized him to do it, then the law gave him authority to do whatever was necessary to carry that law into execution. Since the President was over 10,000 miles from the place of enlistment, he authorized General Otis, who was on the ground, to act as his representative. General Otis had just 5 weeks' time to carry out this order, and if the volunteers took their discharge as they had a right to do, the balance of the United States Army faced possible destruction—a hostile army of 30,000 to 40,000, with a defensive army of 5,000. He had no time to dicker for terms; he had to know at once. Therefore, this law gave him the authority, if he thought it was necessary to make the offer of travel pay, in order to obtain these enlistments. And if he didn't think it was necessary, why did he make the offer?

Colonel Eager, in his testimony before the War Claims Committee of the House, stated that General Otis had commandeered a shipload of beef, giving a receipt in the name of the United States, which claim later was paid by the War Department. If he had authority to commandeer feed for the Army, to sustain the lives of the men of that Army, certainly he had the right to make contracts, the ultimate end of which would preserve that Army from destruction.

It is over 40 years since this money was due us, and we should get double the amount of our claim, but we are not asking for that; we are asking only for the amount of the original claim, and even if the claim is allowed, we won't get all of that. We have had to hire attorneys to try to get the money for us, and to keep our claim alive, and when we get the money, if we ever do, we will have to give some of it to these attorneys, who have been working for us all these years. The Government admits if we had been mustered out and mustered in again, we would have been paid years ago.

I have read that it is one of the rules of law that a litigant, in order to maintain an action, must go into court with clean hands; that one of the litigants cannot violate an agreement, and then plead that violation as cause for the failure to carry out the contract, and yet the Government has done that very thing. Rather a doubtful example to set before its citizens.

The Federal Government has spent billions of dollars on every kind of a project from A to Z. In some States it has spent billions of dollars to build dams, to impound more water, to irrigate more land, to grow more crops, and in other States, it has paid billions of dollars to farmers to plow up crops, to kill pigs, and to reduce crops of all kinds. The Federal Government can pour out money like a drunken sailor on experiments of all kinds, but when it comes to paying a debt which has been due for 40 years, a debt which has been acknowledged to be a moral debt by all Government departments which pass on these kinds of claims, we wrap the mantle of economic virtue about us and pass by on the other side, saying: "It isn't our policy to pay that kind of claims," or "They got a badge for that service," or "We now must balance the Budget."

And yet these soldiers answered the call of their country when it needed them desperately, when the Government asked each soldier individually if he would stay, and many of them made the supreme sacrifice after they were entitled to their discharge.

HARRY W. BRENT,

Sergeant Major, Twentieth Kansas Volunteer Infantry,
Topeka, Kans.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5375) to promote nautical education, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 773) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment on any and all claims which the Yakima Indian Tribes may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT OF 1921

The bill (S. 446) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that Calendar No. 680, House bill 4998, be considered in lieu of Senate bill 446.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what the bill is?

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the bill was objected to when called.

Mr. GILLETTE. I shall be very glad to make the explanation.

This bill is identical in form with one which passed the Senate unanimously in the last Congress, but was not acted on by the House. It contains two provisions amending the Packers and Stockyards Act. It has nothing to do with packers, notwithstanding its title. It deals entirely with stockyards and stock dealers.

The bill provides two things. One is that the Secretary of Agriculture shall fix a just and reasonable rate of charge for the services, which the present law also provides; but it will compel the dealers, after the rate is fixed, to perform the service for that rate; not a lower figure or a higher figure. The second thing done by the bill is to place these agencies, as the Supreme Court has placed them, in the category of public utilities, and provide that new agencies which desire to engage in the business shall make a showing to the Secretary of Agriculture and secure a certificate of convenience and necessity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator repeat his request for consideration?

Mr. GILLETTE. I requested that Calendar No. 680, which is House bill 4998, be now considered in lieu of the Senate bill which we have reached on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2270) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase refuge lands within the State of South Carolina for the perpetuation of the eastern wild turkey and to provide pure-blood brood stock for restocking within its native range, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of that bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 522) to provide pensions to members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who become disabled by reason of their service therein, equivalent to 90 percent of the compensation payable to war veterans for similar service-connected disabilities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the author of the bill and the Senator who reported it, is not present. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1033) for the relief of Albert P. Dunbar was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The Department of War strongly objects to that bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. May we have an explanation of the bill? If not, I ask that it go over pending an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 188) authorizing the delegation of certain authority within the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HISTORICAL MUSEUM, CUSTER BATTLEFIELD NATIONAL CEMETERY, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 28) to provide for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "therein" to strike out "The plan and design of such memorial museum shall be subject to the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed (1) to select a site within the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont.; (2) to erect and maintain thereon, as a memorial to Lt. Col. George A. Custer and the officers and soldiers under his command at the Battle of Little Big Horn River, June 25, 1876, a public museum suitable for housing a collection of historical relics; (3) to accept on behalf of the United States for exhibit in such museum the collection of relics now a part of the estate of Mrs. George A. Custer, deceased, the wife of such Lt. Col. George A. Custer; and (4), in his discretion, to accept such other historical relics as he may deem appropriate for exhibit therein.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, to do all things necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, by contract or otherwise, with or without advertising, under such conditions as he may prescribe, including the engagement by contract of services of such architects, sculptors, artists, or firms, and such other technical and professional personnel as he may deem necessary, without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States.

Sec. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2500) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of Mary Pierce and John K. Quackenbush was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill. If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FIR-LUMBER INDUSTRY OF THE NORTHWEST

The bill (S. 1108) to restrict the exportation of certain Douglas fir peeler logs and Port Orford cedar logs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know that the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] is very anxious to have this bill passed. I objected to its consideration the other day. I have a letter from the Secretary of State in opposition to it. If the Senator desires to take up the bill I shall not object, but I shall ask that the letter from the Secretary of State be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I request the Senator to withhold his objection, so as to permit some of us to speak on the bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that we are proceeding under the 5-minute rule. I stated I would not object to the bill being taken up, although I am opposed to it; but if it is taken up, I shall ask to have the letter from the Secretary of State read to the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to have the bill taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the letter presented by the Senator from Utah.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 8, 1939.

The Honorable JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BAILEY: I refer to the request from the Senate Committee on Commerce, received February 28, 1939, for a report on S. 1108, a bill to restrict the exportation of certain Douglas fir peeler logs and Port Orford cedar logs, and for other purposes.

S. 1108, if enacted, would prohibit the exportation of Douglas fir peeler logs from the United States or any of its Territories or possessions "except with the approval of the President on the joint recommendation of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, after an application made to the Secretary of Commerce." For the purposes of the act, a peeler log is defined as "a log (a) having a diameter of 24 or more inches at either end; (b) suitable for rotary veneer cutting and capable of producing not less than 20 percent of clear veneer, based upon the scale content of the log; (c) having not less than eight annual rings per inch at the smaller end; and (d) not containing such defects as shatter, excessive splits, loose annual rings, loose or soft heart decay, or any other defect which makes such a log unsuitable for rotary veneer cutting. Any defect apparent at both ends of a log shall be considered to exist throughout a log." The act also prohibits the exportation of Port Orford cedar logs from the United States, irrespective of size or quality. Provision is made for punishment in cases of violation.

Although an unqualified prohibition on exports of the two products concerned is not provided for, it is clear that the objective of the proponents of the legislation is that exports shall be the exception rather than the rule.

There are two essential arguments advanced on behalf of this bill. It is claimed on the one hand that the bill will assist in the conservation of our Douglas fir and Port Orford cedar, which are limited in supply and difficult to replace; while on the other hand it is claimed that the exports of raw unfinished logs will be replaced by exports of finished plywood, with a consequent gain to this country of wages and other payments necessary for the conversion of the logs into plywood. One of the two arguments may be valid, but certainly not both, for the two are mutually exclusive. To the extent that the enactment of the bill would prevent the cutting of trees, conservation would result, but to the extent that it would simply shift the use of logs from foreign to domestic plywood producers no conservation would occur.

It can, however, scarcely be maintained that all Douglas-fir logs now exported would be replaced by exports of plywood. The countries which now purchase our peeler logs would shift their source of supply from the United States to Canada so far as possible, and would, if necessary, utilize other softwoods. To the extent that Canadian logs could be substituted for our logs, and to the extent that other softwoods could be used in place of Douglas fir, the logging industry of the United States would suffer a loss in production, employment, and wages. However, even if such a shift in source of supply or substitution of other logs were impossible to any great extent, it is by no means certain that foreign countries would take our plywood in increasing amounts.

It has been represented to this Department that "no other nation can or will ship this class of materials for export." As a matter of fact, however, the exports of Douglas-fir logs from Canada exceed and have a higher average unit value than the exports of such logs from the United States. (See appendix II.) It may be that more high-grade peeler logs are exported from the United States than from Canada and that some or many of the Douglas-fir logs exported from the United States to Canada are reexported from that country. Nevertheless, if the bill under consideration should become law, the plywood industries in foreign countries could obtain supplies of Douglas-fir logs from Canada. They might not be able to obtain as many high-grade peeler logs as they have been accustomed to obtain in the United States, but they doubtless could somehow adapt themselves to the use of lower grade logs. Canadian log exporters would thus be in a position to profit by any export restrictions imposed on log exports from the United States.

The one sure result of this bill would be lower prices for the logs on which the export prohibition would exist (because of the decreased market for them), with a consequent loss to the logging industry.

A study of the export figures for Douglas-fir logs (appendix I) would not lead one to fear for the preservation of the supply from that development alone. Although exports were unusually large in 1936, exceeding 130,000,000 feet b. m., they were but slightly more than half that amount in 1938. Exports of Port Orford cedar logs (appendix I), which have been classified separately only since 1936, have never been large and have declined in the last 2 years to approximately one-third of the 1936 figure.

Proponents of the bill apparently have sought to give the impression that foreign countries have made it practically impossible for our plywood manufacturers to maintain, much less expand, existing foreign markets or to find new ones. The fact is, the plywood industry has been able to develop export markets of considerable importance despite many difficulties, including foreign tariffs and other trade barriers. The United Kingdom, Belgium, and Canada have for some years been the three leading markets for American plywood. (See appendix I.) The United Kingdom alone usually accounts for nearly one-half of our total plywood exports. In the negotiations with the Government of the United Kingdom for the reciprocal-trade agreement which entered into effect on January 1 of this year, as in the case of similar negotiations with other countries, every effort was made to obtain a concession on behalf of our plywood exports. As a result, the United Kingdom duty on plywood (faced with softwood) was bound at 10 percent ad valorem. This automatically limits the preference in favor of plywood of British Empire origin to that amount. The specific French duty on plywood was reduced by 17 percent in the trade agreement with that country. The Cuban duties, which vary according to the state of manufacture, were bound at their former levels. The Canadian duty on plywood (not further manufactured than glued or cemented), which was 35 percent ad valorem in December 1935, was reduced by the first trade agreement with Canada to 30 percent and by the second trade agreement with Canada to 25 percent. These rates compare with our own rates of duty of 40 percent on all plywood except alder, which is 50 percent, and birch, which is 25 percent.

But on even broader grounds than those given above it is deemed inadvisable to pass such a law as that under consideration. Any restriction on exports encourages other countries to do likewise. It must be strongly emphasized that the United States is a country largely dependent upon imports of certain raw materials. Certain industries are occupied solely with the conversion of raw materials into more advanced products while many of our most important industries require substantial amounts of imported raw or semifinished materials as necessary ingredients in the particular goods they produce. American interests have, in fact, already suffered from foreign export restrictions, and it is not to our interest to encourage them. The arbitrary stoppage of the flow of any product into its accustomed channels of trade always causes consequences not originally envisaged. Not only are foreign purchasers and users of the product harmed but the domestic exporter, those dealing with intimately allied processes and industries (i. e., tool suppliers, shippers, insurance companies, banks), and those domestic importers and other exporters who may be affected by consequent developments must readjust themselves at their own expense to the new conditions.

Under the reciprocal trade agreements program we are making significant progress in the restoration and expansion of our foreign trade which is of such great importance to the prosperity of this country. The fundamental inconsistency between this liberal trade policy and the proposed export restriction is apparent. For the reasons indicated, the Department recommends that S. 1108 be not passed.

I am making no comment upon the administration questions involved in the proposed bill since they do not fall within the jurisdiction of this Department.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Let it go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a moment. Was objection made to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to have an opportunity to speak on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the letter of the Secretary of State, I think the bill ought to go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been going over during the whole session, and if it is not passed now it will mean defeat for the bill. If I have a right to speak on the bill, I should like to speak on it now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold the objection temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for withholding his objection.

Mr. President, the bill has to do with the timber industry of Oregon and Washington. Timber to Oregon and Washington and the northwestern section of the country is what cotton is to the South, what wheat and corn are to the Middle West, and what steel and coal and iron are to the North and East. Fifty cents out of every pay-roll dollar in Oregon and Washington comes from timber. Every one of the four United States Senators from Oregon and Washington is in favor of the bill. The American Federation of Labor is in favor of it, the C. I. O. is in favor of it, labor and capital and everyone else in that section are in favor of the bill. The fine-spun theories of some department clerks here in Washington writing a report, and a long report, to which I cannot adequately reply in 5 minutes, are immaterial compared with the welfare of the people of the Pacific Northwest, unless the Senate is persuaded that it is to the advantage of the entire country to sacrifice the industry and the pay-roll dollars of one section of the country for a possible advantage to the rest of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not very familiar with the subject. The Senator referred to cotton and wheat and other products. What we are trying to do with the cotton and wheat is to sell it. What is the crux of the reason why there should be a restriction in the exportation of this particular product?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Pacific Northwest is rich in raw materials. We want factories and manufactures to be built up to process and use these raw materials. Plywood is made out of a particular and special kind of wood. A great portion of a large tree may be wasted in order to cut one log, the wood of which can be used for plywood. In time plywood will take the place of lath and plaster in building operations. The industry would provide pay rolls for American workers. We want to see the work performed in the United States rather than send the logs out of the country and have the work done by the cheap labor of Japan and Germany, thereby denying to the American worker the opportunity for such work. The American worker now, with his high standard of living, cannot compete with such cheap labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is not the plywood in question being used now in the United States?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; it is, to some extent, but we want the foreign markets, and we are losing the foreign markets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why is the Senator trying to restrict the exports?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because we wish to have the logs processed in this country. Wood of the sort in question is limited in quantity. We do not want that limited number of logs shipped out of the country and processed in other countries. We wish to have American labor given the work of processing the logs. It cannot compete against the cheap foreign labor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I know very little about the bill, but I heard something of the explanation made before the committee. I remember in particular the argument advanced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who seemed to have a great interest in the matter. As I understood, the prime purpose of the proposed legislation is to insure the processing of these logs within the United States. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Could not the bill be taken up under circumstances which would give the Senator and others interested in the matter more opportunity to discuss it than under the call of the calendar? Is there any emergency about it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky guarantee that there will be an opportunity to do so during the present session?

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as I am concerned, I will say that I shall be glad to cooperate to see that it is considered in the present session of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, I think it is very unfair that the present situation should exist. The bill is one which deals with a question most important to the section which I in part have the honor to represent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being taken up at some time when we may receive a fuller explanation and be able to understand more about the measure. My only thought is that under the call of the calendar it is rather difficult to go into the matter in detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thank the Senate for the opportunity of discussing the measure.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senate that the fundamental purpose of the proposal is to prevent the export of jobs. When the logs are cut and sent out of the country there is very little in the way of wages which accompanies that sort of a transaction, and in exporting the logs we are merely exporting jobs, which otherwise would be paid for on a decent basis. We export the logs, and they are processed in foreign countries, and then are shipped back again and come into active competition with the logs which are processed in the Northwest. The proposal is a very simple one. Shall we keep the jobs of the veneer workers within the United States, or shall we literally export the jobs to Japan? That in its simple terms is what the bill involves.

Mr. BARKLEY. With the understanding to which reference has been made, I think the bill should be passed over. I shall be glad to take the matter up with the Senator in an effort to have it considered on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN FUNCTIONS BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after "Senate", to insert: "The compensation of the said Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate commensurate with the duties of the position created but in no event to exceed the compensation of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act—

(a) The term "regulatory order" means an order, marketing agreement, standard, permit, license, registration, suspension or revocation of a permit, license, or registration, certificate, award, rule, or regulation, if it has the force and effect of law, and if it may be made, prescribed, issued, or promulgated only after notice and hearing or opportunity for hearing have been given.

(b) The term "regulatory function" means the making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating, of a regulatory order; and includes (1) determining whether such making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating is authorized or required by law, and (2) any action which is required or authorized to be performed before, after, or in connection with, such determining, making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating.

SEC. 2. There is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The compensation of the said Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate commensurate with the duties of the position created but in no event to exceed the compensation of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to perform only such duties in the conduct of the business of the Department of Agriculture as may be delegated to him by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture deems that the delegation of the whole or any part of any regulatory functions which the Secretary is, now or hereafter, required or authorized to perform will result in the more expeditious discharge of the duties of the Department of Agriculture, he is authorized to make such delegation to the Under Secretary of Agriculture or to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture or to the Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary may at any time revoke the whole or any part of a delegation made by him under this section.

SEC. 4. Whenever a delegation is made under section 3, all provisions of law shall be construed as if the regulatory function or the part thereof delegated had (to the extent of the delegation) been vested by law in the individual to whom the delegation is made, instead of in the Secretary of Agriculture. A revocation of delegation shall not be retroactive, and each regulatory function or part thereof performed (within the scope of the delegation) by such individual prior to the revocation shall be considered as having been performed by the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, is Senate bill 1955 now under consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. I withhold objection if the Senator from Washington desires to make an explanation of the measure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to make an explanation. The Senate will remember that when the calendar was called the last time I made an explanation of the bill. The only thing I wish to add is to insert in the RECORD at this point a list of the statutory provisions which require the Secretary of Agriculture to hold hearings and to exercise the functions which under this measure are to be delegated to a Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Some 28 measures have been passed over a long period of time.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIST OF STATUTORY PROVISIONS REQUIRING OR AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY TO ISSUE REGULATORY ORDERS AFTER GIVING NOTICE AND HEARING

1. The Federal Seed Act, approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 506), as amended August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 453), and April 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 325). Section 5 of that act (which was added by the amendment of 1926) forbids the importation of seeds of alfalfa or red clover whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after public hearing, determines that such seeds are not adapted for general agricultural use in the United States, unless at least 10 percent of the seeds in each container is stained a red color, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

2. The Insecticide Act of 1910, approved August 26, 1910 (36 Stat. 331). Section 4 of the act directs the Secretary to make examination of insecticides and fungicides for the purpose of determining whether any of the specimens are adulterated or misbranded, and, after notice and hearing, to refer for prosecution by the United States district attorney any party found to be in violation of the act.

Section 11 directs the Secretary to examine samples of insecticides and fungicides and, after notice and hearing to the importer, the adulterated or misbranded articles shall be denied admission by the Secretary of the Treasury.

3. The virus-serum-toxin provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 832). Under this statute the Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any permit or license issued under the authority of the act after opportunity for hearing has been granted the licensee or importer, when the Secretary is satisfied that such license or permit is being used to facilitate or affect the preparation, sale, shipment, importation, etc., of any contaminated virus, serum, or toxin for use in the treatment of domestic animals.

4. The Plant Quarantine Act, approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stat. 317), as amended March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 854), March 4, 1917 (39 Stat. 1165), May 31, 1920 (41 Stat. 726), April 13, 1926 (44 Stat. 250), and May 1, 1928 (45 Stat. 468). Section 5 of this act subjects to regulation the importation of certain plants and plant products whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after due notice and public hearing, shall determine that unrestricted importation of such articles may result in the importation of injurious plant diseases or insect pests.

Section 7 forbids the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products whenever the Secretary, after due notice and hearing, shall determine that such prohibition is necessary to prevent the spread of plant disease or insect infestation.

Section 8 directs the Secretary to establish quarantine areas in the United States whenever, after notice and hearing, he determines that such quarantine is necessary to prevent the spread of a dangerous plant disease or insect infestation.

Section 15 forbids the movement of nursery stock into or out of the District of Columbia, upon the determination by the Secretary, after notice and hearing, that such a prohibition is necessary to prevent the dissemination of dangerous plant diseases and insect infestations.

5. United States Grain Standards Act, approved August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 482). Section 4 forbids the shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of any grain that shall not have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under the act. The section further provides, however, that any such grain for which official grain standards have been provided may be shipped without inspection from a place at which there is no licensed inspector to a place where there is no such inspector, subject to the right of either party to the transaction to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine the true grade thereof.

Section 5 provides that whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of grain, and to the inspector thereof, if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade or has been sold, offered for sale, etc., the Secretary may publish his findings.

Section 6 provides that the findings of the Secretary as to grade, "signed by him or by such officer or officers, agent or agents, of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard," shall be accepted in the courts as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain.

Section 7 empowers the Secretary to suspend or revoke any license issued by him under the act whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given to the licensee, the Secretary shall determine that such licensee is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly, etc.

6. United States Warehouse Act, approved August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 486), as amended July 25, 1919 (41 Stat. 266), February 23, 1923 (42 Stat. 1282), and March 2, 1931 (46 Stat. 1465). Section 12 empowers the Secretary, or his designated representative, to suspend or revoke the license issued to any person to inspect, sample, or classify, or to weigh any agricultural product or products under the act, whenever he is satisfied, after opportunity afforded to the licensee concerned for a hearing, that such licensee has failed to inspect, sample, etc.

Section 24 authorizes the Secretary to cause examinations to be made of any agricultural product stored in any warehouse licensed under the act. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the warehouseman conducting such warehouse, it is determined that he is not performing fully the duties imposed upon him by the act and the rules and regulations made thereunder, the Secretary may publish his findings.

Section 25 empowers the Secretary, or his designated representative, to suspend or revoke any license to a warehouseman, after opportunity for hearing, for violation of the act or the rules of the Secretary thereunder.

7. The Capper-Volstead Act, approved February 18, 1922 (42 Stat. 388). Section 2 directs the Secretary to issue a cease and desist order against any association of producers of agricultural products when the Secretary finds, after notice and hearing, that such association monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent as unduly to enhance the prices of agricultural products.

8. The Naval Stores Act, approved March 3, 1923 (42 Stat. 1435). Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to establish and promulgate standards for naval stores for which no standards are otherwise provided in the act, "after at least 3 months' notice of a proposed standard shall have been given to the trade, so far as practicable, and due hearings or reasonable opportunities to be heard shall have been afforded those favoring or opposing the same."

9. United States Cotton Standards Act, approved March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1517), as amended March 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 1621). Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to suspend or revoke any license issued to any person to grade or otherwise classify cotton, whenever he is satisfied, after reasonable opportunity afforded to the licensee for a hearing, that such licensee is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly classified cotton improperly, or has violated any provision of the act or the regulations thereunder so far as the same may relate to him, or has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose.

10. The Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, approved August 15, 1921 (42 Stat. 159), as amended August 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 649). (See also the provisions relating to the Packers and Stockyards Act of the act approved June 16, 1938 (Public, No. 614, 75th Cong., ch. 464, 3d sess.)) Section 203 (a) provides for a hearing on a complaint to be filed against packers charging violations of the act.

Section 302 (b) authorizes the Secretary, after inquiry, to ascertain which stockyards are subject to the act.

Section 306 (e) empowers the Secretary to "enter upon a hearing" concerning the lawfulness of a new rate or charge filed by a stockyard owner or market agency and, "after full hearing," to issue the order therein authorized.

Section 309 (a) makes it "the duty of the Secretary to investigate" the matters contained in complaints filed against any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer alleging violations of sections 304, 305, 306, or 307. For a more complete understanding of the nature of the proceeding here intended, the provisions of section 309 (e) should also be considered, wherein it is provided that "if after hearing on a complaint," the Secretary determines that a reparation order should issue, he shall so order.

Section 309 (b) directs the Secretary "to investigate any complaint" forwarded by duly authorized officials or agencies of a State charging any of the violations referred to in section 309 (a).

Section 309 (c) authorizes the Secretary to "institute an inquiry on his own motion" concerning suspected violations of title III of the act or to enforce any of the provisions of that title.

Section 310 further describes the procedure to be followed under the three provisions last enumerated by providing "whenever after full hearing upon a complaint made as provided in section 309, or after full hearing under an order for investigation and hearing made by the Secretary on his own initiative," the Secretary is of the opinion that any rate, charge, regulation, or practice of a stockyard owner or market agency is unreasonable, he shall issue the order therein authorized.

Section 311 directs the Secretary, "after full hearing," to determine whether any intrastate rate, charge, regulation, or practice of any stockyard owner or market agency discriminates against interstate commerce in livestock and to act to remove such discrimination.

Section 312 (b) permits the Secretary, "after notice and full hearing," to determine whether any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer is violating section 312 (a), and to issue cease and desist orders accordingly.

Section 401 does not make use of any term indicative of a hearing, such as "hearing," "inquiry," or "investigation," and such hearing as may be necessary is thus a matter of constitutional rather than statutory requirement.

Section 502 (a) authorizes and directs the Secretary to "ascertain from time to time and to designate" the cities and markets subject to title V of the act.

Section 502 (b) requires the Secretary to issue licenses to live-poultry dealers and handlers "unless he finds after opportunity for a hearing" that the applicant is not eligible therefor under the terms of the statute.

Section 505 empowers the Secretary, whenever he determines, after opportunity for a hearing, that any licensee has violated or is violating any of the provisions of title V of the statute, to publish the facts and circumstances of such violation and by order suspend the license of such offender for a period not to exceed 90 days, and if the violation is flagrant or repeated, the Secretary may by order revoke the license of the offender.

It is also provided from year to year in the annual appropriation act for the Department that whenever the Secretary finds, after due notice and hearing, that any registrant is insolvent, he may suspend the license of such registrant for a reasonable specified period. (See Public, No. 644, 75th Cong., ch. 464, 3d sess.)

11. Federal Import Milk Act, approved February 15, 1927 (44 Stat. 1101). Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to suspend or revoke any permit for the shipment of milk or cream into the United States when he shall find that the holder thereof has failed to comply with the provisions of the act, or any of the regulations made thereunder, or that the milk or cream brought or shipped by the holder of such permit into the United States is not produced and handled in conformity with, or that the quality does not conform to, all the provisions of section 2 of the act.

12. Federal Caustic Poison Act, approved March 4, 1927 (44 Stat. 1406). Section 5 provides that whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any dangerous caustic or corrosive substance being offered for importation is being shipped in interstate or foreign commerce in violation of section 3, he shall give notice and opportunity for hearing thereon to the owner or consignee and certify such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon either refuse admission and delivery of such substance or deliver such substance to the consignee pending examination, hearing, and decision in the matter on the execution of a penal bond, to the amount of the full invoice value of such substance, together with the duty thereon, to the effect that on refusal to return such substance, for any cause, to the Secretary of the Treasury when demanded for the purpose of excluding it from the country, or for any other purpose, the consignee shall forfeit the full amount of the bond.

Section 9 authorizes the Secretary to cause investigations, inspections, analyses, and tests to be made and samples to be collected, of any dangerous caustic or corrosive substance; if it appears from such inspection, analysis, or test that such substance is in a misbranded package, parcel, or container suitable for household use, the person from whom the sample was taken shall be given an opportunity to be heard and, if found guilty, the Secretary shall certify the facts to the district attorney for prosecution.

13. The Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, approved June 10, 1930 (46 Stat. 531), as amended April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 684), June 19, 1936 (49 Stat. 1533), and August 20, 1937 (50 Stat. 728). Section 4 directs the Secretary to refuse a license to an applicant for cause stated, after notice and hearing.

Section 6 directs the Secretary to investigate complaints filed by any person charging a violation of any provision of section 2 by any commission merchant, dealer, or broker. After an opportunity for a hearing on such complaints, the Secretary shall then determine whether any such violation has occurred.

Section 7 directs the Secretary to issue a reparation order against a commission merchant, dealer, or broker found, after the hearing provided for in section 6, to have violated the provisions of section 2.

Section 8 directs the Secretary to suspend or to revoke the license of any commission merchant, dealer, or broker found, after the hearing held under section 6, to have violated the provisions of section 2.

Section 9 permits the Secretary to suspend the license of any commission merchant, dealer, or broker found to have failed to keep accounts, records, and memoranda which fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business.

14. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933 (41 Stat. 31), as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, approved June 3, 1937 (50 Stat. 248). Section 8a empowers the Secretary to institute an investigation and, after due notice to the handler suspected of violating any order or amendment issued under the act, to conduct a hearing in order to determine the facts for the purpose of referring the matter to the Attorney General for appropriate action.

Section 8 (b) empowers the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to enter into marketing agreements with processors, producers, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of any agricultural commodity or product thereof.

Section 8 (c) directs the Secretary, after notice and hearing, to issue, and, from time to time, amend marketing orders applicable to processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of any agricultural commodity or product thereof specified in the act.

Section 10 (l) directs the Secretary, after due notice and hearing, to issue marketing orders complementary to orders or other regulations issued by State authorities relating to the regulation of the handling of agricultural commodities or products thereof.

15. The Export Apple and Pear Act, approved June 10, 1933 (48 Stat. 123). Section 1 makes it unlawful for any person to ship or transport any apples or pears in packages which are not accompanied by a certificate issued on authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, showing that such apples or pears are of a Federal or State grade which meets the minimum of quality established by the Secretary for shipment in export. The Secretary is required to provide opportunity, by public hearing or otherwise, for interested persons to examine or make recommendation with respect to any standard of export proposed to be established or designated, or regulations prescribed, by the Secretary for the purposes of the act.

Section 6 authorizes the Secretary, after opportunity for hearing, to refuse the issuance of certificates under the act for periods not exceeding 90 days to any person who ships or offers for shipment any apples or pears in foreign commerce in violation of the provisions of the act.

16. Sections 56-60, inclusive, of the act approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 781). Section 57 empowers the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to enter into marketing agreements with manufacturers and others engaged in the handling of anti-hog-cholera serum and hog-cholera virus.

17. The Commodity Exchange Act, which was originally passed as the Grain Futures Act, September 21, 1922 (42 Stat. 998), as amended June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1491), and April 7, 1938 (52 Stat. 205). Section 4a directs the Commodity Exchange Commission, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to proclaim and fix, from time to time, such allotments on the amount of trading under the contracts of sale of any commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any contract market which may be done by any person as the Commission finds is necessary to diminish, eliminate, or prevent successful speculation in any such commodity.

Section 4g directs the Secretary, after notice and hearing, to suspend or revoke the registration of any futures commission merchant or floor broker found to have violated the provisions of the act, the rules and regulations of the Secretary thereunder, or to have failed or refused to make such reports and keep such books in the form and manner required by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Section 5a (4) directs the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to require a period of delivery (which shall not be less than 3 or more than 10 business days) whenever he finds that such period of delivery will prevent, or tend to prevent, "squeezes" and market congestion.

Section 5a (5) directs the Secretary to require a longer notice of delivery (which shall not be more than 10 business days) whenever, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, the Secretary finds that the giving of longer notice of delivery is necessary to prevent or diminish unfair practices of trading in any one or more commodities or markets.

Section 6 (a) authorizes the Commodity Exchange Commission to suspend for a period not to exceed 6 months, or to revoke the designation of any board of trade as a "contract market," upon a showing that such board of trade has failed or is failing to comply with certain stated requirements or is not enforcing its rules of government made as a condition of its designation as set forth in section 5. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the board of trade affected and upon a hearing.

Section 6 (b) empowers the Secretary of Agriculture, after notice and hearing, to suspend or revoke the trading privileges of any person on a contract market, for violation of any of the provisions of the act, the rules and regulations thereunder, etc.

Section 6a (1) empowers the Commission, after notice and hearing, to authorize a board of trade to exclude from membership therein any cooperative association.

Section 6b empowers the Commission, in lieu of revoking the designation of a board of trade as a "contract market," after notice and hearing, to issue a cease-and-desist order against a board of trade found to have violated the act, the rules and regulations of the Secretary thereunder, etc.

18. The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, approved June 3, 1937 (50 Stat. 246), as amended August 5, 1937 (50 Stat. 563). Section 2 (f) directs the Secretary, whenever he finds necessary on account of changed circumstances, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to make adjustments in the minimum prices above parity price to be paid under marketing agreements or orders regulating the handling of milk or its products.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary, upon the written application of cooperative associations bona fide engaged in collective processing, handling, or marketing milk, to mediate and, with the consent of all parties, directs him to arbitrate "bona fide disputes" between such associations and handlers as to the terms and conditions of the sale of milk or its products.

19. The Tobacco Inspection Act, approved August 23, 1935 (49 Stat. 731). The act, designed to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco-inspection service, and for other purposes, does not require the Secretary to give notice and hearing in connection with the discharge of his duties.

Section 14, however, authorizes the Secretary to make such rules and regulations and hold such hearings as he may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of the act; and section 15 empowers the Secretary, or any officer or employee designated by him for such purpose, to hold hearings, administer oaths, sign and issue subpoenas, examine witnesses, etc.

20. The Sugar Act of 1937, approved September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 1100). Section 205 directs the Secretary, whenever he shall find that the allotment of any sugar quota is necessary to assure an orderly and adequate flow of sugar or liquid sugar in the channels of interstate or foreign commerce, or to prevent disorderly marketing or importation of sugar or liquid sugar, or to maintain a continuous and staple supply of sugar or liquid sugar, or to afford to all interested persons an equitable opportunity to market sugar or liquid sugar within any area's quota, to make allotments of such quota to persons who market or import sugar or liquid sugar. Such allotments may be made only after such hearing and upon such notice as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

Section 301 authorizes the Secretary to make payments on condition that the wages paid by the processors to employees shall not be less than those that may be determined by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable after investigation and due notice and opportunity for public hearing, and on the further condition that a processor who is also a producer of sugar beets or sugarcane shall have paid for any sugar beets or sugarcane grown by other producers and processed by him at rates not less than those may be determined by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for public hearing.

21. The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, approved June 25, 1938 (Public, No. 717, 75th Cong., ch. 675, 3d sess.). Section 305 directs the Secretary, before referring any violation of the act to a United States district attorney for institution of a criminal proceeding, to give proper notice and an opportunity for hearing to a person against whom such a proceeding is contemplated.

Section 505 requires the Secretary to issue an order refusing to permit an application (for permission to introduce or deliver for introduction in interstate commerce any new drug) to become effective if the Secretary finds, after due notice to the applicant and giving him an opportunity for a hearing, that the precautionary requirements of the act with respect to determining whether such drug is safe for use have not been complied with.

Section 701 directs the Secretary, on his own initiative or upon an application of any interested industry, or substantial portion thereof, stating reasonable grounds therefor, to hold a public hearing upon a proposal to issue, amend, or repeal any regulation contemplated by any of the following sections of the act: 401, 403 (j), 404 (a), 406 (a) and (b), 501 (b), 502 (d), 502 (h), 504, and 604.

Section 801 directs the Secretary to examine samples of foods, drugs, and cosmetics, and after notice and hearing to the importer, the articles found in violation of the statute shall be denied admission by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the measure create any other position?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It creates one position in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. At what salary?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Between $8,000 and $9,000 a year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator from Utah that our committee considered the measure quite carefully and believe that it is absolutely essential that it be passed, because we have by law laid these duties on the Secretary of Agriculture, and if he were to comply with all the mandates of the law he could do nothing else. Is that not correct?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. He could do nothing else. The Supreme Court has said he is obliged to perform those duties.

Mr. HATCH. May I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his objection? The measure is a very meritorious one.

Mr. KING. I will do so. I merely wish to say that if the Secretary of Agriculture spent more time in Washington and less time in going about the country making speeches perhaps more could be accomplished here.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Even if the Secretary spent all his time in the city of Washington and never left he would not be able to perform all his duties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which will be again stated for the benefit of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 2, page 2, line 11, after "Senate" and the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

The compensation of the said Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate commensurate with the duties of the position created but in no event to exceed the compensation of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, with respect to the amendment just read, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. Apparently the language of the amendment does not fix the salary of the Assistant Secretary.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It will be between $8,000 and $9,000 a year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it the understanding of the Senator that the Secretary is limited with respect to the amount which he may assign to that particular Secretary?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; and that is the understanding of the Secretary.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would it not be better to have that limitation placed in the amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The language of the amendment was discussed with the legislative drafting clerk, and it was deemed advisable to frame the amendment as it appears in the bill. However, if the Senator wishes to amend the amendment by inserting "not to exceed $9,000 a year," that will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be amended on page 2, line 13, after the word "rate", by the insertion of the words "not to exceed $9,000 per annum."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOMESTIC FISHERY PRODUCTS

The bill (S. 1852) to promote the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad to make an explanation of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the bill go over until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I appreciate the interest the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has in the bill. The measure would make available for the benefit of the fishing industry, which is not now receiving any aid at all from the Federal Government, 40 percent of the amount of the customs receipts derived from the importation of fish products and commodities shipped into this country. The bill is so drawn that the emphasis is placed upon an educational program to be carried on in the Bureau of Fisheries in the Department of Commerce, in educating the people with respect to the food value of fish and the best way to prepare fish and fish products, and in disseminating knowledge in the form of recipes and the like, and in conservation of fish.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I simply wish to say on behalf of my associates on this side of the aisle that I am in complete agreement with the Senator from Florida in respect to the virtue of the proposed legislation, and as a member of the Commerce Committee I am familiar with its purpose. I believe there will be no objection raised on this side of the aisle at this time to consideration of the measure.

Mr. KING. Objection has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1850) to aid the States and Territories in making provisions for the retirement of employees of the land-grant college was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BENJAMIN F. LONGENECKER

The bill (S. 2236) for the relief of Benjamin F. Longenecker was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Benjamin L. Longenecker, late of Company L, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on December 21, 1866: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2048) authorizing the installation of parking meters and other devices on the streets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether this is a proper bill?

Mr. KING. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have recommended it. They have installed a number of meters, which have proved very satisfactory as revenue producers, and the people of the District of Columbia heartily approve them. The bill proposes to permit the extension of the meter system.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the present law limits the installation of meters to congested areas of the city, does it not?

Mr. KING. Installation is limited to congested areas, but the bill proposes to extend the installation of the meters wherever the District Commissioners deem necessary.

Mr. GILLETTE. The bill extends the right to install the meters without any limitation, in streets, alleys, public places, with no limitation whatever.

Mr. KING. Wherever the Commissioners deem it necessary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over in order that I may have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1908) to amend section 691a of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia approved March 3, 1901, and of any act or acts amendatory thereof relating to foreign building and loan associations doing business in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COAST GUARD STATION, MONTEREY, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 4674) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near the city of Monterey, Calif., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6076) to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SAFETY ON THE HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2350) to amend the act of Congress approved May 3, 1935, entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] whether or not this is a proper bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the only change made by the bill is the addition of the words "reckless driving." The courts have held that driving an automobile while drunk does not constitute reckless driving. To conform to the decisions of the courts the Commissioners, as well as the Corporation Counsel, have recommended this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved May 3, 1935, entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. The motor-vehicle operator's permit and all of the registration certificates of any person who shall by a final order or judgment have been convicted of or shall have forfeited any bond or collateral given for a violation of any of the following provisions of law, to wit—

"Driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or narcotic drugs, as provided in section 10 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, as amended, and commonly known as the Traffic Acts;

"Leaving the scene of an automobile accident in which personal injury occurs without making identity known, as provided in section 10 of said Traffic Acts;

"Reckless driving, as provided in section 9 (b) of such Traffic Acts, whereby personal injury occurs;

"A conviction of an offense in any other State, which if committed in the District of Columbia would be a violation of any of the aforesaid provisions of the Traffic Acts of the District of Columbia; shall be suspended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their designated agent and shall remain so suspended and shall not at any time thereafter be renewed, nor shall any other motor vehicle be thereafter registered in his name until he shall give proof of his ability to respond thereafter in damages resulting from the ownership or operation of a motor vehicle and arising by reason of personal injury to or death of any one person of at least $5,000, and, subject to the aforesaid limit for each person injured or killed, of at least $10,000 for such injury to or the death of two or more persons in any one accident, and for damage to property of at least $1,000 resulting from any one accident. Such proof in said amounts shall be furnished for each motor vehicle owned or registered by such person. If any such person shall fail to furnish said proof, his operator's permit and registration certificates shall remain suspended and shall not at any time thereafter be renewed, nor shall any other motor vehicle be thereafter registered in his name until such time as said proof be given. If such person shall not be a resident of the District of Columbia, the privilege of operating any motor vehicle in the District of Columbia and the privilege of operation within the District of Columbia of any motor vehicle owned by him shall be withdrawn until he shall have furnished such proof: Provided, That in case of both residents and nonresidents, however, if it shall be duly established to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners or their designated agent, and the said Commissioners or their designated agent shall so find (a) that any such person so convicted, or who shall have pleaded guilty or forfeited bond or collateral, was, upon the occasion of the violation upon which such conviction, plea, or forfeiture was based, a chauffeur or motor-vehicle operator, however designated, in the employ of the owner of such motor vehicle; or a member of the same family and household of the owner of such motor vehicle, and (b) that there was not, at the time of such violation, or subsequent thereto, up to the date of such finding, any motor vehicle registered in the District of Columbia in the name of such person convicted, entering a plea of guilty or forfeiting bond or collateral, as aforesaid, then in such event, if the person in whose name such motor vehicle is registered shall give proof of ability to respond in damages, in accordance with the provisions of this act (and the said Commissioners or their designated agent shall accept such proof from such person), such chauffeur or other person, as aforesaid, shall thereupon be relieved of the necessity of giving such proof in his own behalf. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in which any such judgment or order is rendered or other action taken to forward immediately to the said Commissioners or their designated agent a certified copy or transcript thereof, which said certified copy or transcript shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated."

PUNISHMENT OF ESPIONAGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1398) to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] reported the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, I should like to make an explanation of the bill. This measure is intended to remedy an obvious, and at the present time somewhat startling, defect in the Federal statute relating to espionage.

This measure, in effect, strengthens the existing law in the following respects:

First. Imprisonment is made mandatory for all offenses instead of being left, as at present in some instances, to the discretion of the courts.

Second. Minimum and maximum penalties for lesser offenses are fixed at 5 and 10 years, respectively, as contrasted with a complete absence of any provision for mandatory imprisonment in some sections of the present Espionage Act, and a maximum of 2 years, as recited above, for such offenses as entering restricted military zones, flying over fortifications, and thefts of code and signal books, plans, sketches, and other secret military material.

Third. For major offenses, such as attempts to damage or destroy American vessels, for which the present law provides maximum penalties of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine, with no minimum, the penalties are increased to 10 years' mandatory imprisonment as a minimum, the maximum remaining unchanged.

Similarly, the bill increases the penalty for harboring or concealing foreign spies from 2 years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine to mandatory minimum and maximum terms of 5 and 10 years, respectively. The fine is unchanged.

In a single respect the bill reported in the Senate makes no change in the penalties of the present statute. These are the penalties for negligence. It is felt that they are sufficiently severe.

In a word, the bill, introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who has been very vigilant and very attentive in promoting its consideration in the Committee on Naval Affairs, provides exacting and strict penalties for espionage.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question about this measure. When the Munitions Committee was examining into the activities of private munitions makers it was discovered—and I think not seriously questioned—that private munitions makers, under the very loose system then in effect, were selling very freely to every country under the sun, including some now under vigorous condemnation, all, or at least a great many of the latest devices we now employ in national defense. Personally I always regarded that as an exceedingly loose system, and at times I have wondered why we were prosecuting some persons for taking pictures or something of that sort, when our own private munitions makers were apparently freely selling the latest types of devices to Germany, Japan, or any other country which wanted to buy them. The devices found their way to Vickers and to every other such plant in foreign countries that wanted to buy them. I am wondering whether the language in the proposal before us would be sufficiently broad to get at a matter of that kind, or at least not sanctify the free and easy sale of so-called national-defense apparatus.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am sure the language of the bill is sufficiently broad. The whole intent is to make more serious the offenses of espionage, sabotage, and every other act in that very antipatriotic category. Under the provisions of the bill any munitions firm, shipbuilder, or anyone else who in any way was a party to the theft of a plan or the divulging of national-defense secrets would be culpable and subject to arrest and conviction. The Naval Affairs Committee is unanimously in favor of the bill. The Navy Department is very much in favor of it. It is in line with the efforts of the Attorney General in connection with the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and, while I have not heard officially, I have heard informally from representatives of the State Department that they are in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington has opened up a subject which requires attention and consideration, a subject which is perhaps broader than this bill, namely, the question whether private contractors, those who build ships and provide devices for the Army and Navy, and those who manufacture airplanes, should be permitted to transmit the models, forms, and specifications to other countries. To some degree such activities are forbidden. In the case of airplanes permission must be obtained from our Government. I do not know at the moment whether the law is sufficiently broad to include all the suggestions contained in the observations of the Senator from Washington, but I think the matter should be carefully studied. However, as the Senator has indicated by his inquiry, it has no special bearing on this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I was about to suggest that the practice to which the Senator from Washington has referred has gone even further. It was in evidence before the Munitions Committee, in the case of the Du Pont Power Co., that they were authorized, in one instance, by the Intelligence Bureau of the War Department, and in another instance by the intelligence unit of the Navy Department, to sell their most secret formula and, in fact, to install methods and factories in Russia and Japan, countries that were considered at that time by those Departments, as stated in their correspondence, to be the most likely antagonists of the United States. It seems to me that sort of business ought to be stopped. I am not criticizing this particular bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am not objecting. I merely wish to comment further on the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. We discovered a case in which a recent installation on one of our modern warships of the Driggs gun, an antiaircraft gun of a very late model, was inspected by Turkish representatives, and the ship became a veritable floating showcase. American private munitions manufacturers were using an American battleship to demonstrate the value and the utility of those guns to foreign countries. The Navy Department and the State Department approved that action.

We confront the hideous fact that if this body ever votes to send our country into war, so surely as we are in this Chamber we are going to send our sons out to die under a hail of steel fired from American-made guns, with the latest devices which our own scientists can provide. We have sold our military and naval secrets all over the world. If we become involved in a war our boys are going to be blown hellward by the things we have been selling year in and year out, and which we have designated as our own military and naval secrets.

Mr. WALSH. I am in thorough accord with what the Senator has said. However, in the case of such a device as the diving bell life-saving device which operated so successfully in the recent submarine disaster, the Senator would not say that our Government should not permit other governments of the world to know about such things?

Mr. BONE. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, it is a matter of discretion.

Mr. BONE. Yes; I would not forbid the sale of such humane devices as the diving bell. One would have to be sadistic to interrupt the use of a thing like that. I think it should be freely exchanged all over the earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 1 of title I of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, is amended by (1) striking out the last semicolon in such section and all matter following such semicolon, and (2) inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

(b) Such act, as amended, is amended by inserting in title I thereof, immediately after section 1 of such title, a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 1A. Whoever, being entrusted with or having lawful possession or control of any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blueprint, plan, map, model, note, or information, relating to the national defense, through gross negligence permits the same to be removed from its proper place of custody or delivered to anyone in violation of his trust, or to be lost, stolen, abstracted, or destroyed, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both."

Sec. 2. Section 2 of title I of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years."

Sec. 3. Section 5 of title I of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5. Whoever harbors or conceals any person who he knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe or suspect, has committed, or is about to commit, an offense under this title shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

Sec. 4. (a) Section 2 of title II of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

(b) Section 3 of title II of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and shall, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

Sec. 5. Section 1 of title III of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

Sec. 6. Section 1 of title IV of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than 20 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

Sec. 7. Section 6 of title V of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

Sec. 8. Sections 1, 2, and 3 of title VIII of such act, as amended, are amended by striking out of each of such sections "shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both," and inserting in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $5,000."

Sec. 9. Sections 2, 3, and 4 of title IX of such act, as amended, are amended by striking out of each of such sections "shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $2,000."

Sec. 10. Section 22 of title XI of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $1,000."

Sec. 11. Section 3 of title XII of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out "shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 10 years and may, in the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $5,000."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MALONEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2212) to provide for the development of marketing and marketing services for farm commodities was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN FORMER EMPLOYEES OF FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2399) for the relief of certain former employees in the Farm Security Administration, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 2, line 10, after the word "to", to strike out "Joseph B. Pearce" and insert "Joseph D. Pearce"; in line 11, after the numerals "$62.89", to insert: "to Ruby V. Alston, of Columbus, Miss., $48.57; to Harold D. Brainerd, of Marianna, Ark., $14; to Edward M. Burr, of Conway, Ark., $176.97; to Elmer Hixon, of Paris, Ark., $152.42"; and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frederick L. Coe, of New Haven, Conn., the sum of $218.36; to Ann M. Hargrave, of Ithaca, N. Y., $18.12; to James R. Mackie, of Bangor, Maine, $36; to Harry O. Carter, of Paris, Ill., $53.20; to Wilbur A. Schmitt, of Indianapolis, Ind., $4.28; to Rex J. Taylor, of Cartersville, Ill., $82.56; to John L. Higgins, of Cary, N. C., $347.03; to Joseph M. Newsom, of Raleigh, N. C., $29.26; to Rubee J. Pearce, of Birmingham, Ala., $184.70; to Kenneth S. Stewart, of Buckhannon, W. Va., $193.85; to Christopher Bryan, of Richlands, N. C., $205.98; to Ernest L. Boggus, of Newton, Ga., $159.26; to Llano Cantrell, of Eustis, Fla., $93.19; to William D. Cowart, of Gainesville, Fla., $93.19; to Mrs. Rebecca S. Daniell, of Eatonton, Ga., $52.25; to Fred Patterson, of Sandy Springs, S. C., $415.71; to William J. Rawls, of Sneads, Fla., $171.42; to Joseph D. Pearce, of Greenwood, S. C., $62.89; to Ruby V. Alston, of Columbus, Miss., $48.57; to Harold D. Brainerd, of Marianna, Ark., $14; to Edward M. Burr, of Conway, Ark., $176.97; to Elmer Hixon, of Paris, Ark., $152.42; and to William D. Simpson, of Columbia, S. C., $88.55, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for compensation for the amounts of annual leave to which they were entitled, respectively, at the time of their separation from the service of the Farm Security Administration in June 1938: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAWARE DREDGING CO.

The bill (S. 2176) for the relief of the Delaware Dredging Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this is a bill for the relief of a company which overpaid its tax. The bill calls for a refund in a very small amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. I note that the Department does not favor the bill. Can the Senator explain why that is?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I cannot. However, the amount is only $226.68.

Mr. McKELLAR. The entire amount is only $226.68?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Delaware Dredging Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $226.68, in full settlement of its claims against the United States for a refund of an excise tax erroneously collected for the calendar year 1937 imposed by title IX of the Social Security Act, said company having paid the same amount to the State of Delaware under the provisions of said act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 161) to amend section 73 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, April 30, 1900, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill. Otherwise, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF EXPLORATIONS OF FRANCISCO VASQUEZ DE CORONADO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2197) authorizing Federal participation in the commemoration and observance of the four hundredth anniversary of the explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments on page 1, line 7, after the word "Representatives", strike out "the Secretary of State"; on page 4, line 11, after the word "anniversary" to strike out "(5) aiding in defraying the necessary expenses incident to the participation of delegates from the pan-American republics in conferences of historical, educational, anthropological, and linguistic natures, incident to the commemoration and observance of such anniversary and designed to promote friendly relations among the United States and other American republics; and (6)", and insert "and (5)"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the United States Coronado Exposition Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"), to be composed of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Commerce; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of an exposition and celebration during the observance and commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the exploration of the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas by Francisco Vasquez de Coronado.

Sec. 2. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with the Commission in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the Commission and to the Coronado Cuarto Centennial Commission, established by an act of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, for exhibition during the period of such observance and commemoration such articles, materials, documents, specimens, exhibits, or papers in the possession of the Government which the Commission shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such commemoration and observance and which relate to the exploration of such States, or illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, or demonstrate the nature of our institutions, particularly with regard to their adaptation to the needs of the people. Any such articles, materials, documents, specimens, exhibits, or papers so lent, shall be lent only under such conditions as will assure their return in good condition and without expense to the Government.

Sec. 3. The Commission is authorized and directed to prepare, print, bind, and distribute a pamphlet on the explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, and for such purpose is authorized to have printing, binding, photolithography, and other work done at establishments other than the Government Printing Office.

Sec. 4. The Commission is authorized to procure advice and assistance from any governmental agency and to procure advice and assistance from and cooperate with individuals and agencies, public or private. The Commission is authorized to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services of any person and, without additional compensation, the services of such experts, consultants, research assistants, clerks, and stenographers as may be detailed by the heads of the various executive departments and establishments of the Government for the purpose of assisting the Commission to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $250,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and such sum when appropriated shall remain available until expended. Subject to the provisions of this act and any subsequent act appropriating the money authorized herein, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this act and to allocate such sums to the said Coronado Cuarto Centennial Commission for expenditure as the Commission deems necessary and proper in carrying out the purposes of this act for (1) the erection of monuments; (2) the erection and enlargement of museum facilities for the housing of historical and anthropological material and material illustrative of the arts and crafts of such States; (3) the preparation and publication of historical pamphlets; (4) aiding in defraying the expenses of National, State, and local programs in celebration of such anniversary; and (5) aiding in defraying any other expenses incurred in properly observing and commemorating such anniversary.

All amounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by such person as the Commission may designate, but this provision shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, nor to permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein. In the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, shall be paid.

Sec. 6. The Commission shall transmit to Congress on or before _____, 194____, a detailed statement of the manner of expenditure of any funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I offer the amendment to the bill which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 1, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert "(including the expenditure of not to exceed $10,000 for the erection of a suitable monument at or near a point on the international boundary between the United States and Mexico where Coronado first entered what is now the United States)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5835) to authorize the President to render closer and more effective the relationship between the American republics was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who reported the bill, does not appear to be present at the moment.

Mr. LODGE. Pending his presence, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STANDARDS FOR SEEDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The bill (H. R. 5625) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in seeds, to require labeling and to prevent misrepresentation of seeds in interstate commerce, to require certain standards with respect to certain imported seeds, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. GURNEY asked that the bill go over.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has an amendment he desires to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator who made the objection withhold his objection in order that I may make a statement?

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. I believe there should be an amendment adopted to it.

Mr. GILLETTE. This bill has passed the House of Representatives. It represents much work on the part of the agencies interested in the matter of clean seed, the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture, all the farm organizations, and all the seed interests. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has an amendment which he will offer, which, as I understand, is acceptable to the authors of the bill. It is desired that an opportunity be afforded to have that amendment presented at this time. So, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection and let the amendment be acted upon and the bill be passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a good deal of opposition to this bill has come from nurseries and seed producers in several States who believe that if it shall be passed it will interfere with State laws. I have an amendment which I believe will be agreeable to them. It is acceptable to the Department and acceptable to those in charge of the bill. The amendment would tend to minimize or eliminate the objections made by those who in my State, and I assume in the State of the Senator from South Dakota, have objected to the bill as providing too large a degree of Federal control.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I do object to the bill; I am in harmony with some of the objectives of the bill. Its primary purpose, of which I approve, is to give clean seeds to the farmers and planters of the country.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator be willing to have the amendment offered and accepted and then have the bill go over for further study and consideration? The amendment seeks what I think the Senator has in mind, although it may not accomplish that purpose, namely, to meet the protests of the producers of seeds who only produce and sell in their own States.

Mr. GURNEY. The bill as framed would eliminate a certain class of people who now sell seeds, and would take them out of the provisions of the proposed act.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator permit the amendment to be offered and then let the bill go over for further study? I should like to have my amendment offered and voted upon; then the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as having been presented and will lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. No. I inquire if the Senator from South Dakota is willing that the amendment shall be accepted and incorporated in the bill, and then have the bill go over?

Mr. GILLETTE. Does the Senator from South Dakota ask that the bill go over, even if the amendment to be proposed is added to it?

Mr. GURNEY. I shall be glad to have the bill considered at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That such seeds produced or sold by him when transported or offered for transportation to any State, Territory, or District, shall not be exempted from the provisions of sections 201 and 202 unless said seeds shall be in compliance with the operation and effect of the laws of such State, Territory, or District, enacted in the exercise of its police power, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such seed had been produced, sold, offered, or exposed for sale in such State, Territory, or District, and shall not be exempted therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask if the amendment read by the clerk referred to the line and page of the bill to which it is proposed to apply?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It did not. The clerk stated that it was proposed to insert the amendment at the proper place in the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I should like to perfect the amendment in that respect.

Mr. WALSH. I am happy to have the Senator do so. The Senator has cooperated in drafting the amendment.

Mr. GILLETTE. In line 24, page 16, and lines 1 and 2 of page 17, I move to strike out the words beginning "And provided further", and the remainder of those lines, and insert in lieu thereof the language presented by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I do not want to agree at this time to the adoption of any amendment or to the consideration of this bill. I have had letters about it. I do not know whether they were for or against it; the matter is not in my mind at the moment; but I know this is a bill of 40 pages, and it ought not to be taken up and considered and acted upon under the unanimous-consent rule under which the Senate is now proceeding.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator that the amendment is proposed in the effort to meet the objections I have received and which I assume the Senator has received. I do not care whether the bill is acted upon today or not, but I should like to have the Senator from Maine and the other Senators who have objections afforded a chance to study the bill with the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment may be offered and lie on the table. That would be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) to provide minimum national allotments for cotton.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The present law contains a formula which makes possible a serious reduction in the present cotton allotment. The joint resolution simply continues the law as it has existed for the last 2 years. It has been agreed to by the Department and by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House. It merely is a continuation of the law to prevent a larger reduction in allotments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee to the joint resolution will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, after the word "than", it is proposed to strike out "eleven million five hundred thousand" and to insert "ten million", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 343 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (relating to the national allotment for cotton), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The national allotment for any year (after 1939) shall be not less than 10,000,000 bales."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCES FOR INACTIVE-STATUS TRAINING OF RESERVE OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 507) to provide allowances for inactive-status training and for uniforms and equipment for certain officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator from Utah that this matter has been under very careful consideration by the Military Affairs Committee two or three times, and at this session we have held a number of hearings. The matter is a little difficult of explanation, but I may say that Reserve officers in inactive-status training receive nothing for uniforms or equipment. If they are on active training, of course, they receive some pay, but, under the rules and regulations, if they are on inactive-status training they get nothing and have to provide their own uniforms.

As the bill has been finally drafted by the Military Affairs Committee it allows to Reserve officers who are eligible for active-duty training $50 a year for inactive-status training, that amount to go toward paying for their equipment. It allows that amount only for a period of 3 years after they have received appointment as Reserve officers.

The bill has been approved by the National Reserve Officers' Association. The Secretary of War objected to the bill because of certain provisions which it was thought would be very difficult to enforce. The original bill allowed a dollar for each hour of credits earned. The bill was redrafted, and in its present form simply provides for an allowance of $50 at the end of each calendar year. The Secretary of War says that that is decidedly the easiest way to handle it, but the War Department does not believe in paying Reserve officers anything. That is the conclusion reached, although the Department is not very positive about it, but it thinks that the provisions of this bill would not be very difficult of administration and the cost would be rather small.

There has been quite a loss of interest on the part of inactive Reserve officers because they have to purchase their own equipment. They come from various walks in life—lawyers, doctors, bankers, and so forth, and they do not like to take the time to go to training camps, get nothing for it, and in addition then have to purchase their own uniforms. I think that is as good an explanation as I can make at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Can the Senator give any figure as to the number of Reserve officers to whom the bill would apply?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not find the number in the report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have the number here.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator state it if he please?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 30,000 Reserve officers are eligible to inactive training. There should be added to that number 8,500 new second lieutenants who are coming in. The total amount required would be a little less than $2,000,000 per annum for the 3 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky if every officer who does not participate in activities of Reserve officers would be entitled to the payment? Suppose an officer is on the inactive list and is not called out for 2 or 3 years. Would he get $50 a month?

Mr. LOGAN. No. If he is on inactive-status training, actually in training, he would be entitled to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "duty", to insert "training"; after line 6, on page 1, to strike out:

(a) Such officers shall be entitled to an allowance of $1 for each hour of credits earned in Army extension courses and other forms of inactive-status training as shall be designated by the War Department for this purpose: Provided, That such allowance shall apply only to inactive-status credits earned in excess of the annual average minimum of 20 hours of inactive-status credits required for maintaining active-duty status, and shall not exceed $75 in any 1 year: And provided further, That in determining the amount of such allowance for any year only the inactive-status credits earned in that year shall be considered.

And insert:

(a) Such officers shall be entitled to an annual allowance of $50 payable at the end of each fiscal year: Provided, That such allowance shall not be payable for any fiscal year to officers receiving more than 15 days of active-duty training during that year: Provided, however, That Reserve officers for whom inactive-status credits are not a requisite for active-duty training under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, will not be entitled to the allowance: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to prohibit the Secretary of War from accepting the gratuitous services of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army in the furtherance of the enrollment, organization, and training of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army, or in consultation upon matters relating to the military service.

On page 2, line 23, after the word "for", strike out the article "a" and insert the article "the", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps, eligible for active-duty training, shall be entitled to money allowances for inactive-status training and for uniforms and equipment as follows:

(a) Such officers shall be entitled to an annual allowance of $50 payable at the end of each fiscal year: Provided, That such allowance shall not be payable for any fiscal year to officers receiving more than 15 days of active-duty training during that year: Provided, however, That Reserve officers for whom inactive-status credits are not a requisite for active-duty training under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, will not be entitled to the allowance: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to prohibit the Secretary of War from accepting the gratuitous services of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army in the furtherance of the enrollment, organization, and training of the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army, or in consultation upon matters relating to the military service.

(b) For the period of 3 years after their original appointment and under such regulations as the War Department may prescribe, such officers shall be entitled to an allowance of $50 per annum for the purchase of necessary uniforms and equipment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION, UTAH

The bill (S. 1672) authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Salt Lake City, Utah, to construct and maintain certain roads, streets, and boulevards across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to permit the Board of Commissioners of Salt Lake City, Utah, to construct and maintain such roads, streets, and boulevards across lands of the United States located within the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah as he may determine will not interfere with the use of such lands in such manner as the public interest may require. Any grant of permission to construct and maintain any such road, street, or boulevard shall be made subject to such conditions as the Secretary may prescribe for the purpose of protecting the public interest.

EMIL NAVRATIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Emil Navratil, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Emil Navratil, late of Forty-sixth Company, One Hundred and Fifty-second Depot Brigade, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on June 13, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASH RELIEF FOR CANAL ZONE EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 2467) authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the War and Navy Departments in the Canal Zone not coming within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States, may pay cash relief to such employees of the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, in the Canal Zone not coming within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, as may become unfit for further useful service by reason of mental or physical disability resulting from age or disease, and also to such former employees of the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, in the Canal Zone not coming within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act as have within 3 years prior to the date of enactment of this act been separated from the service because of unfitness for further useful service by reason of such disability: Provided, That such cash relief shall not exceed $1 per month for each year of service of the employee so furnished relief, with a maximum of $25 per month, nor be granted to any employee having less than 10 years' service with the War Department or the Navy Department, respectively, including any service with the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

J. ROSS EAKIN

The resolution (S. Res. 131) to investigate the administration of J. Ross Eakin as superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask what reason the Senator from Michigan has for objecting to an investigation of an officer whom the Department itself has had investigated to some extent, and has found that he has been extremely derelict in his duties? What reason has the Senator for objecting to an investigation of that officer by a committee of the Senate?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I saw this particular gentleman somewhat manhandled on the floor of the Senate in connection with some previous legislation, and at that time it seemed to me that he was treated very unfairly in all respects.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know anything about the facts?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator knows that the Secretary of the Interior wrote an 18-page letter, which, evidently, a terrific effort was made to suppress before the Senate was called upon to vote on the matter involving Mr. Eakin. The Senator listened to the Secretary's letter, and it seemed to the Senator that the Secretary of the Interior gave Mr. Eakin a thoroughly clean bill of health.

Mr. McKELLAR. But did the Senator read that which is in the RECORD, which shows that the Secretary of the Interior sent an auditor down to examine into the accounts and affairs of this park under Mr. Eakin, and that the auditor after a careful examination reported innumerable derelictions of duty? Did the Senator read that, or did he pass it over?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me tell the Senator exactly what my attitude is. I am perfectly willing to have Mr. Eakin investigated, but I want to be sure that the basis of the investigation is something different from the basis of his crucifixion on the floor of the Senate a few months ago. When I have an opportunity to study the resolution I probably shall be able to join the Senator in passing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I hope he will examine the resolution. It has been here some time. The leader on the Senator's side, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], has withdrawn objection to having the investigation made. I hope the Senator from Michigan will look into the resolution. When he does, I am quite sure he will find that the investigation ought to be made. I shall be glad to send to the Senator the report of the investigator who investigated this official, and who was defended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR WHEAT

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 248) to provide minimum national allotments for wheat was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have just had a conference with the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] in regard to this joint resolution, and it is mutually agreed that it may go over until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is the same kind of a joint resolution that we had in the case of cotton. The law requires a minimum, and this is the plan agreed on by representatives of wheat and the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES, ETC., BY THE UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 1032) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that measure is of such public interest and importance that it should not be discussed in the brief time permitted under the rule of the Senate, under which we are now acting. It should be given a special assignment later. Therefore I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL FLAGS AND BURIAL OF FORMER SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

The bill (H. R. 2310) to provide national flags for the burial of honorably discharged former service men and women was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 521) for the incorporation of the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic was announced as next in order. Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1939, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT W. GABBEY

The bill (S. 163) directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Albert W. Gabbey a patent to certain lands in the State of Wyoming was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to Albert W. Gabbey, of Jenny Lake, Wyo., a patent in fee to the following-described lands (comprised in stock-raising homestead entry No. 015468, Evanston land office): The west half northeast quarter, the north half northwest quarter, and the southeast quarter northwest quarter and the northeast quarter southwest quarter section 7, township 44 north, range 115 west, sixth principal meridian.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROSPECTING PERMITS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 878) to amend the act of August 26, 1937, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "than", to strike out "one" and insert "two", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (d) of the act of August 26, 1937, entitled "To provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes," is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Under which at least one well shall have been drilled to a depth of not less than 2,000 feet subsequent to August 21, 1935, and prior to January 1, 1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. JONES

The bill (S. 2227) for the relief of John B. Jones was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider, and authorized to grant, the application of John B. Jones, who served as a first lieutenant, One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment United States Infantry, for such of the benefits under the act approved May 24, 1928, as amended, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War," as the said John B. Jones may be entitled to: Provided, That the application of the said John B. Jones shall be filed with the Veterans' Administration within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act.

FORT FRANCIS E. WARREN MILITARY RESERVATION, WYO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2336) to authorize an exchange of lands at the Fort Francis E. Warren Military Reservation, Wyo., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to N. P. Black, of Cheyenne, Wyo., all right, title, and interest of the United States to a portion of the Fort Francis E. Warren Military Reservation, Wyo., consisting of 25 acres, more or less, and to convey another portion of the reservation consisting of 10 acres, more or less, to the city of Cheyenne, Wyo., and to accept in exchange for such conveyances a deed from the said N. P. Black, conveying a fee-simple title to a tract of land consisting of 35 acres, more or less, lying contiguous to the reservation, the three conveyances to be made under such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. GROSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2174) to provide for the appointment of James W. Grose as a sergeant,

1st-class (master sergeant), United States Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "sergeant", to strike out "and he shall not be entitled to receive pay or allowances for the period during which he was not in the active service" and insert "but any increase in pay or allowances to which he may be entitled by reason of the enactment of this act shall be effective only from the date of such enactment", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That James W. Grose, a noncommissioned officer on the retired list of the Regular Army, be placed in the first grade as a master sergeant, but any increase in pay or allowances to which he may be entitled by reason of the enactment of this act shall be effective only from the date of such enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORINNE W. BIENVENU (NEE CORINNE WELLS)

The bill (S. 2370) for the relief of Corinne W. Bienvenu (nee Corinne Wells) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged members of the Army Nurse Corps, Corinne W. Bienvenu, who served under her maiden name of Corinne Wells as a Reserve nurse, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a Reserve nurse on December 29, 1917: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3796) to extend the period of restrictions on lands of the Quapaw Indians, Oklahoma, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3248) authorizing a per capita payment of $15 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of this bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4998) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An identical bill was heretofore passed over, and this bill accordingly will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this the river and harbor bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what disposition was made of House bill 4998?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went over under a previous order.

The bill (S. 1906) for the relief of William H. Rouncevill was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the War Department strongly opposes that bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1918) relating to the retired pay of certain retired Army officers, which was announced as next in order and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That commissioned officers of the Regular Army placed upon the unlimited retired list pursuant to the provisions of that part of the War Department Appropriation Act,

1923, as amended, which provided for the elimination of commissioned officers of the Regular Army in excess of the number therein provided for, shall be entitled to retired pay after the date of enactment of this act, computed as follows:

(1) Those with more than 10 years' and less than 20 years' commissioned service at date of being placed on the unlimited retired list and all additional service on active duty under competent War Department orders subsequent to being placed on the unlimited retired list,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  percent of their active-duty pay multiplied by the number of complete years of such commissioned service, but not in excess of 75 percent of such active pay.

(2) Those with more than 20 years' commissioned service at date of being placed on the unlimited retired list and all additional service on active duty under competent War Department orders subsequent to being placed on the unlimited retired list, 3 percent of their active-duty pay multiplied by the number of complete years of such commissioned service, but not in excess of 75 percent of such active pay.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, this bill has to do with the retired pay of only eight Regular Army officers who, through some misfortune, as a result of not applying or being unable to apply within the specific time-limit under the law of June 1922 have not been allowed the privileges accorded to other retired officers who did apply within the limit. It affects, as I say, only eight retired Regular Army officers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GURNEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I correctly understand that there is no increase in the retirement pay of these officers as compared with other officers having the same years of service?

Mr. GURNEY. There is no increase. In fact, as I understand from the committee hearings, there is a smaller retirement pay.

Mr. WALSH. I make the inquiry because the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, and I are confronted from time to time with variations between the retirement pay in the Army and in the Navy, and both of us are most anxious to see that the pay is uniform in the two services.

Mr. GURNEY. The pay provided under the bill is quite uniform. It gives these officers no advantage.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SELECTION SYSTEM AND PROMOTIONS IN NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4929) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have action taken on this bill today, if possible, though I shall not press the matter if any Senator feels that he would like to have an extensive explanation.

Last year we passed a personnel act for the Navy. It was legislation dealing entirely with the method and system of selecting for promotion of naval officers. This bill seeks to correct some of the errors or misunderstandings which have arisen by reason of different interpretations of some of the provisions of that act. The bill approved by the House provides for retaining in the naval service more officers than are now retained under existing law.

Several substantial changes are made in the House and Senate bills. The bill as reported from the Senate committee contains several amendments to the bill as passed by the House. It will have to go to conference, and many of the differences between the House and Senate will have to be ironed out; and, of course, the bill will have to be approved by the Navy Department and by the President.

The President, as Commander in Chief of the Navy, is particularly interested in the bill; and as reported from the Senate committee it seems to be more acceptable to him in its provisions than as it passed the House. However, whichever form of the measure is passed will be subject to the scrutiny of the Commander in Chief, who very properly considers the personnel of the Navy, its requirements for retaining the most competent officers and not keeping in the higher ranks officers for whom there are no billets, and preventing thereby promotions of younger officers of supreme impotence. Unless it maintains the present standards of selection in the Navy that he believes the Navy needs it will not meet with his approval.

The Members of the Senate and, I am sure, the members of our committee are very much embarrassed by pleas to us to retain in the service competent officers who are not selected under the selective system in the Navy. These pleas are coming to us continuously, urging that exceptions be made. I wish to say, in general, that the pending bill tends to support and sustain and uphold the strict selection system now in vogue in the Navy, namely, the system of selecting for promotion the best fitted, from the highest to the lowest grades.

Any further explanation would take considerable time. There are several amendments which I should like to have acted on, and there are two additional amendments I desire to submit on behalf of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator deem it wise and prudent to commit to the proposed Board, who of course would be naval officers, the duty and responsibility of recommending regarding legislation? Of course they will be interested in promoting legislation favorable to themselves. That is quite natural. I do not quite approve of the idea that we should ask them to recommend legislation which they desire.

Mr. WALSH. There are two groups in the Navy which seem to feel that the laws governing their promotion and retirement should be liberalized, namely, the officers of the staff corps and the officers assigned to engineering duty only and aeronautical engineering duty only. The committee, rather than spend a good deal of time and study on the question itself, which perhaps we ought to give to it, has merely provided for a board of naval officers to report to the Congress and to recommend to us what legislation should be passed. Of course we can reject the recommendations if we desire. But at the request of these various officers we have asked for a study of their status, to see whether the selection laws relating to these officers may be improved.

I think it is desirable that this matter be studied. I agree with the Senator that we should not ipso facto accept any recommendations the Board may make, but the point at issue is, Are the rights of the officers now properly safeguarded under the selection system, and if not, what changes should be made?

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but it seems to me that in view of its very important provisions, it should receive serious consideration. We are constantly bothered with contests between one branch of the service and another, between the Army and the Navy—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have received numerous complaints from officers of the Navy who say they have been very badly treated, and as to some of the complaints there seems to be something to the contentions. As I understand the bill, it would make it more difficult for those who have been dismissed or disconnected from the service to be restored to the service, or to get into the service again. It would make the proposed Board absolute, as I understand the purpose of the bill. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. WALSH. In the Senator's time, I desire to make reply.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Senator realizes the structure of the Navy. The percentage of admirals is based upon the total number of officers. The percentage of captains is based upon the same status, but a larger percentage in the case of captains than of admirals and the same as to commanders; lieutenant commanders; lieutenants, senior grade; lieutenants, junior grade; and ensigns.

If we did not have a designated number of admirals and of captains on the percentage basis, every ensign would become, if he lived, an admiral, and we would have as many admirals as junior officers. So it has become necessary to eliminate officers all along the line, and to give them retirement pay.

Every officer who is found to be qualified has a right to remain 21 years in the service. Twenty-one years is the minimum before an officer who has the proper qualifications can be retired. From 21 years up retirement begins, and it gets more drastic as we get up to the grade of captain.

Last year we increased the number of officers to be promoted by giving the President discretion to designate the percentage of officers for whom there were not vacancies in the next grade and who could be employed in the Navy by reason of its expansion. The act of last year, which we have not interfered with, has given many of these officers the privilege of remaining on active service where they would have been obliged to retire. On the contrary, the law of last year, together with the law of this year, either gives more of these officers an opportunity to remain in the Navy or it increases in some cases the retirement pay of the officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. That does not exactly answer my question. The purpose of the bill is to have an examination made and to make the restrictions greater than heretofore, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I glanced at it very hurriedly, and I was not sure what the purpose was.

Mr. WALSH. The selection system has been the law since 1916. We have had the selection system since 1916, but the law of last year broadened it and enlarged it and gave more officers opportunity to be kept in active service; and the pending bill does the same.

Senators are receiving more complaints than ever, because the Navy is expanding and increasing, and more officers are being retired than formerly—not a larger percentage but more of them—and we will always continue to get the complaints.

For instance, I have been asked to have an amendment added to the pending bill by an officer who was found unsuited and unfitted for the service. He has proposed to me to offer an amendment that we disregard the law and put him back on the Navy list. Of course we cannot do that.

I agree that it is unfortunate that so many of the officers have had to be dropped; but it is a fact, and the retired pay is very satisfactory. After 30 years of service a captain receives $4,500 for the rest of his life, and the lowest retirement pay of any officer would be about $2,100. A man only 21 years in the service of the Navy may retire at the end of that time and get $2,100 for the rest of his life. So, while there is the desire on the part of all the officers to remain in the service, they are very well taken care of on retirement. A man approximately 50 years of age may retire with $4,500 a year for the rest of his life. In what occupation or profession could all employees receive such retirement pay?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not desire to object, Mr. President, but I certainly would like to know the purpose of the bill. The title merely states it is to amend the act of June 23, 1938.

Mr. WALSH. It broadens very much the present provisions of the law and makes it less difficult to retire officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4929) to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 2, after line 7, to strike out the following:

Section 5, subsection (c), add the following sentence: "The Commander in Chief, United States Fleet, may not serve on any such board."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 12, to strike out:

Section 8, in subsection (a) strike out "other than medical."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert the following:

Section 9, subsection (b), change the period to a colon and add the following proviso: "Provided, That officers who are or who may become on promotion additional numbers in grade may be recommended for retention in addition to the number equal to the percentage furnished to the board by the Secretary of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out the following:

(d) The recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers who are now or may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only shall be based upon their fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law, in comparison with other officers in the same kind of service, but not by comparison with officers of the line of the Navy proper; and each such officer who is fitted for the performance of his duties shall be selected for promotion. Upon promotion they shall be carried as additional numbers in grade. Officers assigned to aeronautical engineering duty only shall succeed to command on shore only when designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy.

And to insert:

(d) The recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers who are now or may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law. Upon promotion they shall be carried as additional numbers in grade. Officers assigned to aeronautical engineering duty only shall succeed to command on shore only when designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to strike out the following:

Section 10 of the act approved June 23, 1938, Public, No. 703, Seventy-fifth Congress, change subsection (b) to subsection (c) and insert a new subsection (b) as follows: "(b) The report of the Board shall include a statement of the reasons actuating the selection or promotion of every officer so selected, and also a statement of the reasons actuating the passing over of every officer not selected for promotion."

Strike out section 11 (a) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), and insert the following as section 11 (a): "The names of officers designated by a board as best fitted for promotion and the names of officers adjudged by a board as fitted for promotion and approved by the President shall be placed upon a promotion list and promotion to fill vacancies shall be made from officers of the next lower grade whose names appear as having been designated as best fitted for promotion on such promotion list in accordance with the date of their original commission in the Regular Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 5, after the words "Provided further", to strike out "That until June 30, 1944, such officers shall not be retired until they shall have completed the periods of commissioned service prescribed for their respective grades in subsection (d) of this section for fitted officers recommended for retention on the active list, and they may become eligible for selection as provided and as limited in subsection (d) of this section"; and to insert "That any officer retired pursuant to this subsection in the grade of commander who shall not have completed 23 years of service for pay purposes at the time of retirement shall receive retired pay computed at the rate provided for officers who have completed 23 years of service", so as to read:

Section 12, subsection (f), in line 5, change "from" to "to", and in line 6, after "promoted", insert "computed as provided in subsection (b) of this section."

Section 12, subsection (f), add the following proviso: "Provided further, That any officer retired pursuant to this subsection in the grade of commander who shall not have completed 23 years of service for pay purposes at the time of retirement shall receive retired pay computed at the rate provided for officers who have completed 23 years of service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 17, to strike out the following:

(m) Officers now serving or who shall hereafter serve as Chief of Naval Operations or as Commander in Chief, United States Fleet, shall upon detachment from duty as Chief of Naval Operations or as Commander in Chief, United States Fleet, retain the rank of admiral and shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of a rear admiral of the upper half and the personal money allowance of an admiral. When such officers are 66 years old they shall be retired by the President from active service.

And to insert the following:

(m) Any officer who has heretofore been retired or who may hereafter be retired while serving in the grade or with the rank of admiral or vice admiral on the active list, or who has heretofore been retired or who may hereafter be retired while serving in a lower grade or rank after having served in the grade or with the rank of admiral or vice admiral on the active list, may, in the discretion of the President, be retired in the highest grade or with the highest rank held by him on the active list: Provided, That nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances authorized for any officer by the act entitled "An act to provide for the retirement, rank, and pay of Chiefs of Naval Operations, Chiefs of Bureau of the Navy Department, the Judge Advocates General of the Navy, and the Major Generals Commandant of the Marine Corps," approved June 22, 1938 (52 Stat. 839; 34 U. S. C. 635a).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to strike out the following:

Section 12, subsection (d), strike out all the language in parentheses, in lines 7 to 11.

Section 13 of Public, 703, Seventy-fifth Congress, subsection (a), line 4, change the word "eight" to "nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 24, to insert the following:

Strike out section 13 and subsection 15 (e).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to strike out the following:

SEC. 15. The Secretary of the Navy each fiscal year shall appoint a board of five rear admirals of the upper half whose duty it shall be to report the names of all officers eligible for its consideration who in its judgment shall be retained on active duty. Any officer so considered and not recommended for retention by the report of such board as approved by the President shall be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which he completes 38 years of service, computed as hereafter provided, and shall thereafter receive 75 percent of the active-duty pay of a rear admiral of the upper half. The Secretary of the Navy shall furnish the board with the names of all rear admirals on the active list who have completed over 36 years and less than 38 years of service, counting commissioned service and service as a midshipman after graduation from the Naval Academy, but shall not furnish the name of any rear admiral who has previously been recommended for retention in accordance with this act. All officers whose names are furnished the board as herein provided shall be eligible for its consideration. The board shall conduct its proceedings and make its report in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert the following section:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy once each fiscal year shall appoint a board consisting of five officers serving in the senior half of the grade of rear admiral on the active list of the Navy, whose duty it shall be to report the names of all officers eligible for its consideration who in its judgment should be retained on active duty. Any officer so considered and not recommended for retention by the report of such board, as such report is approved by the President, shall be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which he completes 38 years of service, computed as hereinafter provided, and shall thereafter receive 75 percent of his active-duty pay at the time of retirement. The Secretary of the Navy shall furnish the board with the names of all rear admirals on the active list of the line of the Navy who have completed over 36 years and less than 38 years of service, counting commissioned service and service as a midshipman after graduation from the Naval Academy, but shall not furnish the name of any rear admiral who has previously been recommended for retention in accordance with this act. All officers whose names are furnished the board as herein provided shall be eligible for its consideration. The board shall conduct its proceedings and make its report in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert the following section:

Sec. 3. Any action which may have been taken prior to the date of enactment of this act pursuant to subsection 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 952; 34 U. S. C. 687), is hereby declared to be of no effect and void ab initio, and no officer shall be retired pursuant to any recommendation made by a board convened under the provisions of section 13 and subsection 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938, or either of them: Provided, That any action so taken pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or subsection 15 (e) of the said act of June 23, 1938, and the designating of any officer for retirement in order to maintain an average number of vacancies shall not in any manner or degree prejudice such officer's subsequent selection or promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 13, to insert the following section:

Sec. 4. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of officers of the Navy to investigate and report upon all matters concerning the promotion and retirement of officers of the staff corps of the Navy and of officers of the line of the Navy assigned to engineering duty only or designated or appointed for the performance of aeronautical engineering duty only. The board shall make such recommendations, including recommendations regarding the enactment of legislation, as it deems appropriate and justified concerning the subject matter herein referred. The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to cause the report of the board herein authorized to be transmitted to the Congress within 10 days of the beginning of the session of the Seventy-sixth Congress convening on or about January 3, 1940.

The amendment was agreed to.

So as to make the bill, as amended, read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), is hereby amended as follows:

Section 5, strike out subsection (a) and substitute the following:

"(a) The board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grades of rear admiral and captain shall consist of nine rear admirals on the active list of the line of the Navy, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only. The board for the recommendation of line officers for promotion to the grade of commander shall consist of three rear admirals and six captains on the active list of the line of the Navy, not restricted by law to the performance of shore duty only. These boards shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy and convened at least once each year and at such times as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

Section 7, in subsections (a) and (b), strike out "or who is not physically qualified."

Section 9, in subsection (a), after the word "act" in line 7, insert "exclusive of officers who are or may become on promotion additional numbers in grade."

Section 9, subsection (b), change the period to a colon and add the following proviso: "Provided, That officers who are or who may become on promotion additional numbers in grade may be recommended for retention in addition to the number equal to the percentage furnished to the board by the Secretary of the Navy."

Section 9, strike out subsection (d) and amend subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(d) The recommendations of selection boards in the case of officers who are now or may hereafter be assigned to engineering duty only or to aeronautical engineering duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness for the duties prescribed for them by law. Upon promotion they shall be carried as additional numbers in grade. Officers assigned to aeronautical engineering duty only shall succeed to command on shore only when designated to do so by the Secretary of the Navy."

Section 9, strike out subsection (f) and substitute the following:

"(e) All reports or recommendations of a line selection board under any provision of law shall require the concurrence of at least two-thirds of the members."

Section 11, in subsection (b), at the end of the second proviso, insert "with retired pay computed as provided in section 12 (b) of this act."

Section 12, subsection (f), in line 5, change "from" to "to", and in line 6, after "promoted", insert "computed as provided in subsection (b) of this section."

Section 12, subsection (f), add the following proviso: "Provided further, That any officer retired pursuant to this subsection in the grade of commander who shall not have completed 23 years of service for pay purposes at the time of retirement shall receive retired pay computed at the rate provided for officers who have completed 23 years of service."

Section 12, strike out subsection (k) and substitute the following: "(k) Lieutenant commanders and lieutenants with date of rank as such prior to June 23, 1938, and lieutenants (junior grade) who on that date were carried as additional numbers in grade by reason of not having been recommended for promotion, shall, at their own request, in lieu of honorable discharge as provided in subsection (c) of this section, be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they fail of selection as best fitted the second time or on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they complete the period of service designated in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended (U. S. C., title 34, Supp. III, secs. 286a and 286i), whichever date shall be later: Provided, That any officer retained on the active list pursuant to this subsection shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by subsequent selection boards: Provided further, That lieutenants who served in the Navy or Naval Reserve Force prior to November 12, 1918, and who shall have completed not less than 21 years of service shall, if retired under any provision of law, be advanced to the grade of lieutenant commander on the retired list: And provided further, That the retired pay of officers retired pursuant to this subsection shall be computed as provided in subsection (b) of this section, on the basis of the active-duty pay of their rank on the retired list."

Section 12, add subsection (m), as follows:

"(m) Any officer who has heretofore been retired or who may hereafter be retired while serving in the grade or with the rank of admiral or vice admiral on the active list, or who has heretofore been retired or who may hereafter be retired while serving in a lower grade or rank after having served in the grade or with the rank of admiral or vice admiral on the active list, may, in the discretion of the President, be retired in the highest grade or with the highest rank held by him on the active list: Provided, That nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances authorized for any officer by the act entitled 'An act to provide for the retirement, rank, and pay of Chiefs of Naval Operations, Chiefs of Bureau of the Navy Department, the Judge Advocates General of the Navy, and the Major Generals Commandant of the Marine Corps,' approved June 22, 1938 (52 Stat. 839; 34 U. S. C. 685a)."

Section 14, in line 9 of subsection (a), after "grade", insert "with probationary appointments."

Strike out section 13 and subsection 15 (e).

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Navy once each fiscal year shall appoint a board consisting of five officers serving in the senior half of the grade of rear admiral on the active list of the Navy, whose duty it shall be to report the names of all officers eligible for its consideration who in its judgment should be retained on active duty. Any officer so considered and not recommended for retention by the report of such board, as such report is approved by the President, shall be retired on June 30 of the fiscal year in which he completes 38 years of service, computed as hereinafter provided, and shall thereafter receive 75 percent of his active duty pay at the time of retirement. The Secretary of the Navy shall furnish the board with the names of all rear admirals on the active list of the line of the Navy who have completed over 36 years and less than 38 years of service, counting commissioned service and service as a midshipman after graduation from the Naval Academy, but shall not furnish the name of any rear admiral who has previously been recommended for retention in accordance with this act. All officers whose names are furnished the board as herein provided shall be eligible for its consideration. The board shall conduct its proceedings and make its report in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the Marine Corps.

Sec. 3. Any action which may have been taken prior to the date of enactment of this act pursuant to subsection 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 952; 34 U. S. C. 687), is hereby declared to be of no effect and void ab initio, and no officer shall be retired pursuant to any recommendation made by a board convened under the provisions of section 13 and subsection 15 (e) of the act of June 23, 1938, or either of them: Provided, That any action so taken pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or subsection 15 (e) of the said act of June 23, 1938, and the designating of any officer for retirement in order to maintain an average number of vacancies, shall not in any manner or degree prejudice such officer's subsequent selection or promotion.

Sec. 4. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of officers of the Navy to investigate and report upon all matters concerning the promotion and retirement of officers of the staff corps of the Navy and of officers of the line of the Navy assigned to engineering duty only or designated or appointed for the performance of aeronautical engineering duty only. The board shall make such recommendations, including recommendations regarding the enactment of legislation, as it deems appropriate and justified concerning the subject matter herein referred. The Secretary of the Navy is further directed to cause the report of the board herein authorized to be transmitted to the Congress within 10 days of the beginning of the session of the Seventy-sixth Congress convening on or about January 3, 1940.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there are two amendments which I should like to have agreed to in addition to those already incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 23, after the word "Navy", it is proposed to add "irrespective of whether such officers were adjudged fitted for promotion by that board or by a previous board or boards."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have another amendment to offer, and I ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 5, beginning with line 5, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I present an amendment to that amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 11, in lieu of the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

That any officer retired on or after June 30, 1939, pursuant to this subsection in the grade of commander who shall not have completed 23 years of service for pay purposes at the time of retirement shall receive from the date of such retirement retired pay computed at the rate provided for officers who have completed 23 years of service: And provided further, That any such officer may, at his own request in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, at any time after approval by the President of the report of a selection board in which such officer was adjudged fitted for promotion but not recommended for retention on the active list, be retired pursuant to this subsection without regard to the provisions of the first proviso of this subsection and without regard to the provisions of subsection (j) of this section.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President—

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I thought I was recognized a moment ago.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask a question, if I may.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senate remained in session until after 1 o'clock night before last in order to expedite the passage of the relief bill. The conferees sat all day yesterday, until nearly midnight last night, with a view to expediting the preparation of the relief bill, so that adequate care could be taken of the two and a half million people in this country who need assistance. Nearly 2 hours ago the House agreed to the conference report on the relief bill. We have been spending time passing bills, many of which are of little consequence. Time is running, and before long it will be midnight, and the W. P. A. will go out of existence, and the inference, Mr. President, is spreading in this body that there is a deliberate effort on somebody's part to delay the progress of the conferees' report on the relief bill in this body.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ADAMS. I will not yield just now, until I shall have finished one sentence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not yield at this point.

Mr. ADAMS. That, Mr. President, is the inference which is spreading. I do not know that it is true, but I do know that a measure of such transcendent importance as the relief bill certainly should not be delayed and dragged along. I do not know what can be done. I do not know that it is proper for the Senate to make inquiry; but I do think that it is appropriate to mention the matter. As chairman of the subcommittee, who has carried the burden, I feel that delay of this kind is not fair to the Senate; it is not fair to those who have been bearing the burden, it is not fair to those who are involved in the relief measure, those who come under it, and, as I have said, the inference is growing, perhaps unjustifiably, that there is a deliberate attempt being made to delay the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to join the Senator from Colorado in his request that steps be taken to take up the conference report on the relief measure. The relief measure passed the Senate by a unanimous record vote. We have gone to great trouble and through great difficulties to prepare a conference report. Now that we have a conference report which has been agreed to by all the conferees in my judgment, there is no justification for delay. I hope we will act on the report on the relief bill now. It ought to be brought before the Senate and adopted immediately, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state to the Senate that the report has not come over from the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. It passed the House some time ago. There is something very unusual about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the majority leader ought to have an opportunity to take part in the discussion of this matter, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gillette	McCarran	Slattery
Barkley	Glass	McKellar	Smathers
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Taft
Borah	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Townsend

Clark, Mo.	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, published this morning informed the Senate of the report of the conference committee on the relief bill to the House. It indicated by number the various changes that were agreed to by the conferees on the part of both branches of Congress. I am informed that the relief conference report was adopted in the other branch of Congress about 1 o'clock today. It is now 3:45.

Mr. President, without characterizing in one way or another the situation, I call attention to the fact that after the transaction of that business, to-wit, at 1:20 o'clock this afternoon, the deficiency appropriation conference report was adopted in the other body. That deficiency report has been transmitted already to the Senate, and the Senate has acted upon it.

Mr. President, I rise not to criticize, but only to comment, that the minority, as I am informed, is eager, notwithstanding the failure of agreement to certain principles written into the relief bill by the Senate by a large majority, notwithstanding the undoubted necessary yielding on the part of the conferees for the Senate, nevertheless the minority recognizes its responsibility to do all it can to promote the passage on time of relief legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not quite now. If I may be excused for a moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I can enlighten the Senator probably on the matter which he has in his mind.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have just been over to the House of Representatives for the purpose of inquiring when we may expect the conference report. I have been told that during my absence comment was made here on the fact that I was absent. I am informed that the conference report will be here in a very few minutes, and when it comes I can guarantee the Senate that it will be taken up for prompt consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the leader of the majority for that assurance. Further, I want to say to him that I have been here throughout the discussion of this particular matter, and I have heard no Senator comment unfavorably upon the absence of the majority leader. I have heard no one criticize him for it. As a matter of fact, one of his own colleagues on the same side of the aisle merely observed that he thought that before any further proceedings on this subject should take place the roll should be called for the purpose of securing a quorum in view of the absence of the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course all Senators know that on days such as this it is necessary for those in charge of legislation at each end of the Capitol to cooperate and confer in order to facilitate the transaction of business. I have made three trips to the other branch, realizing that it is at the present time considering another important report, to ascertain when that report is going to be here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will suspend in order that the Senate may receive a message from the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Callo-way, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2618) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that satisfies the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate further. What has just taken place seems to me to terminate the debate in the most fortunate manner.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 17, 25, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 129, 130, and 131, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "recreational, production, and service projects, including training for domestic service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the funds appropriated in this section shall not be used for the purchase of any construction equipment or machinery in any case in which such equipment or machinery can be rented at prices determined by the Commissioner to be reasonable, and his determinations, made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall be final and conclusive"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "In the aggregate the sum of $50,000,000 during the fiscal year 1940, of which sum the amounts so to be obligated for the following respective purposes shall not exceed these sums: Salaries, $42,500,000; communication service, $600,000; travel, $4,200,000; and printing and binding, $500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Commissioner shall transmit to Congress, on the first day of each regular session thereof, a statement showing for each State the names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all employees of the Work Projects Administration whose compensation is at the rate of $1,200 per annum or more. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'State' shall include the Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$143,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "On and after July 1, 1939, and until June 30, 1940, said Board shall be composed of three members to be appointed by the President from widely separated sections of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,755,600,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 15. (a) The Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1 which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration. After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living. The Commissioner shall require that the hours of work for all persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part by funds appropriated by section 1 shall (1) be one hundred and thirty hours per month except that the Commissioner, in his discretion, may require a lesser number of hours of work per month in the case of relief workers with no dependents and the earnings of such workers shall be correspondingly reduced, and (2) not exceed eight hours in any day and shall not exceed forty hours in any week.

"(b) The Commissioner may authorize exemptions from the above limitations of monthly earnings and hours of work to protect work already done on a project; to permit making up lost time; in the case of an emergency involving the public welfare and in the case of supervisory personnel employed on work projects."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "determined, as far as practicable, on the basis of relative needs and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"(b) There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers, excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed on such projects for more than eighteen months, and any relief worker so removed shall be ineligible to be restored to employment on such projects until after (a) the expiration of thirty days after the date of his removal, and (b) recertification of his eligibility for restoration to employment on such projects. In the case of relief workers whose period of eighteen months of continuous employment expires before September 1, 1939, this section shall apply to require their removal not later than August 31, 1939, rather than on such expiration date."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "any compensation after September 30, 1939, too"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 25. None of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be available—

"(a) After June 30, 1939, for the operation of any theater project, except that any person employed on any such project on June 30, 1939, may continue to be carried on the pay roll, with or without assignment of duty incidental to the closing down of such project, and paid his salary or wage (1) for the month of July 1939, if such person is an administrative, supervisory, or other non-certified worker, or (2) for a period ending not later than September 30, 1939, if such person is a certified relief worker; or

"(b) After August 31, 1939, for the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Work Projects Administration.

"This section shall not prohibit the payment of wages or salaries accrued, or of nonlabor obligations incurred, in connection with any such project if the wages or salaries accrued or the obligation was incurred prior to August 1, 1939, October 1, 1939, or September 1, 1939, as the case may be."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(other than those derived from the first processing of sweet potatoes)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "This section shall not apply to municipal electric plants in communities not now adequately served at reasonable rates"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by such amendment after the word "appropriations" insert the following: "(except persons now serving as such under other law)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment of the title: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the joint resolution, and agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire with respect to one or two items. With respect to the 18-month provision, the House provision was that at the end of 18 months of employment, upon application of any unemployed person who had been on the list for 3 months, preference would be given to such person. The Senate adopted an amendment to that provision, providing that that preference should not apply in the event undue hardship would result. Can the Senator advise us what the conferees did in that connection?

Mr. ADAMS. The conferees inserted an amendment which was largely modeled after the House language. It is in the report. I shall read it to the Senator, or call his attention to it, on page 4 of the report. It provides:

(b) There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed on such projects for more than 18 months, and any relief worker so removed shall be ineligible to be restored to employment on such projects until after (a) the expiration of 30 days after the date of his removal, and (b) recertification of his eligibility for restoration to employment on such projects. In the case of relief workers whose period of 18 months of continuous employment expires before September 1, 1939, this section shall apply to require their removal not later than August 31, 1939, rather than on such expiration date.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the Senator's interpretation that that language, practically the language of the House, would automatically result in the discharge of any person who had been employed for 18 months with the exception of veterans?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether or not someone else were ready to take the job, or whether or not there were any certified list?

Mr. ADAMS. They would be off only 30 days.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have to be recertified and go through the same process as they did in the beginning?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that it is a rigid, automatic dismissal of all those who have been on the rolls for 18 months, unless they happen to be veterans.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senate conferees greatly preferred the Senate language. That was one of the concessions the Senate conferees were compelled to make.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not had an opportunity to pick out these items. What limitation was placed on non-Federal public buildings in the conference report?

Mr. ADAMS. Fifty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for the information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I inquire what happened to the provision requiring 25 percent of the cost of W. P. A. projects to be locally subscribed?

Mr. ADAMS. That provision continues in the bill, with some slight modifications.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I inquire what the modifications are?

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator have the number of that amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I have not.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, as the report stands it provides for the average of 25 percent in a State, as a State-wide average.

Mr. ADAMS. I should answer more accurately that the House receded, and the Senate amendment stands as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suppose I ought not to complain because the Senate amendment was sustained, inasmuch as I had intended later to complain rather violently that some other Senate amendments have not been sustained. I should like to read for the RECORD a telegram from the acting mayor of the city of Detroit:

DETROIT, MICH., June 29, 1939.

Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The provision in the proposed W. P. A. bill requiring local communities to put up at least 25 percent of the cost of the W. P. A. projects automatically forces Detroit to face bankruptcy and ruin. As you well know, we have been skating on the thin edge of solvency for several years and this additional burden will be the straw that breaks the camel's back. We urge you to bend every effort to obtain some elasticity in this program so that communities like Detroit will be at least temporarily extricated from the unusual hardships created by this amendment.

EDWARD J. JEFFRIES,
Acting Mayor of Detroit.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and after I have yielded to the Senator from Arizona I should like to yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] because I should like to have him briefly discuss the situation presented by the telegram which I have just read.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator can advise the acting mayor that there is elasticity in the language adopted by the Senate, and that the acting mayor is mistaken in his telegram, which indicates that he thinks that the city of Detroit must put up the full 25 percent on any project it may sponsor. The language of the House provision is that for the State of Michigan as a whole there must be a 25-percent contribution. However, one project may be above 25 percent and another below 25 percent. When the year is completed the State administrator in Michigan must have obtained 25 percent sponsorship. However, that requirement does not apply to any particular project or to any particular city in the State of Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the elasticity to which the Senator refers consists of the privilege of some other community in Michigan paying 35 percent so that Detroit would have to pay only 15 percent. Is that the situation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Or it may be that Detroit will pay 15 percent on certain of its projects, and pay more than 25 percent on others, just as has been done before. There is no change in the procedure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I notice, on the basis of last year's statistics as presented in the debate a few days ago, that the average local contribution in the State of Michigan is 14.9 percent. Let us say there is a local contribution of 15 percent. That figure, as I understand, is a State average. Do I now confront, and do the mayor of Detroit and the other responsible officials of Michigan confront, a situation in which they must increase from an average of 15 percent to an average of 25 percent the measure of local contribution?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct. However, I am at a loss to understand, when the national average has been 22 percent, how the State of Michigan has been contributing only 14 percent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Strange to say, as the statistics indicate, the State of Michigan, being one of the heavily industrialized Commonwealths of the Nation, has probably suffered more heavily than any State in the Union except Ohio in the matter of loss of tax income and personal income during the past 2 or 3 years. The necessity for a reduced ratio of contribution has been inescapable. Obviously, it must have been inescapable or the W. P. A. administration would have exacted larger ratios of contribution.

Mr. HAYDEN. It may be that the State administrator in Michigan was unusually capable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Whatever the situation, as I understand, the complaint of the acting mayor of Detroit is justified to this extent, that if he has to live under the average which is now to be imposed upon the Commonwealth as a whole he will have to produce a 25-percent contribution.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; with a big "if." That is true.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the answer is that the State of Michigan will have to make the same percentage of contribution that is made by the other States of the Union. The average for the Union is 22.5, or was 30 days ago; and according to the Administrator it will be 25 percent by December. This amendment, according to the Senate action, would take effect January 1. The acting mayor of Detroit evidently received the same telegram which was received by every mayor in the country from the secretary of the Mayors' Conference, who, by sending a form telegram, endeavored to have sent to us telegrams from the mayor of my city, the mayor of Detroit, and the mayor of every other city in the country. The telegram indicates that the acting mayor of Detroit was unaware of the provisions of the amendment, and that he believes it applies to every project. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the amendment means that the State must put up an average of 25 percent. However, as the Senator from Michigan knows, the city of Detroit does not make its contribution wholly in cash. The amount of cash is less than 5 percent for the country as a whole. All the acting mayor of Detroit will be called upon to do will be to put up a small percentage in cash, and then furnish certain things to the W. P. A. project. He can furnish supervisory employees. Their salaries will be credited to the city's contribution. The equipment of the city will be credited to the city's contribution. Certainly the city of Detroit, favored as it was by the W. P. A., can put up supervisory employees and equipment, such as concrete mixers and tractors, in order to make its contribution correspond with that of the other cities of the country.

So far as the Senate conferees are concerned, the Senate voted on this question, and by a record vote of more than 2 to 1, the amendment was adopted. I think the Senator from Michigan was unavoidably absent at the time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No. I was paired against the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator was paired against it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The position of the Senate has been sustained. The amendment will not work any hardship, but will require the State of Michigan to pay the same percentage as the State of Nebraska, the State of New Hampshire, and every other State of the Union.

The city of Detroit will not be called upon by the State administrator, who is familiar with the situation in Michigan, to put up more if it can be collected from other points in the State. We can rest assured that the State administrator will exercise the discretion wisely and so ask for contributions as to be able to comply with the law without hurting the city of Detroit.

I do not think the Senator from Michigan, because of the telegram from the acting mayor of Detroit, would expect the Senate or the Congress to grant an exception in favor of Michigan as against all the other States of the Union.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly not, and the testimony of the acting mayor of Detroit happens to be the same testimony that has come in from practically all the other mayors of industrial cities. I am raising the question purely for information. I have no complaint in the world against the action of the Senate conferees. I think it is a refreshing thing that the Senate conferees did stand by the Senate's action and did bring back this amendment as voted by the Senate. I wish that habit might be more contagious than it is.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Ohio, I think, introduced a bill on the subject of relief, and, if I recall correctly, in the bill thus introduced by the Senator from Michigan, associated with the Senator from Ohio, it is provided that the States shall put up one-third, I believe. This provision does not require the State of Michigan to do as much as the Senator's bill would require.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I am sorry that is not true.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator's bill would require one-third to be put up locally; the pending bill requires one-fourth.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The bill which we have presented, which is a continuing presentation of the record we have made on this subject for 3 years, would unify all relief and require only a contribution of a third against all relief. That would include all the direct relief which the local communities are now assuming 100 percent.

Mr. BYRNES. But the Senator believes in the principle that the local governments should contribute as high as one-third?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Completely.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator. I think this provision is less burdensome because it requires only one-fourth and leaves it to an average in the State and not to each project.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think this situation once more exemplifies and illustrates the impossibility of dealing with relief on anything except a unified basis. The trouble in the city of Detroit, the trouble in all other municipalities, is that, under the existing relief formula, they are left with a hundred percent of the burden for local relief, and by the time they have paid the whole 100-percent bill for local relief, their resources have been so taxed that it is almost impossible for them to meet the requirements of the Federal formula. When we unify, as I have always thought it necessary, and I always will think so, the relief problem, and make the Federal contribution against the sum total of the local relief responsibility, and permit the States and local communities to deal with their own relief problem as their own necessities and their own resources plus the Federal grants-in-aid permit, it seems to me we will reach the only possible basis upon which we can finally afford adequate relief within the resources still available in the United States with which to meet relief.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. With respect to the total cost of the two kinds of relief, does local relief amount to more than work relief?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Local relief across the country, as I understand, averages about $23 a month as compared with the average across the country of perhaps $53 a month for work relief. In other words, the Federal formula creates out-of-work relievers a special privileged group within the relief group.

Mr. HAYDEN. Taking the State of Michigan, and considering all the relief paid, both to those who are employables and those who are unemployables, to whom does the most money go—to the employables or the unemployables?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to answer the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I assume that it costs about half as much for direct relief as it does for W. P. A. plus the sponsors contribution; so if the locality has spent $50,000 for direct relief and also $25,000 for a $100,000 W. P. A. appropriation it means that one-half the total cost of relief will fall on the locality under the formula instituted by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. In this bill the requirement is one-fourth. In the bill introduced by the Senators from Michigan and Ohio one-third is required of local governments.

Mr. TAFT. It is one-third.

Mr. BYRNES. Instead of having a Federal contribution of two-thirds to a State, this bill provides for three-fourths by the Federal Government and a contribution of one-fourth by the sponsor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Whatever the mathematics—and the actual mathematics is irrelevant and immaterial so far as the bill submitted by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New Jersey and myself is concerned we have no pride of opinion regarding the percentages. The purpose of the bill is simply to set up the basis and formula to illustrate the theory upon which we think ultimately it will be necessary to handle relief, if we are going to stay within the available resources of the American taxpayer; and if we are going beyond the resources of the American taxpayer to an extent that we no longer can indulge ourselves in deficit spending, then, when the public credit shall have been destroyed, there will be nothing left by way of relief for anybody.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I was interested to observe that the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Ohio, in trying to work out the relief problem, the problem of giving jobs to the unemployed, have clearly indicated that they have placed the major part of the responsibility for that task upon the Federal Government and not the local governments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sorry but I did not hear the Senator's observation.

Mr. PEPPER. I said I was interested to observe that the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Ohio, in endeavoring to solve the problem of relief and unemployment, have indicated their opinion that the major share of the responsibility for the solution of that problem is on the Federal Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Ohio can answer for himself in his own time. So far as I am concerned, I recognize the fiscal responsibility of the Federal Government within the limits of its resources to accept its whole share of responsibility for relief; but I recognize, fundamentally and primarily, that the responsibility for decision, the responsibility for administration, the responsibility for policing the system, must be localized under home rule or sooner or later, we are going to be destroyed by the very Frankenstein we have created.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, the Senators are willing for the States to take $2 of Federal money every time $1 of their money is spent, and to have the complete say-so as to how it shall be spent?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and if any proposition were pending which would permit the State of Florida to take $2 for $1 of its own money, I know exactly how the Senator from Florida would vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. I merely wish to say that it has been proven that the Senator from Michigan can be pretty sure that when he votes one way the Senator from Florida will vote the other way. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my assurance—and about the only one I have—that my record is fairly good. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to point out at this time, although I am in sympathy with what the Senator from Michigan would like to do, that as to local responsibility actually the local authorities are in charge of the selection of projects and the selection of personnel. Under the pending relief measure, and under existing law, the local authorities have the complete say-so as to who shall go on the relief rolls and as to what projects may be initiated under W. P. A. It seems to me that there is a great misapprehension as to the matter of local control. I should like to have the RECORD show that there is a complete local responsibility except in the matter of appropriating funds.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The exception to which the Senator refers is precisely the thing that I emphasized—namely, control of funds; and until the State and local communities, in my humble judgment, are able to apply their total available Federal contributions in whatever unified manner the local necessity may best dictate, I submit that all the other local controls are quite secondary.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont will yield further, I should like to suggest that the Senator from Michigan is laboring under a misapprehension. The State authorities have the complete say-so as to what projects shall be initiated; the local authorities have absolute and complete charge of who shall have jobs and of determining needs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agreed to all that, but the State authorities have not anything on earth to say about the diversion of one single nickel of Federal grants-in-aid to their local unemployment problems. My position is until they can have all their money in one reservoir to be used for their problems as one single contemplation, they do not have the freedom which is essential to the easiest and most economical answer to the problem.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, if I may have another moment of the time of the Senator from Vermont, I should like to say to the Senator from Michigan that if he desires to put relief into politics the suggestion he just made does it rather completely, in my opinion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is very sure that I do not wish to do any such thing, I take it.

Mr. MALONEY. No; I do not think the Senator does, but the argument he makes would do just that if carried into effect.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we get in much further than we have gotten in, we would be in a long way.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on the question of alleged control of personnel in W. P. A., I think the language of the pending bill settles the question and determines that it is not local control unless the Federal Government sees fit to permit it to be local control. It may be that the Senator from Connecticut is talking about the practical application of the law, and that what he may have observed were cases where local control was permitted.

The pending measure on this point contains the following language at page 24, line 8:

There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers whose needs for employment have not been certified by, and, except as provided in section 17 (b), no relief worker shall be employed on such projects until after his need for employment has been certified by (a) a local public certifying agency or (b) the Work Projects Administration where no such agency exists, or where the Work Projects Administration certifies by reason of its refusal to accept certification by local public agencies.

It seems to me no language could be clearer to show that the ultimate, the absolute control of personnel employed in W. P. A. is here at Washington. The great Government at Washington controls that little detail out in the small town in the Green Mountains, for example, if it wants to do so. There may be cases in which it will not exercise that power, and in which local control will be effective. I believe it was effective in my own State; and we had a remarkably fine administrator. He was a Democrat, a very good Democrat, and he handled his job with absolute honesty and fairness, and I think completely free from political interference.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that it does not seem to me to be unusual that a Democratic administrator was efficient. The Senator from Vermont points out that so far as his State is concerned, the present plan seems to work well; that there is a local supervision, and the local authorities operate efficiently and without unnecessary interference by the Federal Government. I wonder if he knows of any instances in which that is not true.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; unfortunately, I do. I sat as a member of the Investigating Committee on Campaign Expenditures for the campaign of 1936, and joined in a unanimous report showing places where it was entirely incorrect. Since then I have been a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, appointed to consider a proposed recount, and I have in my office yet the transcript of the evidence taken in that matter; and if the Senator doubts that there has been control from headquarters, I should like to have him take this evidence and look it over. What appeared with respect to political interference with relief impelled me, two sessions ago, to introduce a bill to take relief out of politics and take politics out of relief. That bill was killed by a majority of only one in the Senate—Senators on both sides of the aisle voting for the bill, and, of course, Senators on both sides of the aisle voting against it. Since that time the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the chairman of the latest Senate Investigating Committee on Campaign Expenditures, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPARD], and myself got together and put all our ideas together in one bill, known as the Hatch bill, which is still pending in the House of Representatives. The Senate passed the bill. We have learned today, from the address of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, that section 9 of that bill, which was an important section, has been deleted from it by the House. There probably will be a further opportunity for the Senate to consider the bill.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I have not yet finished my answer, however, to the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. All this is merely to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Connecticut, "Yes; I do know, from the best evidence available, of many cases in which local control did not exist free from the centralized influence."

I now yield, if the Senator wishes to interrupt me.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to say to the Senator that I joined him in attempting to remove politics from relief by supporting the Hatch proposal and every similar proposal, and I am appreciative of his efforts. I am familiar, however, with the evidence before the committee of which he speaks and with its report; and it seemed to me that, while there were abuses, they were to as great an extent, if not to a greater extent, due to local political situations as they were to the national situation or to the Federal Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think that perhaps is so—that to a greater extent the local influences created the bad political conditions—but the question I was answering was whether I knew of instances where there was not local control of personnel free from Federal influence, free from the exercise of the veto which is contained in the law. My answer was, yes; I know of many of them.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator refer to the report of the committee of which he and I were members in 1936 for the source of the many complaints to which he has reference?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. I want to say to the Senator that my memory is not the same as his about that matter. I thought there were very few such instances indeed. We went into all of those complaints, such as Mr. Hard, on behalf of the Republican committee of Pennsylvania, was broadcasting over the radio, and found without exception that there was no foundation in fact for any of those charges.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the learned Senator from Indiana and I did not quite agree on all the details of what ought to be the finding of fact. I was willing to sign the report, which he signed also, which modified to a great extent the conclusions I myself had arrived at; but for the purpose of our consideration of this conference report one instance alone is sufficient. It is painting the picture rather blacker than necessary to say that there were many. My answer would have been adequate, I think, if I had understated the matter rather than overstating it, as the Senator from Indiana thinks I did.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Will not the Senator from Vermont agree that the conference report which is now pending provides language to make unlawful any of the acts about which he complains?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do agree. I am very much gratified to find in this bill those regulatory measures which are new. They change the law and make it better. In fact, I think on the whole this report is an excellent one. I am going to vote to accept it. I am going to vote to accept it, notwithstanding my bitter disappointment at the striking out of the bill as it left the Senate of that item, No. 25. I rose originally to speak about that, not with a view of criticizing the conferees for their action. I think they are entitled to take such action as they find it necessary or expedient to take with respect to a disagreement between the Houses. Therefore I do not criticize them. I do not examine them to find out whether they worked hard or worked little, but I have been voluntarily informed that a thought was expressed in that conference which I cannot allow to pass without comment. That thought was that the proposal of amendment of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act accomplished by my amendment was not germane to this joint resolution because it was not in the interest of relief.

Mr. President, since this matter is sure to survive, for I will not let it die, I want the Senate to get this view of that amendment, which will no longer subsist after we have accepted the conference report. It is this:

The single, simple, clear object of the amendment was to prevent the happening of things which would force good, thrifty farmers and their families out of their homes and put them on relief.

If that is not in the interest of relief, I do not know what is. It is said, "The reason why we cut you out, the reason why we refused to adhere to a decision by the Senate"—and the vote stood 43 to 19—"was because the subject of your amendment was not germane to the bill."

Mr. President, this is a relief bill, and I say that when we add to it an amendment which prevents a farming population who are in distress and in need of help from going on the relief rolls, we are doing a measure of relief. That is particularly true if we accompany that with the elements of social security which are contained in the amendment; namely, the reduction of the debt by agreement between the creditor and the debtor and the benefactor, the reduction of the interest, the extension of the time within which to pay the debt, and the advice and help of experts in social security who go on the farm, see the family, and aid them, perhaps, to change their mode of agriculture, and lead them along a way of earning the money necessary to pay off the interest, and finally pay off the debt.

Mr. President, I seize this occasion to say that I shall not stop in my efforts to have this principle written into the law. It is a very simple thing. It allows States which cannot now have funds from the Bankhead-Jones Act to have their equitable proportion of the funds, just as it was intended they should have. It accomplishes that purpose by permitting the yardstick of farm tenancy to be waived as to those States in which that is not the mode of holding the real estate. Instead of the purchasing of a farm by a tenant, it permits the refinancing of a mortgage on a farm the title of which is held by the occupant, and prevents his becoming a tenant.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire merely to make the observation that I agree heartily with what the Senator has said about the virtues of the amendment which the Senate adopted, and which has been abandoned in the conference report. With the Senator from Vermont, I hope that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will speedily report the bill in substantially the form in which the Senate added it to the relief bill. It is a marked advance in the legislation which is designed to promote farm ownership, to promote land ownership, to keep the people on the land; and I think nothing could be very much more important than doing that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I conclude with the statement that the proposal did not undertake to take from one taxpayer his money in the form of taxes and give the money to another. It did not undertake to transfer anything from one citizen's pocket into another citizen's pocket money in the form of work relief and in the form of direct relief. What it did was to permit a farmer to undertake a dignified transaction, under circumstances in which he might be able, and probably would be able, to repay every cent borrowed, for this related to loans to refinance mortgages, and to keep the mortgagors at work on their land.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I became very much interested in the Senator's amendment, or in the bill which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but knew nothing about it until the Senator offered the amendment here. I think the Senator ought to proceed before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, since the amendment has gone out of the relief bill. I am sorry it was dropped; I wish it had been retained. The Senator should proceed and ask for hearings and action by the Committee on Agriculture. I did not know that such a bill had been referred to the committee. I am a member of the committee myself, and I see around me several other Senators who are members of the committee, and I am satisfied that the members of the Committee on Agriculture will give support to the ideas contained in the Senator's bill. I think the provisions of the bill are very good. They are a little different from others, but the Senator's is a very advanced position, which it seems to me can be justified, and I think much good might come from the bill. Did the Senator ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to appoint a subcommittee, or to have hearings on the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think I have exhausted my resources to secure action by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has a more intimate knowledge of what happened in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with respect to the bill than I have. I have obtained nearly all my information from him.

I received a letter from the secretary of the chairman of the committee, in response to a letter from me addressed to him, submitting my bill, and saying that I wished for a speedy determination of the question so that we could get the legislation through before many families lost their farms, because there are some of these farms now under foreclosure.

Mr. NORRIS. Since the amendment has disappeared from the particular legislation we are now considering, I am more interested than ever in it. Perhaps it is too late to get action at this session, if it is to end as soon as most of us think it will, but there is no reason why a subcommittee should not be appointed and hearings had on the Senator's bill, with the purpose of having action by the committee. I understand the Senator from Alabama, now acting chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, would be very willing to appoint a subcommittee and let them proceed as soon as possible. I hope we may expedite the matter, and may obtain results on it, because I believe very much good can come from the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from Nebraska for his assistance. He expresses my wish with more urgency than I commonly use myself. While the Senator from Alabama is present, I wish again to urge that something be done to get the bill out into the Senate, not as an amendment to some other bill, because the bill is entitled to consideration on its own merits, and we have had one example of what can happen to it when it is hitched to another bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not desire to prolong the discussion, but I should like to have the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Nebraska realize that we in New Jersey are just as much interested in this measure as I am sure the people of Vermont, Nebraska, and other States are, and I hope very much, as has been indicated, that as soon as possible, in the light of what has happened to the amendment, an opportunity will be afforded to further this very vital and necessary legislation.

Too often, I feel, people do not recognize that New Jersey is a very large agricultural State. It is thought of in terms of industry only. It is not only an industrial State; it is one of the largest of the agricultural States of the United States, so far as several crops are concerned, and it was a great disappointment to me when I realized—and there is no criticism in what I say so far as the conferees are concerned—that the amendment was dropped from the relief measure. I am delighted that this particular legislation is being advocated by such able champions as the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I take my seat thanking all of those of my colleagues who voted for the amendment and asking them to stay with me until we put the proposal on the statute book. I think it is quite essential to have it enacted at the present session of the Congress, and I shall do what I can to secure a favorable report from the committee.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, one observation on this subject. I was gratified when the amendment was agreed to and made a part of the relief bill. In my State of South Dakota, and in many of the States surrounding South Dakota, drought and similar afflictions have made it impossible for many of the farm owners to keep up payments on mortgages, and many of their obligations are to semi-Federal institutions known as Federal land banks. Some rulings have been issued by the Federal land banks to the effect that when they have to foreclose on mortgages because of not receiving interest payments, or principal payments on due dates, in recent years, they have had to go through foreclosure, involving advertising the property for sale, and so forth; but they have not allowed the original owner to bid when the property was sold, even if the original owner was able to secure financing so that he could make as large an offer on the foreclosed property as some prospective new owner might make.

That ruling of the Federal land bank that no previous owner of this farm property could be or would be given the chance to regain ownership of his real homestead, his home, is definite. I wanted to have that statement in the Record at this point. I am very much disappointed that the conferees failed to include the entire section in the W. P. A. measure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President I thank the Senator from South Dakota.

I wish to insert in connection with the debate at this point in the RECORD a copy of the context of the bill and the amendment itself, so that the RECORD will show in convenient form just what we are talking about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(c) In making any relief payments under this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require of employable recipients of such payments the performance of work on useful public projects, Federal and non-Federal, including work on private or public land in furtherance of the conservation of natural resources, and the provisions of section 24 of this joint resolution, relating to disability or death compensation and benefits, shall apply to such recipients while performing such work.

(d) The Farm Security Administration within the Department of Agriculture is hereby extended until June 30, 1940, to carry out the purposes of this section.

The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by inserting at the end of section 3 a new subsection reading as follows:

"(e) Loans may also be made under this title to enable the borrower to refinance an existing mortgage or mortgages on a farm personally occupied and operated by him and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, in cases where the Secretary determines that such refinancing is necessary and will enable the borrower successfully to operate the farm, and that the borrower cannot obtain credit for such refinancing from any other Federal agency or federally incorporated lending institution. Such loans shall comply with all the provisions of this title: Provided, however, That the Secretary may make such loans without regard to the provisions of section 4 of this title, but shall not use for such purpose in excess of 10 percent of the funds made available during any fiscal year for the making of loans under this title."

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of title I of said Bankhead-Jones Act.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether or not he understood various Senators previously to imply that there is no politics in the administration of W. P. A.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I did not so understand. I do not think there is a Senator here who would be so intemperate as to make such a claim.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, if I may proceed further, I am wondering if the Senator recalls that at the opening of the session the first official document that was laid on the desks of us new Senators, was the so-called Sheppard committee report, growing out of the investigation of W. P. A. in 1938? Here we are, 6 months later, and still discussing the same matter of politics in relief and the implications, as the Senator from Indiana would have it, with reference to the 1936 investigation. I believe the Senator from Indiana was a member of the committee at that time. If the Senator will be so good as to yield further—

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the Senator from Connecticut also know that in many States where there were no senatorial elections there was as much or more corruption, but the committee could not look into it because it had no authority to do so? I speak from experience.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator, of course, asks me if I know. The fact is that I do not know. I have read in the newspapers that such was the fact, but I do not know it to be a fact.

But, Mr. President, if my silence previously may have led anyone to think that I did not dispute the fact, as I heard the word used, that there is politics in Connecticut in connection with the administration of relief, I think it is fitting to call the attention of this body to the fact that on the night of February 24, 1939, the town chairman of another political party in one of our larger cities addressed an organized rally of W. P. A. workers. Those workers, Mr. President, were advised that there was impending in the United States Senate the threat of a cut in W. P. A. or relief funds; that if people were to be cut off of relief that they would naturally suffer; that it behooved them, therefore, to sign up as members of the political party of this particular gentleman, for if they were not members of his party he could not be expected "to go through"—to adopt slang—to keep them on the rolls.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Of what party is the Senator speaking?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say, Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Illinois that I am speaking of the Democratic Party. I supposed the Senator might have guessed as much.

Mr. LUCAS. I wanted to be sure.

Mr. DANAHER. On various W. P. A. jobs in that city not long after that particular meeting there was circularized a broadside, a copy of which I have before me. I should like to read it to the Senate. It is as follows:

Politicians who are long on promises are usually short on performance. We have had many examples of this in the past. Just now our eyes are turned to the political arena, where politicians rode to victory, due to the fact that many went to the polls last November, blindfolded, to exercise their right of franchise.

You who voted regardless of consequences are heard to cry out: "If—I only knew the election was going to turn out as it did, I certainly would not have voted for McLevy."

Little did many realize that the Congressman at Large they voted for would throw in with those who voted against you receiving a check, which any day now you may have to forego because of insufficient funds and take up your place in the bread line.

Mr. Voter, you, and you alone, are responsible for the consequences. You lost confidence in our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Democratic Party Leader, who since his first day in office has directed his untiring efforts in the interest of the unemployed, the welfare of their families.

The distress of the people has been greatly increased by your selfish ideas and thoughtless action. You voted into Congress men who voted against the President, men who demanded a drastic cut in the relief bill. By this action a decided cut in the relief rolls is not far in the offing, and you may be numbered among those to lose your check and cause those near and dear to you untold hardship. Then you may rejoin the ranks of the campaign songsters, "Bring on the Republicans—Bring on Recovery," and get a basket instead of a check.

You not only jeopardized you and yours, but also those with whom you have worked. It is not a pleasant thing to think that we are responsible for the misfortune of our fellowmen. People judge what we are capable of doing by what we have done.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of the United States has a greater responsibility rested upon its citizens. Support the man who has done so much for you, the man who has made it possible for you to retain your self-respect, the man who replaced the relief basket with a check.

Mr. President, I sent that letter to the administrator of W. P. A. in Connecticut, Mr. Vincent J. Sullivan. I may say from what acquaintance I have with him that he is a very honest and capable gentleman. Mr. Sullivan received that broadside as well as a letter from me. I pointed out to him in a letter dated February 27 the following:

FEBRUARY 27, 1939.

HON. VINCENT J. SULLIVAN,
State Administrator, Works Progress Administration, 125 Munson Street, New Haven, Conn.

MY DEAR MR. SULLIVAN: I am enclosing a copy of a circular which is being distributed by W. P. A. foremen to men employed in W. P. A. jobs in New Britain. I intend to take appropriate steps to ascertain the extent to which this wholly unjustified and unwarranted situation has been allowed to progress. I send this circular to you with the request that you cause an investigation to be made to ascertain who is responsible for it, and that, in fairness to yourself and to the Government, the necessary and the indicated action may thereafter be taken by you.

I will greatly appreciate a report of the facts from you at your earliest reasonable convenience.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN A. DANAHER.

Obviously, Mr. President, my letter to him was written in the spirit of complete fairness to him, that he might conduct the investigation himself through his own investigator. Thereafter an investigation was conducted and Mr. Sullivan did report to me; and I think, in fairness to him, I should read his answering letter under date of March 9:

MARCH 9, 1939.

HON. JOHN A. DANAHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Acknowledgment is made of your letter of February 27, 1939, to which you attached a copy of a circular alleged to have been distributed on the W. P. A. projects in the city of New Britain.

Upon receipt of your letter I immediately sent an investigator from this office to New Britain with instructions to interview a complete cross-section of W. P. A. project employees in that city, and endeavor to trace both the origin and the method of distribution. It has been reported back to me that approximately 50 individuals were interviewed, covering all projects and all types of employment, and that 19 of these persons were willing to write voluntary statements. I am attaching for your information a copy of these statements. I am holding the originals for my files.

From the information gathered it is my understanding that these circulars were distributed upon only one W. P. A. project and not by anyone on our pay rolls. It would appear to me, therefore, that this is something which has been concocted locally.

I thank you very much for forwarding this information to me, as I am at all times pleased to completely check any such matters, in order that there will be no abuse of Federal money in this State.

Yours very truly,

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
V. J. SULLIVAN, Administrator.

Mr. President, when the order of last February went into effect, by the terms of which supervisors and other officers of W. P. A. who also held positions in political parties were required to elect which position they would continue to hold, in some instances in some of our towns whole committees resigned; town chairman and from there on down. In some cities various members of the board of aldermen resigned their positions, either as aldermen or as W. P. A. officers, depending, apparently, on which they found the most satisfactory and the more expedient and enticing to them at the time.

Mr. President, if any one wants to know whether there is any politics in W. P. A. let him not ask Senators. Let him ask the man who is on relief. He will tell.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. Indeed, I will yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator does not contend, does he, that politics is all on one side?

Mr. DANAHER. I do not. I decry it, I will say to the Senator from Indiana, no matter on what side it is. I do not sustain it for one moment. If Republican officials in some communities shall improperly certify people as being in need of relief I certainly abjure it, and I hope the Senator from Indiana joins me in that attitude.

Mr. MINTON. Yes, I do join in that attitude.

Mr. DANAHER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. MINTON. Yes, I do. And I found that the Republican Party in my State during the last campaign were using W. P. A. lists, and told the people on W. P. A. how much the Republicans were in favor of W. P. A. and how much more they would give them if they were elected.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator did not relish that particular form of campaign appeal, did he?

Mr. MINTON. I did not relish it; but the Republicans captured 4 or 5 seats in Congress from Indiana by such an appeal; and when they came to Congress all of them but one ran out on the people of Indiana.

Mr. DANAHER. Did they not support the people of Indiana?

Mr. MINTON. I do not believe they did.

Mr. DANAHER. We are doing our best to do it.

Mr. MINTON. We Democrats are doing our best to do it; but I do not think the Republicans who were elected on that platform in Indiana are.

Mr. DANAHER. Just what is the point the Senator is endeavoring to make?

Mr. MINTON. I can only state the point. I cannot be responsible for the Senator's inability to grasp it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise to address the Senate for a few moments in view of the statements made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] upon certain reprehensible political conditions relating to relief in his State. While the Senator from Connecticut states that he is adverse to any political party using relief for politics, the example which he cited to the Senate deals wholly with what the Democrats did in that State last year. I think the country should know that out in my State that it is not a one-sided proposition as the Senator finds it in his State.

Last fall I experienced a campaign in Illinois. I saw what Republican sponsors of certain projects in Republican counties, controlling, hook, line, and sinker, the W. P. A. foremen, timekeepers, and all those on relief, did to me in that campaign.

Mr. President, I decry politics in relief; and in every speech I made in Illinois last year in my campaign for high public office I took particular pains to request every W. P. A. worker within the sound of my voice, or any friend of a W. P. A. worker who might be in the audience, to follow the dictates of his own conscience in exercising his right of franchise when he went to the polls to vote.

Mr. President, the northern part of my State, except Cook County, is predominantly Republican. In those counties we find Republican members of boards of supervisors, Republican county highway commissioners, Republican mayors, and Republican officeholders who are the sponsors of W. P. A. projects and who absolutely control the personnel. The Republicans in that part of my State played politics with relief in no uncertain terms.

I wish to cite, as one classic example of Republicans in the relief picture in a bold and rather picturesque manner. A Republican in one of the large counties of my State was a candidate last year for the office of township supervisor. And, diverging for a moment, let me say there was more politics played around that particular office in my State than around any small office within my knowledge of politics in Illinois, because of the power township supervisors had with relief clients in their particular townships. This candidate loaded trucks with Federal surplus commodities purchased with funds we voted in the Congress. He took this food and clothing to the needy homes in his county. Plastered on the sides of this truck were his campaign posters, blazoning to the world that he was the Republican candidate for the office which he sought. By the way he was elected; and why should he not have been? As the truck drove up with the food and clothing it was followed by a large automobile. As soon as the surplus commodities were delivered to a home a political friend of the candidate entered, left Republican literature, and told the recipients of this Federal munificence that the groceries and clothing came from Republicans and that, therefore, they must put Republican posters and placards in their windows, which they did.

Perhaps this sounds too utterly fantastic. Listen to the letter which this same Republican candidate used to circulate all relief clients and W. P. A. workers, a paragraph of which I quote:

Since you are, or have been, interested in W. P. A., will you let me remind you that through my personal efforts and cooperation with W. P. A. this township * * * has assigned 1,300 persons to W. P. A. since January 1, 1938. Many of these people were assigned to the hot lunches, furniture repair, gardening and canning, sewing, and the nursery school projects. All of these projects have been sponsored by myself. I am sure you realize the value of each of these to your community.

That is the kind of campaign literature and documents that this particular Republican candidate was using to have himself elected to office. Now, my colleagues, we Democrats initiated the W. P. A. program in Washington under the Roosevelt administration. We are charged with the administrative responsibility. We are responsible for the appropriation of the billions of dollars which have been necessary during the past few years to take care of human misery and suffering in this country. Relief in politics has been condoned in many States by local leaders, both Democrats and Republicans, but Republicans controlling projects in Republican communities receive little or no criticism when they elect men to office through such despicable methods as outlined above.

Let me read another example of what is happening in Winnebago County at this particular time in my State. In that section of Illinois there is at the present time a W. P. A. administrator who is a Republican. Let me read a letter which comes from a responsible citizen of that community as to how that individual is dealing with politics. This gentleman says:

The W. P. A. is being used in fostering the Republican cause in this county. It is dominated by members of the Republican Party. The district director is and always has been a Republican, and since his appointment as administrator the few Democrats we had have been gradually eased out of all key positions, and Republicans have been promoted to these positions, and the result is that if a man is a Democrat he has little or no opportunity of obtaining W. P. A. employment, and this is generally known among all the men on the job.

During the recent campaign—

That is, the campaign of 1938.

One of the men who occupied an important position with the W. P. A. was very active among the men on behalf of the Republican Party, and as a result thereof he has now been appointed chief deputy for the newly elected sheriff of Winnebago County, and shortly after the election the local newspapers carried an article stating that it was understood that he was very active on the W. P. A. for the Republican Party and that he was in line for this position.

Mr. President, I merely cite these two typical examples—and there are many others in downstate Illinois that could be cited—to demonstrate that, after all, all the virtue does not lie in the Republican Party when we talk about politics in relief.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I wish briefly to make some further reference to the suggestion of politics in relief in connection with the W. P. A. Lest someone may misunderstand, I wish to make it clear that in my brief colloquy with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] I did not say, nor am I so naive as to believe, that there is not some politics in relief. I presume the people of my State suffer from the same frailties of human nature which afflict the people of other States. I presume that there are as many political-minded people in my State as there are in any other State. I am ready to believe that, as my distinguished colleague pointed out, that there are some local politicians in Connecticut who would inject politics into relief. What I discussed earlier with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was the matter of whether or not there would be more politics in relief under State supervision than there is under Federal supervision.

I insist that by turning the absolute control of relief back to the States there would be politics to a definitely greater degree. There would be, in some States, hundreds of agencies engaged in divided control. There would be, in some States, hundreds of politically minded men in the picture. While it is true that we have suffered to some extent under this gigantic program, I think the records will show that, considering the magnitude of the work, the need for speed, the fact that it was necessary after the chaotic situation of 1931 to 1933 to write the laws hurriedly and to set up the agencies quickly, that the W. P. A. has done a comparatively good job.

It is a long time since I have been a candidate for office, and I have not suffered as did the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and I would not charge that there is any less desire to take advantage of the distress of men on the relief rolls in my party than in the Republican Party or any other party. I do, however, want to make it clear that in my State we have, in my opinion, a splendid situation. I was pleased to hear my illustrious colleague [Mr. DANAHY] say that, insofar as he knew, the W. P. A. administrator in my State is a good and capable man. I think that is true of most of the W. P. A. employees in my State. We have, and continuously have had, splendid projects. There has been no raking of leaves, so to speak. We have created and completed projects of unusual social values in my State under this agency. There has been no single, solitary instance of a charge of corruption. There has been, to my knowledge, no serious charge of abuse. Up to this moment I am certain there has not been a specific instance in which anyone on the W. P. A. rolls in my State—at least anyone with any degree of authority—has attempted to exercise the authority of his position for political purposes.

I did not rise especially to talk about this subject; but I wanted to keep clear the splendid record which we have enjoyed in Connecticut. I do not take exception to a single, solitary thing my colleague has said. I do not understand that anything he said was said in criticism of the W. P. A. in our State; but I do want him to know, and my colleagues to be certain, that I am not so simple or so foolish as to believe that this tremendous program is without some element of politics in Connecticut. What I have been trying to emphasize is that in my opinion it would be a serious mistake to turn the control of relief back to the States, and to the numerous political agencies and to the politicians of a State, who would have no restraining influence of expenditure. This would not be true if the State was paying the bill. I should be perfectly willing, in my State, and in every State, to turn relief completely back to the States if we could get one Governor or the mayors of the municipalities, to say that they could stand the cost of relief.

I share the feeling of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the other Senators who voted on the matter a few days ago, that the industrial States of the Union can only with very great difficulty stand the cost of this 25-percent contribution. Mine is one of the so-called wealthy States of the Union. Mine is one of the comparatively well-off States. But because mine is a highly industrial State our burden has been heavy and we have been contributing only 16.1 percent to these payments. The additional charge of approximately 10 percent will prove a burden to the municipalities of my State unless the State government is willing to bear a part of the cost. If the conference report should be adopted, I am very hopeful that the Governor of my State, appreciating that this additional 10-percent cost, without his help and the help of the State government, will fall heavily upon the oppressed local taxpayer through real-estate taxes. I am hopeful he will see to it that the State of Connecticut will lighten the burden of the man who pays real-estate taxes.

We have in my State just now, as we have in so many of the other States of the Union—and it was especially emphasized at the Governors' conference a few days ago—a pride in the fact that our budget is balanced, an especial pride in the condition of the financial affairs of the State. I rejoice in that situation. I am hopeful that it can be kept that way. But I am not so blind as not to know and fully appreciate that that condition is true only because of the large contributions of the Federal Government, and the expenditure in Connecticut of millions upon millions of dollars by the Federal Government.

Now we come to a changed situation. I assume that because of the lateness of the hour and in order to get this joint resolution passed by 12 o'clock tonight, and to keep these men on the relief rolls at work, that we will adopt the conference report. If the leadership decides that that is not the proper procedure and is willing to adopt my continuing resolution and let this debate continue, I should prefer to join in that course, but if the leadership decides that in the interest of the Works Progress Administration and its millions of employees it is best to accept the conference report, I shall accept that decision with considerable regret.

If the report is accepted it means that my State and many other States will be called upon to make an additional contribution to the relief projects. In my State the additional contribution amounts to 10 percent. Obviously, the burden will fall upon the home owners of the various municipalities. That is the only way the municipalities in my State have of raising money—by taxing the home owners; in most instances, of course, the small home owners. There is now a chance for the public officials of the country, particularly those who are crying and clamoring for a return of control to the States, to give an indication of their sincerity and appreciation of the situation by saving the municipalities and the small taxpayers of the States from that burden, because the State governments have ways of raising funds other than by taxing the home owner.

Mr. President, this is an important day in Congress, because it is necessary, it seems to me, that we consider at least these important conference reports. I am extremely sorry that we did not have a greater success in conference. I could not say that without paying my tribute of respect and confidence to the chairman of the Senate subcommittee which handled the joint resolution. There is no Member of Congress for whom I have a greater feeling of affection or a greater respect. He is a man of sincerity, courage, and ability. I know the feeling on the part of the House and the House conferees. I can imagine what took place in the conference; but I am extremely sorry it was necessary for the Senate conferees to yield in the matter of releasing from the relief rolls, at the end of 18 months, probably thousands of persons. It means that many of the persons so released, who have not had a chance to save any money because of their meager income from W. P. A., will be returned, temporarily, at least, to the stigma of charity, and for what gain? For a period of 30 days. The loss is a possibility of a chaotic condition in some States and a tremendously unnecessary expense as well as a tremendous amount of work that produces little.

It seems to me that the Senate subcommittee, under the splendid leadership of the chairman of the subcommittee, had worked out a splendid and sensible and reasonable solution of that particular part of the joint resolution. I am sorry it did not prevail in conference. I am satisfied that one day we shall all feel sorry that the Senate lost that particular amendment.

I am sorry, of course, and I shall not now delay the Senate to give the reasons, except to point to what I said on the floor of the Senate a day or two ago, that we are to lose the increased amount made available temporarily by the Senate in connection with the National Youth Administration. I am sorry as well, in the adoption of the conference report—and I am assuming that it will be adopted—if the art projects will suffer. I am particularly sorry insofar as music and sculpture and painting are concerned. I do not know that they will suffer; but, if they do, I seriously regret it.

Mr. President, I shall not longer delay the Senate; but I felt in duty bound, in view of what was said by my distinguished colleague [Mr. DANAHY]—with which I am in disagreement—that there might be a misunderstanding to the detriment of our State. And, further than that, I did want to give expression to my feelings in regard to the conference report before it is finally voted upon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939, for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939, for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when any statement of mine is challenged as to accuracy, I have always made it a point to go to the place where it is challenged and refute the argument, or at least try to do so. I take a little pride in the fact that whenever I say something is so, I know it to be so.

The other night, when we were discussing the relief joint resolution—and that is why I am discussing it today, because it is again before the Senate—I quoted the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] as saying that the director of the theater projects in the United States had a communistic leaning, and I cited a certain play taken from the Senator's speech of April 30, 1936. One of my colleagues, the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], a very close associate of Herbert Benjamin and David Lasser—I do not think I need to say more—rose on the floor of the Senate and made this statement, which is found on page 8093 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 28:

There is much misrepresentation with reference to the program they have been carrying out. Tonight on the floor of the Senate a paragraph was read from a play which purported to have been given by the theater project in which the spokesman was supposed to be advocating communism. As a matter of fact, that was a play that was produced at Vassar College. I have before me a statement with reference to it. A single sentence was picked out which created the impression that the whole purport of the play was to advocate communism, whereas if the play had been read further it would have appeared that the purpose of the play was to bring out the subject and to prove that communism was a bad thing for the country, and that the proper course for Americans to follow was good, patriotic, democratic principles.

I did not quote a sentence. Let me refer to what I did quote. I quoted many sentences from that play, and they also are found on page 8087 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. These are the words of the play written by Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, director of the theater project. This is good democratic doctrine, according to the junior Senator from Montana. It may be to him, but it is not to me.

This is what the play says:

Don't you see, Rose, it ain't Purcell that's wrong. It's the plan we live under; it's the whole system. Listen! Maybe I think, like you, that there'll come a time when there'll be shootin'. But today ain't the time. Maybe there'll come a time when we can stand on our feet like freemen, instead of crawlin' on our bellies askin' for help. But that time ain't come yet. Some of us believe in a time comin' when everybody will have to work, and there'll be enough work for everybody. Some of us believe that the land and the crops and the cattle and the factories belong to the men that work 'em. But we ain't strong enough yet to take 'em. And that's why some of us think it's more important to work for that time than to shoot up a few rich guys now.

That sounds like a democratic statement, according to the junior Senator from Montana. Then he goes ahead to quote one other excerpt from the play. This is what he says:

So, if one reads the play in its entirety, it is obvious that the whole purport of the play was to denounce communism rather than to support it.

I took the floor and said that I had not read the play, but I was taking the word of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, that he said that this was in the play. But I have read it since, and this is what the junior Senator from Montana said again on that:

Mr. MURRAY. As a matter of fact, all the theatrical newspapers of the country which commented on the play have supported it as a good play, and have said that it was not a play advocating communism.

Mr. President, I admit it is hard for some individuals to realize what communism is. If one lives with Communists, it is pretty hard to name them out, I admit. But let us see if this play contains sound American doctrine. Where was the play taken from? Here is the information, if anyone is interested in reading it. It was taken from the March, 1931, issue of a magazine called New Masses, written by Whittaker Chambers, and it is entitled "Can You Make Out Their Voices?" It runs from page 7 clear through to page 16. It is a play by Whittaker Chambers. Of course it is good, sound democratic doctrine. Who is Mr. Whittaker Chambers? Let me quote again from the Communist magazine, New Masses, for July 1931, page 23, and see if anyone wants to challenge this. Here is his picture. I wish all could see it. He does not have a beard, but that is the only thing it does not have. This is what the New Masses says of Mr. Whittaker Chambers:

Whittaker Chambers—

I do not know him, but this is what it says:

Whittaker Chambers was born in Philadelphia in 1901. Boyhood in eastern United States. Youth as periodically vagrant laborer in deep South, Plains, Northwest. Brief Columbia College experience.

He is not from Harvard. This is what it says:

Brief Columbia College experience, ending with atheist publication.

Formerly member Industrial Union 310, I. W. W. Joined revolutionary movement 1925. Contributed to numerous publications. Former staff member of the Daily Worker, contributing editor to the New Masses.

Of course there is no communism in that, none at all! This story was so good that it attracted the attention of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan—and some Senators said it was terrible to insinuate she had anything to do with communism. Let us see what happened. The Communists thought the story was so good—the story which appeared in the magazine New Masses—that she went to work and made a play in a month, and in the June 1931 issue of the New Masses, on page 19, this advertisement can be read. Do not be fooled; the New Masses is communistic. They admit it, and I say they should take credit for it, because if one is a Communist he should not be ashamed to say so. This is what they said:

Can you hear their voices?

A play of our time, based on Whittaker Chambers' story in the New Masses.

"While the farmers in the drought area are starving, 'money is kept in circulation' in Washington."

A play for workers' theaters.

Seven scenes in a single setting. An exciting drama of satire and tragedy. A moving story of the Arkansas farmers.

Book, with three photographs of the production, postpaid, 75 cents

Vassar Experimental Theatre. Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

They were not satisfied with giving it an advertisement, but on page 20 they give it two pictures and say this:

Vassar College presents a play.

I merely want the facts to be known. This is a great Democratic play, about which the junior Senator from Montana spoke. I am glad he is now in the Chamber—

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President—

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator began his remarks.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to repeat what I said. I said I made a speech in which I stated the play was communistic in origin, and the junior Senator from Montana said that there was not any communism in it, that it was democratic doctrine. I also said that the Senator was a very close associate of Mr. Herbert Benjamin and David Lasser, and I also quoted from the Senator's speech.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator said I was a close associate of Mr. Herbert Benjamin?

Mr. HOLT. I think so. That is generally understood.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator has renounced it.

Mr. MURRAY. I want to say that the Senator seems to be obsessed by his bitterness against the W. P. A. and the administration of the W. P. A., and he devotes his time constantly to nothing else but an attempt to discredit the administration of the W. P. A. I think he is doing a great injustice to the people of this country and to the workers of the W. P. A. and the administrative force of the W. P. A., and it seems to me that he could very well employ his ability in some other more constructive direction.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator. I will say that I have been in favor of cleaning up W. P. A. since the start of it, but the Senator from Montana has not.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. Sometime ago the Senator made some observations in reference to the W. P. A. in my State, Montana.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct, and I told the Senator a great deal that he knew.

Mr. MURRAY. It happened that the administration started an investigation of the W. P. A. in my State—

Mr. HOLT. Who made the investigation?

Mr. MURRAY. The F. B. I.

Mr. HOLT. It must have been pretty bad.

Mr. MURRAY. They sent 16 men from the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the State of Montana and made a thorough and complete investigation of the administration there. As a result of their investigation they found absolutely no irregularities, and they advanced the salary of the administrator, and advanced his assistant to a position in the headquarters of W. P. A. in Washington. The investigation showed that the administration of W. P. A. in Montana was one of the most efficient in the United States, and there was absolutely no evidence whatever of any political influence of any kind or character.

As a matter of fact, all of the newspapers in the State of Montana, both Republican and Democratic alike, have commended the operations of the W. P. A. in my State, and have written editorials time and again. Editorials have appeared in the newspapers controlled by the Anaconda Copper Co. showing that the work of the W. P. A. in my State has been of tremendous importance and of great benefit to the people of Montana, and there is absolutely no justification for these foul insinuations of dishonesty or corruption in the W. P. A. in my State. I think that is true of most of the charges against W. P. A. that are made on the floor of the Senate from time to time. The only purpose, it seems to me, is to try to discredit this administration, try to emasculate the great work which has been and is being done by the W. P. A. in the United States. It is absolutely unfair, dishonest, and corrupt, in my judgment.

Mr. HOLT. I know the Senator is talking about the W. P. A., and I know it is dishonest and corrupt. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that the only thing he mentions as having been done by the W. P. A. in investigating the conditions in his State that was similar to the general conduct of the W. P. A. was that they raised the administrator's salary, as he admits. However, I know from information given to me by very reliable officials in the State of Montana that there was rottenness in the State of Montana, and it was controlled by the gambling influence of Butte, Mont. I shall be glad to accommodate the Senator at a later date with some facts about it, since he has brought up the question.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator will only make that statement on the floor of the Senate, but he will never follow it up by any competent, reliable proof. It is absolutely false and dishonest, and is only being made on the floor of the Senate for the purpose of trying to discredit an honest administration of a great agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. HOLT. I do not blame the Senator from Montana for complaining about what I say, because I am telling about his own baby in Montana. When they went out to destroy the senior Senator from Montana they fired the senior Senator's employees and gave the places to the junior Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. That is absolutely false, and it cannot be established in any shape or form. There is absolutely no truth in the statement that anyone was fired from the W. P. A. because of any hostility to the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. HOLT. Not to the junior Senator.

Mr. MURRAY. Not to the senior Senator.

Mr. HOLT. I think I have better authority than the Senator from Montana has, because I have it from an official of Montana who knows. We cannot blame a man for talking about his own child.

Mr. MURRAY. But the Senator is talking about his own child. His child is his obsession about this matter, trying to discredit and injure the administration of the W. P. A., and he wants to spend all the time here which ought to be devoted to the welfare and betterment of the country. He is simply trying to undermine the country and to create a situation that would result in very dangerous conditions. He is making statements which he knows very well cannot be substantiated and which he will not even attempt to support.

Mr. HOLT. There is an obsession on my part to clean up W. P. A. and give relief to the needy, instead of to the political bosses of West Virginia, Montana, or any place else. I do not blame the Senator from Montana; so long as he is getting nice invitations from the Workers Alliance I do not blame him at all. Nevertheless, the facts are as I have stated. I am not discussing Montana here today, but I will say to the Senator that he voted against taking politics out of relief, he voted not to make public the pay rolls of relief.

Mr. MURRAY. I voted against the pretended effort the Senator was making—

Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes; pretended effort!

Mr. MURRAY. When the whole object was to injure the administration.

Mr. HOLT. No; the object was to uncover what was going on, and the Senator from Montana did not want it uncovered in the State of Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. The administrator in my State welcomed the investigation. The people of the State of Montana understand the conditions very well. They are fully satisfied with the record of W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. I think so, and they will express their views in 1942.

Mr. MURRAY. I want to tell the Senator that what happens in 1942 is of no importance to me whatever.

Mr. HOLT. Or to the country, may I say.

Mr. MURRAY. That is true; and what happens to the Senator from West Virginia is of less importance.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MURRAY. Because he has displayed on the floor of the Senate ever since he has been here his incompetency to represent the people anywhere in the United States.

Mr. HOLT. I admit with modesty that I do not have the power of the Senator from Montana; I admit I do not have any patronage or jobs to give. If that is representation, the Senator from Montana has been a very good representative, because every once in a while they throw him a few hundred-dollar-a-month jobs, and that is very satisfactory.

Mr. MURRAY. I want to deny that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will suspend. When a Senator desires to interrupt a Senator he must first address the Chair, and the Chair will then ask the Senator having the floor whether he will yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOLT. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator has stated that every once in a while I get a sop thrown me in the way of a job. That is absolutely a false statement.

Mr. HOLT. Has not the Senator named any persons recently?

Mr. MURRAY. No, the Senator has not named any person.

Mr. HOLT. Not any person on the Federal payroll?

Mr. MURRAY. No; not any person on the Federal payroll. I made a recommendation to the Attorney General 6 months ago for the appointment of a United States marshal, but that is the only recommendation I have given to any of the agencies of the Government during the last 6 months. So the Senator it appears is very glib in making these false accusations and statements on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The Chair will read section 2 of rule XIX:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The Senator from West Virginia will proceed in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HOLT. I was going back to the question of Vassar College and the play that the junior Senator from Montana says is not communistic. In the June 20, 1931, issue of the New Masses is set forth a statement about the play of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan. She is a nice girl to talk to, and I know that the Senator from Montana was given the material. Of course this is not spoken derogatorily. I would have gone out that night and talked to her about a play.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I wish to correct the Senator in his statement that I discussed the matter with Mrs. Flanagan.

Mr. HOLT. Then from whom did the Senator get the book?

Mr. MURRAY. I never spoke to Mrs. Flanagan in all my life.

Mr. HOLT. From whom did the Senator get the book?

Mr. MURRAY. I do not know who the gentleman was, but he gave me the record which contained the information which I submitted on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HOLT. Is it the Senator's usual custom to go outside and get books from individuals he does not know and bring them in and read them to the Senate?

Mr. MURRAY. I take information from any source if it is reliable and accurate, and this book shows that it was a copy of the hearings before the House; and it would not make any difference who presented it to me if it contained an accurate statement of the hearings. It seems to me that would be sufficient for anyone willing to accept facts and not irresponsible statements.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator went out and talked to him, because he brought in a very interesting defense.

To continue with this play:

VASSAR COLLEGE PRESENTS A PLAY

After Whittaker Chambers' story Can You Hear Their Voices? appeared in the March issue, New Masses readers from all over the country heaped enthusiastic praise on it. With the deluge of congratulations came a letter from Hallie Flanagan, director of the experimental theater at Vassar College, asking for permission to dramatize the story.

The play was written and produced within a month—

This is a Communist paper speaking about the great Democratic play, to use the words of the Senator from Montana:

And it is the best play of revolutionary interest produced in this country; not excluding the well-known Precedent, Gods of the Lightning, and Singing Jailbirds.

That comes from the Communist paper. The Communists say it is revolutionary, but it is not revolutionary to the Senator from Montana.

It was written by Hallie Flanagan, winner of a Guggenheim award which enabled her to study the theater in Russia and European countries, and her former student, Margaret Ellen Clifford, now also teaching dramatics and playwriting. The Vassar production on May 2 was directed by Hallie Flanagan, as fine a director as she is a playwright.

I am quoting from the Communist paper the New Masses. I wish to make that clear.

Written in a college, about farmers, it is a swell play for workers' groups. It is satirical and exciting drama, vital and timely in its subject matter. It is stronger and clearer in its social viewpoint than any radical play yet presented in America.

Let me read that again. It is democratic to the Senator from Montana, but it was not even that to the Communist paper. Here is what it says:

It is stronger and clearer in its social viewpoint than any radical play yet presented in America. It uses with intelligence and startling effect the facts of actual events that have recently taken place in the American scene. It pictures authentically the lives of the Arkansas farmers. It exposes the hypocrisy of Red Cross charity. It ends on a note of struggle in full justice to the original story on which it is based.

The play follows faithfully Whittaker Chambers' story of the drought-stricken dirt farmers, their hunger, and desperate need which ends in the raid on the food stores.

Who is Whittaker Chambers? I told the Senate just a moment ago that he was the Communist who wrote for the New Masses. I continue to read:

While retaining the spirit of his story, the playwrights have added to it, to meet the needs of the theater. These additions are illuminated with a clear social understanding.

The staging of the play was the work of people who have an expert knowledge of the theaters. A simple stage construction is used throughout and scene changes are made with shafts of light directed upon different portions of the stage. This simple setting and dramatic handling makes the play of added value for workers' groups.

Governmental statistics on unemployment and national suffering caused by the drought and the general economic depression, are thrown on a movie screen, in between scenes.

APPROPRIATION FOR PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee if thereby I do not lose the floor.

I understand it is the Senator's purpose to report a measure for action by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. My purpose is to ask for consideration of a joint resolution, which should be acted upon immediately.

Mr. VANDENBERG. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it the Chair's ruling that the Senator from West Virginia is entitled to yield for the purpose in question without being charged with having ended one speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939, for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the House Joint Resolution 345.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may we have the joint resolution read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for the month of July 1939, for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act approved February 22, 1935 (49 Stat. 30), entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes," as amended, and to include necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations, traveling expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, rent, stationery, and office supplies, not to exceed $500 for necessary expenses of attendance at meetings and conferences concerned with the work of petroleum conservation when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding, not to exceed $100 for books and periodicals, and for the hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in explanation of the joint resolution I ask as part of my remarks that a statement with respect to it be printed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 345, PROVIDING AN APPROPRIATION FOR THE MONTH OF JULY 1939 FOR THE PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The item proposed in House Joint Resolution 345 is to provide for the administration and enforcement of the act of February 22, 1935, generally known as the Hot Oil Act. The Bureau of the Budget has approved an estimate of $230,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939, and the appropriation of $20,000 contained in House Joint Resolution 345 is to cover the personnel now engaged in enforcing the declared policy of the Congress in the conservation of petroleum. The present personnel is composed of 8 employees in Washington and 68 employees in the field. It is essential to the orderly conduct of the public business that no lapse occur in the administration and enforcement activity under the Federal Statute of February 22, 1935. The act of February 22, 1935, as amended by the act of June 14, 1937, was extended until June 30, 1942, by act approved by the President on June 29, 1939. The last legislation does not make any changes in the basic law.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields with that understanding.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on House bill 6791, the supplemental War Department appropriation bill. There is only one item in the bill, and I feel sure there will be no objection to agreeing to the conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1; and agree to the same.

ELMER THOMAS,
CARL HAYDEN,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. BUELL SNYDER,
DAVID D. TERRY,
D. LANE POWERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate what the conferees did?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senate added three amendments to the House bill. The first amendment was to provide $1,200,000 for the extension of Lowrie Field located at Denver. The House accepted that amendment.

The second amendment was offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] providing $5,000,000 to be used for making maps. The House would not accept that amendment, and the Senate receded.

The third amendment was offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] asking for permission of the War Department to use funds carried in the bill for the extension of factories and providing equipment for making necessary articles of armament. The House would not accept that amendment, and the Senate receded.

So the only Senate amendment agreed to was the one providing for $1,200,000 for the extension of Lowrie Field at Denver.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is very satisfactory. I wish to congratulate the Senate conferees for standing so tenaciously for the Senate position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia further yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields with that understanding.

Mr. McKELLAR. The two Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER] and the two Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN] have handed in two appointments as postmasters.

The first is that of J. D. Beggs to be postmaster at Orlando, Fla.

The other is W. Rufus Jackson to be postmaster at St. Louis, Mo.

As in executive session, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report favorably the nomination of James D. Beggs to be postmaster at Orlando, Fla., and W. Rufus Jackson to be postmaster at St. Louis, Mo.

I ask unanimous consent the two nominations be confirmed as in executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmations as they seem to be matters of emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. BATES of Massachusetts were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5722) for the relief of Evelyn Gurley-Kane.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. HOLT. Going back to the great play written by the head of the whole theater project of the W. P. A. in the United States, I want to give Senators some of the plot as told in New Masses, the Communist paper as of June 2, 1931. The reason I repeat that is because there has been some intervening business:

The radio speech on farm relief, added to the story by the playwright in the play's opening scene, is a powerful stroke of satire. The farmers are gathered in front of Jim Wardell's house, talking about the damage the drought has done, how it has killed their crops and cattle; and they wonder how they are going to continue. The groups listen to the radio speech, some credulously, some hopefully, some skeptically, and some in open disgust. "Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience * * * have you ever experienced that hollow feeling that comes over you in the middle of the morning?" the voice over the radio asks. Farmer Davis answered: "Well, I hadn't thought of puttin' it just that way."

Two scenes in Washington are added and the play gains in dramatic contrast. In alternating scenes the play flashes back and forth from Washington to the rural areas.

In the rural areas conditions are continually growing worse. The dirt farmers are starving and Frank's young German wife, for days unsuccessful in getting milk for her baby, and unable to bear its prolonged suffering, herself strangles it to death. The bare simple writing of this short scene is a poem of stark beauty and power. The acting is perfect. A brilliant German exchange student at Vassar (and, by the way, a baroness with an accent) acts the part of Frank's wife superbly.

After long months of waiting the Red Cross relief arrives. The charity it gives isn't enough to feed hungry farmers and their families. The farmers are becoming more militant. Under the leadership of Wardell, they come together to take the food they need from the stores by armed force, if necessary.

Oh, that is sound democratic doctrine. It is sound democratic doctrine to go into the stores with rifles and take what is in there. This is a play, remember, that was written by the head of the theater project.

The Governor orders out the militia. Expecting this, Wardell and his wife send their two boys hitchhiking to Communist headquarters in New York. "Tell them that Jim Wardell sent you. They'll take care of you. Tell them that things have gone too far and that we're organizing, that we may be sent to jail and that the comrades here need help. * * * And remember all you've seen here boys. And understand it. Remember every man has a right to work and eat. And see if you can't help make a better kind of world for kids to live in."

The story develops logically and inevitably out of the nature of events. It is simple, unforced. It is a challenging social document.

It would be a fine thing for Vassar to produce this play in New York.

This is a Communist paper from which I am quoting.

The Vassar girls, and the men (instructors at Vassar and residents in Poughkeepsie) caught the spirit of their characters and presented it with dignity and guts.

Mr. President, those are not my words. Those are the words of the paper.

The play is now being published in a cheap paper edition and the playwrights and author offer it free from royalties to workers' groups who want to produce it. We urge every workers' theater group to take prompt advantage of the best revolutionary play that has yet been produced in America.

In other words, you do not have to pay for it. The Communists will give you free this sound Democratic play referred to by the Senator from Montana.

Then it goes ahead to say:

We urge every workers theater group to take prompt advantage of the best revolutionary play that has yet been produced in America.

Let me read what the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] said. I am sorry he has left the Chamber. This is what he said about the play:

As a matter of fact, all the theatrical newspapers in the country which commented on the play have supported it as a good play and said it was not a play advocating communism.

Then he goes ahead and praises the play. Let me read what the Communists say about it in support of the statement that it is not a democratic play. Let me repeat the last sentence of the statement I have just read:

We urge every workers theater group to take prompt advantage of the best revolutionary play that has yet been produced in America.

No communism? Not tainted with communism? They admit it themselves. The Communists themselves say it is the best revolutionary play in America; and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] says it is the best democratic play in America. One can take his choice of authority. There is a difference of opinion. The Communists think it is revolutionary, and the Senator from Montana—to whom I apologize if he is not a friend of Mr. Herbert Benjamin, but who admits his friendship for David Lasser—says it is a democratic play.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Is it not possible that the two terms are synonymous?

Mr. HOLT. Not in my mind. I admit that Earl Browder says that the thing for America to do is to carry on a communistic front. He says, "We cannot win. The thing for us to do is to get behind President Roosevelt for a third term." I do not know, but that is what Earl Browder says, and he is the best authority on communism in the country, outside of the Senator from Montana. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Let there be order on the floor, and in the galleries.

Mr. HOLT. I started to read the play when the Senator challenged my authority. If any Senator wishes to obtain the play or the newspaper New Masses, he can send over to the Library and obtain it. The newspaper will show that it is controlled by the Communist Party.

I now turn to the December 1931 issue of New Masses, on page 26. It says:

T-r-i-k-e-n-i-s-h—

I cannot pronounce the name. I shall have to ask the Senator from North Carolina to pronounce it. It means "drought," but it is written in Russian. It is not American.

Trikenish (drought), by Hallie Flanagan and Margaret Ellen Clifford, based on a story by Whittaker Chambers. Translated and adapted by N. Buchwald. Directed by Beno Schneider. Settings by M. Solotaroff.

I hope Senators will not hold me responsible for the pronunciation. I cannot speak Russian. These are the people who put on the play.

Dances arranged by Sophie Berensohn. Produced by the Artef (Jewish workers' theater) at Heckscher Foundation Theater.

This is a play written by the head of the Federal theater project. The articles closes with this statement:

Yet despite these defects, the production of Trikenish is a real achievement when one takes into consideration the enormous difficulties under which a proletarian theater works. The Artef has traveled a long way since its first performance 3 years ago; it has improved ideologically and artistically; it is today clearer in its aims, more conscious of its responsibilities to the revolutionary movement.

Hallie Flanagan wrote the play for the theater which this Communist newspaper says is "more conscious of its responsibility to the revolutionary movement."

Mr. President, I do not condemn a man for being a Communist. He has a right to be a Communist. But if he is a Communist he ought to be brave enough to say he is a Communist and not try to hide behind any other term than that. I say that the Federal theater project is tainted and corrupted with communism. What is the reason behind it? Let me again refer to the New Masses. These cartoons are pictures of Senators, so do not worry about them. I shall not read them. They indicate what the Communist newspaper thinks of Congress.

I read from page 11 of the August 1931 issue of New Masses:

ART IS A WEAPON—PROGRAM OF THE WORKERS CULTURAL FEDERATION

The world-wide crisis of capitalism has intensified the class struggle not only on the economic and political fields but on the cultural as well. More than ever it is becoming clear to the workers of every country, and to those intellectuals whose economic distress or mental integrity has brought them to the side of the workers in their struggle for the overthrow of capitalism, that art and science, journalism and education, indeed, every instrument for molding the mind and imagination of man, is being utilized by the capitalist class for concealing the truth and for spreading falsehoods regarding the system of exploitation upon which its power rests.

I could go ahead and read the whole of this article. It is quite lengthy. I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD after my speech, which will not be long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. HOLT. The article is entitled "Art Is a Weapon," and is from the New Masses.

Let me read another portion of the article:

"Art belongs to the people," said Lenin. "It must have its deepest roots in the broad mass of the workers. It must be understood and loved by them. It must be rooted in and grow with their feelings, thoughts, and desires. It must arouse and develop the artist in them."

Then the article goes ahead to say how that shall be done, with the art movement and the theater movement in the United States of America.

This article was written in 1931, before the Federal theater project came into being; and just as soon as the theater project went into effect the Communists took advantage of it and made it in every way possible just as communistic as they possibly could make it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I dislike to have such a large percentage of the membership of the Senate fail to have the advantage of the Senator's observations. I wonder if he will yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to do so if the Senator will take the responsibility for the future suffering.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gillette	McCarran	Slatery
Barkley	Glass	McKellar	Smathers
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Taft
Borah	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Nye	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SELECTION SYSTEM AND PROMOTIONS IN NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the time the conference report on the relief joint resolution was taken up, the Senate had under discussion Calendar No. 684, House bill 4929. The debate was finished, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] was trying to get the floor. Before the Chair had a chance to put the question on the passage of the bill, the Senator from Colorado was recognized. All the amendments to the bill had been approved. There was no opposition to it.

I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 684, House bill 4929, to amend the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 944), be passed as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments having heretofore been agreed to, the amendments will be ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, and passed.

WORK-RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when the quorum was called I was discussing the Communist movement, and how communism was being spread, and was quoting from the Communist magazine New Masses.

Here is another article in the July 1931 number, written by Michael Gold, entitled "Toward An American Revolutionary Culture."

On page 12, he says, speaking about the need of communism:

It was not a problem of stimulating a new school of writing or music in the limited intellectual groups. Everything that affected the mind of the working masses had to be overhauled. You cannot build communism with masses whose emotions are still of the capitalist world—who are superstitious, or romantic, or mystic—who have not been penetrated in every fiber with the emotional habits of communism.

Certain theorists have held that this Communist culture can only be built after the proletariat has taken the state power. But here again life has confounded some of the theorists.

As Mr. Gold truthfully said, the way of communism is to get in the theaters, in the arts, and in the various means of communication to the individual.

Here is what he says on page 13:

For many years, in the New Masses, we have been preaching the importance of cultural work. Several years ago we made the first step in a practical direction by devoting two pages every month to reports of cultural work already going on. For it actually existed in this country. It had grown up spontaneously, breaking against all the barriers of indifference. It had proved its own right to life by daring to live. It was a real working-class phenomenon.

As Mr. Gold says, we shall go into the theaters and we shall sell communism to the people; but how little did he think in 1931 that the Federal Government would allow him to go into the theater to spread this same communistic doctrine. I agree with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] when he said that the Communists have a right to present their plays to the people; but they have not a right to present their plays at the expense of the United States Government, plays sponsored by the Government. That is my objection to it.

I do not criticize freedom of the stage. I think the stage should have the utmost freedom; but we should not pay for this propaganda out of the Federal Treasury and have it hidden as I have mentioned. The play, although a W. P. A. play, written by Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, the head of the theater project, is again noted.

Oh, you say, that is just one play of Miss Flanagan. I brought another play along. It has the right kind of cover—red. It is written in Russian, but here is the English translation of it. If you want to get it, it is "P G Russian, copy 2," from the Library of Congress. This is by Hallie Flanagan, the head of the theater project.

Let me tell you what she says about it here in the foreword. There is no communism about it. Let me say, before I go ahead, that she went over to Russia—I understand she has been over there three times—and she wrote a play about the Russian theater, according to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], in which she says this. Let me read to you what she said about the Russian theater. This is what she said on page 81 of her book:

I went to Russia because I wanted to understand the circumstances under which developed the incomparable art which we have seen in Stanislavsky's Theater, in the Chauve-Souris, the Musical Studio, the Ballets Russes, and the Habimah—

I cannot even pronounce the names of these theaters, but I will ask that they go into the RECORD. They are written in Russian; but she went to these theaters—and because I wanted to see for myself what part the theater plays in the new order and how it is influenced by that order. The answer to both questions proved to be so bound up with the whole social experiment that I became absorbed by the drama outside the theater; the strange, stirring, and glorious drama that is Russia.

That is from Mrs. Flanagan's own book. She went to Russia in order to find out what part the theater should play in the new order, and she became absorbed in the drama of Russia. She became absorbed by "the * * * glorious drama that is Russia"; and the United States Government is paying for theater projects sponsored and controlled by her and by those who feel the same way.

Let me go ahead and tell you about this play. This is written by Mrs. Flanagan herself and published by the experimental theater of Vassar College. Here are her own words from the foreword:

In Fear, Soviet drama moves definitely into a new phase. This is no revolutionary drama such as Roar, China, The Armoured Train, or The Death and Destruction of Europe. Neither is it one of the 5-year-plan plays such as Oil or Tempo, preaching the gospel of industrialization. Fear is an insular play, taking little cognizance of the world outside the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. There are in the entire play only three lines which link Russia with other countries.

Then she goes ahead to discuss those. I will not take the time of the Senate to read that; but she says:

This is a play of human beings struggling to become adjusted to a changing order.

This is by Mrs. Flanagan, the head of the theater project, written not for the United States, but for Russia; and the Senator from Montana said, "Would you say that there is any communism about it?" and he called me names. I have been called worse names than that. Nevertheless, going ahead with this—

This is a play of human beings struggling to become adjusted to a changing order. The line-up of forces for and against the Soviet is so equal that the play was at first barred in Russia as being counter-revolutionary; later—

Now listen—

Later it was accepted as a part of Russia's self-criticism program; as such it has packed theaters throughout Russia for a run of 2 years, and it is still the greatest theater attraction in the U. S. S. R.—Soviet Russia.

Those are the words of Hallie Flanagan. She is not only satisfied with writing plays such as The Drouth over here, in which Arkansas is attacked, but she goes over to Russia and writes a play for Russia, Fear, which she said herself is still the greatest theater attraction in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

I forgot to say, during the colloquy which developed with the Senator from Montana, that I discussed with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] this matter about the play that was written, and he said he hoped he would be present here this afternoon to say that he resented the vicious, untrue attack made on Arkansas and the people of Arkansas by this play, and that he hoped at a later date to discuss the play written by Mrs. Flanagan in which she attacks the people of Arkansas, attacks the Red Cross, and attacks the social order as it is.

That is a play. There are other plays that have been written. Let me read you what the International Theater on page 52 in 1934 says about Mrs. Flanagan's plays. Here is what it says:

Whittaker Chamber's story, Can You Hear Their Voices? appeared in the (Communist) New Masses. This is also a story of life on the farms of the American Midwest. This story not only had a deep effect on American revolutionary literature—

Let me repeat that. It says:

This is also a story of life on the farms of the American Midwest. This story not only had a deep effect on American revolutionary literature, it also affected American revolutionary dramaturgy.

That is the play written by Mrs. Flanagan, the head of the theater project, who hates communism, according to some of the Senators here.

Then it says:

Within 2 months of its publication Hallie Flanagan and Margaret Clifford, instructors of the theater at Vassar College, put it into a play of the same title.

Then, going ahead, let me quote from page 31 of the American Theater, in which it says this. This is what Ben Blake, who, I understand, is the representative of the Moscow board of the Communist American theater movement, says about the play of Mrs. Flanagan:

Up at the Vassar experimental theater the intrepid Hallie Flanagan and one of her advanced students, Margaret Clifford, wrote and staged Can You Hear Their Voices? which told with hard and bitter realism the tale of the impoverished and drought-stricken farmers, hunger driven to militant action to secure relief from starvation.

Of course, those who were in the Chamber and who heard what I read know what that militant action would be. They advocate that they take guns and go into a store and take flour, for instance, because, as they say, "Whose flour is it? Is it not our flour?" Or they advocate taking the land, and say, "Whose land is it? Is it not our land?"

Their leader finally sends his sons to a Communist workers' school to learn the basic causes of their misery and how to overcome them. * * * Can You Hear Their Voices? created a sensation in the American little theater. * * * Like an American forerunner in another field, it was a "shot heard 'round the world." It has been staged in at least a dozen languages in scores of cities and many lands.

That is the play which Mrs. Flanagan was sponsoring.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the Chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I understand the Senator is discussing the play Can you Hear Their Voices?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. That is a play based upon the life of an Arkansas farmer. I realize the latitude that should be given dramatists, and I would be the last man to destroy dramatics in any profession, particularly the stage. I realize the necessity for latitude to the press and to artists in portraying the thoughts they may have in their minds. But that play, localized as it is, seeking to portray a condition which does not exist, has never existed, and never will exist, in the State of Arkansas, is deeply resented by the people of Arkansas.

The tenant farmers of Arkansas are as patriotic as are any people who ever lived. They think just as much of this country as does anyone else, and they would be just as quick to bare their breasts to all the horrors war might have in order to sustain our form of government. Any play which undertakes to paint the Arkansas tenant farmer as a man who is untrue to the principles of his government is based either upon utter ignorance of conditions, or is conceived in an effort to destroy Americanism in this country. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator, in my time, whether it is not a fact that there have been many movements in Arkansas in an effort to stir up strife and trouble with the Arkansas farmers?

Mr. MILLER. The only trouble we have ever had in Arkansas, agriculturally speaking or otherwise, is because of agitators who came into the State, and who do not understand our people. Tolerance may cease to be a virtue. About the best way I know of to end that condition is to render some Arkansas justice.

Mr. HOLT. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas had not realized that they were painting the people of Arkansas in this way all over the United States, not only in the English language, but in foreign languages. As is said, they were not even satisfied with telling it in English, but they employed 12 other languages.

Mr. MILLER. I noticed that the play had been translated into Yiddish and other languages, but our true Americans down in Arkansas are not much concerned about it, except that I would like to invite the author to visit Arkansas and talk to some real Americans who live there.

Mr. HOLT. Going back to the question of this theater movement, it is said, You cannot indict all the people of the theater movement. But here is the head of the theater movement in the United States, who went over to Russia; and let me read from a very close friend of hers a statement—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the play to which the Senator from Arkansas referred a play financed by the Federal Government?

Mr. HOLT. No; it is not; they attempted to do that, but it was not finally done. But the woman who wrote the play is head of the whole theater project in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad the Senator clarified that.

Mr. HOLT. This is what a very close friend of Mrs. Flanagan has written to a Senator, speaking of the theater project:

When the movement first began I thought it was a wonderful thing, consequently I have followed it very closely. Today I think it is bad, and I write to tell you so. I think the Federal theater had its opportunity to give something constructive and valuable to the life of Americans and has muffed its chance dreadfully.

Perhaps one reason is that Mrs. Flanagan is so very communistic in tendencies that she has used her Federal theater project to disseminate communistic propaganda. After her three visits to Russia, Mrs. Flanagan has expressed herself very definitely in favor of many communistic thoughts. In arguments she has become very heated in her statements and has spoken in glowing terms of the work of Lenin and Semanoff. Though she denied that she is a Communist as such in her appearance before the Dies committee, she admitted in her testimony that the theater had always been used as a medium of propaganda. But I believe that, if we are going to have a Federal theater it should be used to disseminate propaganda about a democratic form of government rather than a communistic form.

That letter was not received by me, but it was received by a Senator from the Midwest, and I do not want to divulge the name, but I assure my colleagues that this is from someone very close to Mrs. Flanagan herself.

Going on with the discussion of the theater movement, let me quote from the Sunday Worker. I know many of my colleagues have read the Daily Worker, which is a Communist paper. This is what is said in the issue of July 12, 1936, of the Sunday Worker:

More than 1,600 persons saw Battle Hymn, the W. P. A. Federal theater project play about John Brown.

This is a W. P. A. theater project.

A model of the Harpers Ferry scene from Battle Hymn, the Michael Gold-Michael Blankfort play—

Senators know who Michael Gold is, do they not? He is probably the foremost Communist writer in America—

A model of the Harpers Ferry scene from Battle Hymn, the Michael Gold-Michael Blankfort play current at the W. P. A. Experimental Theater, Sixty-third Street and Broadway, is now on display in the window of the Workers' Bookshop, 50 East Thirteenth Street.

Those who are familiar with conditions know that the Workers' Bookshop is a bookshop where one can buy books either in Russian or English that are in favor of communism.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Why do not all the people who are so thoroughly impressed with the fine form of government provided by the Communists, who are preaching communism in this country, and say it is the finest sort of government upon the face of the earth, go back to Russia? Will the Senator tell me why they do not go to Russia?

Mr. HOLT. I am not able to answer the Senator. The Senator from Montana probably could answer that better than I could. [Laughter.] However, I will say this, that I have always found that the Communist wants communism for the other fellow instead of for himself. I have no objection to a man saying he is a Communist, but let him say so and not hide it under the Federal Government and say, "I am a good liberal. I am a liberal, not a Communist."

Now I go ahead with the Sunday Worker story.

They say this:

The scene, which was executed by the scenic model department of the W. P. A. Federal art project, was designed by Howard Bay.

And here is something about Florida. I spoke about Arkansas. I refer now to a play produced, according to this publication, by the W. P. A. regarding the State of Florida, and this will interest the Senators from Florida. I am quoting from the Communist paper under the heading—

"TURPENTINE—NEGRO W. P. A. REVOLUTIONARY TRIUMPH"

To quote from the Communist Party's Daily Worker (June 29, 1936) under the heading, "The Negro Theater Triumphs—Turpentine, Drama of Struggles in Florida Swamps":

"Turpentine, J. A. Smith and Peter Morell, staged by Emjo Basshe and Augustus Smith, settings by Manuel Eisman, produced by the Negro theater of the Federal theater of the W. P. A. at the New Lafayette Theater, Seventh Avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, New York City."

Then it proceeds to attack the conditions in Florida, and it tells the workers in Florida that there is a way out, that there is a new order. That was the statement of a W. P. A. theater project.

We can also discover other things in going over this Daily Worker; and, of course, I am sure no one can criticize me for using that, because that is the Communists' own paper.

On the 18th of May the Daily Worker reported that Prof. H. W. L. Dana had joined the advisory committee of the Federal theater's forthcoming production Battle Hymn, by Communists Mike Gold and Michael Blankfort, as announced by Virgil Geddes—of the Communist New Theater League—supervisor.

Although I have not checked this, I have been advised that Mr. Dana is a man who was active in communism, was arrested on a charge of corrupting boys' morals, and was barred from England as a Communist. Think of that; here is a man instrumental in W. P. A. plays in the city of New York who was barred from England, according to the New York Herald Tribune of April 1935, because he was corrupting boys' morals and was a Communist. This information has been handed to me.

Oh, no communism? The theater project is pure, just as pure as can be. It is as pure as the W. P. A. in Montana, let me say.

Going further we find this in the Sunday Worker of May 24, 1936, a news review of W. H. Auden's novelty, The Dance of Death. This Communist paper says:

A Broadway producer said: "You got me. I don't know what it's all about. I guess it must be a new era."

I am sure the Senator from North Carolina knows about the Adelphi Theater, because that is where, I believe, they had the play Sing for Your Supper, where they practiced for a good many months before putting on the play.

The audience in the capacious Adelphi Theater knew what it was all about and enjoyed the newest offering of the Federal theater project, W. H. Auden's The Dance of Death.

Listen to this. This is Hallie Flanagan, the woman who has a pure democratic viewpoint. Let me read this:

Auden's long poem reached Broadway through the will of Hallie Flanagan, National Director of the F. T. P. It has been produced under the supervision of Alfred Kreymborg, and Mr. Kreymborg is to be complimented upon the manner in which he has brought The Dance of Death to life. Miss Flanagan has already watched over a previous production of Auden's work, at her own Vassar College.

In The Dance of Death Auden tells, in musical-comedy ballet, verse, and with music, of the decadence of the bourgeoisie.

Listen to this. This is a play put on by the W. P. A.:

As the dancer dies and the middle class mourns his passing, preparing his funeral and its own, the shadow of Karl Marx looms over the stage. A voice speaks pityingly: "The instruments of production have been too much for him. He has been liquidated." * * * The shadow of the revolution hovers over the spectacle.

No communism about the theater project? They would just liquidate them. Senators know the story I read a moment ago, where it was said, "We are not strong enough to shoot them yet. We will shoot them later." Or words to that effect.

Here is another one, according to the Sunday Worker. The Sunday Worker of May 24 says about The Class of 1929, a play:

The Class of 1929 as depicted in the play by Orrie Lashin and Milo Hastings is a class of young men clinging desperately to their station in the old dying world. They cannot get jobs of the sort they desire. Their girl friends keep two of them. * * *

And so forth.

An argument in the Communist Sunday Worker (July 5, 1936) as to which is the best of two revolutionary plays is carried on by Percy McAllister, the Communist Party's Sunday Worker review, and Ben Irwin, of the national executive board of the Communist New Theater League.

The Communist New Theater League executive praises the W. P. A. play, Class of '29, as "undoubtedly the most complete condemnation of capitalism that this year's dramatic crop has produced."

That is what the dramatic critic of the Communist paper says of the Theater League, that the play put on by the W. P. A. in New York was "undoubtedly the most complete condemnation of capitalism that this year's dramatic crop has produced." Then he proceeded:

As far as actual wallop goes, Class of '29 would make the carriage trade wriggle in their seats a sight more than Dead End. "Carriage trade" refers to the bourgeois "exploiters" who drive to the theater.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question.

Mr. WILEY. I have been interested in what the Senator has said. I want to know whether he has any statistics to show the number of plays which have been put on under the theater project, and whether or not the project has seen fit to try to educate the people of this country by putting on plays like Shakespeare's plays, or some fine American plays or French plays, whether they were in the category of plays put on under this project?

Mr. HOLT. In the congressional hearings in the House there were listed, as I recall, 1,143 plays. I am not sure of the exact figure, but there were over 1,100 plays listed. There were some Shakespearean plays. But, if the Senator from Wisconsin will wait a moment, I will read some of the names of the plays and he will see what kind of plays the theater project is putting on in the United States. I am not talking about communism when I read you those plays.

The reviewer retorts: Class of '29 shouts about communism, yet its authors make the Communist a prig. I do not mean to infer that no prigs are Communists and that no Communists are prigs. Clear our prig is on certain questions. He stands by, however, at the unfortunate end of the play when one of his classmates commits suicide and the other compromises his principles following a drunken debauch.

I have never said that Class of '29 would not make the carriage trade wriggle in its seats. I don't care a whoop in a cavern about the carriage trade. I do care about the pedestrian ticket purchasers, and I do want them to see Dead End, which, never shouting revolution, is nonetheless revolutionary.

In other words, they are not interested in getting the man who comes to the theater in a carriage. "We are interested in getting the man to come to the theater who works, and we don't care if we shout revolution, as long as we can give him a little revolution under a sugar covering." That is the W. P. A. play under control of the theater project of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, who, it is said, has no communistic leanings at all; the woman who went to Russia; and the woman, as I showed a minute ago, who wrote a play which is now being used in the propaganda movement of the Soviet Republic.

Here is what the Communist party newspaper, the Sunday Worker, of June 21, 1936, says about the W. P. A. theater project.

The turmoil attendant upon the introduction of Hallie Flanagan's policy * * * has died down. Plays which were called "red" and "pink" have come, have gone, and have enriched—in most cases—the public's knowledge of things as they are—

Do not forget, Senators, Hallie Flanagan is the head of the theater project in the United States of W. P. A.

Meantime, the workers of the Federal theater project look forward to the establishment of a permanent Federal theater. They have carried their case to Washington and, although nothing official has yet been done, they have received assurances that, barring unfortunate upsets—

And they had one in this conference, I may say—

Barring unfortunate upsets, the Federal theater project will go on indefinitely.

Those are statements all quoted from the Communist newspaper in New York.

Mr. President, I probably would not have talked so long, but when my word was challenged and it was intimated that I had not told the truth about the plays, I wanted to show one play to the Senate. It can be obtained from the Library, and I will leave the decision to any Senator in this body, except the Senator from Montana. I assure the Senate that I will get 100 percent proof that the play is communistic and that Mrs. Flanagan wrote it, as she wrote the play Fear, which she herself said had been used by the Soviet Republic. That is one outstanding reason why I have been opposed to the Federal theater project.

I feel, as I have said, that they have a right to have their plays about communism. I would be the last man on earth to condemn that; but I do not think it is the duty of the United States Government to finance and to propagate Communist propaganda and pay for it out of the Federal Treasury. That is my objection to the project.

It is said, "Well, if you throw the theater people out on the street, what are they going to do?" Well, railroad men are thrown out. About 50 or 60 percent of the railroad men are now unemployed in the United States. The Government of the United States does not build railroads simply to take care of the railroad workers who are out of employment. It does not open up coal mines in the State of West Virginia to take care of the unemployed coal miners. It does not start a newspaper or a magazine to take care of unemployed writers. It does put some of them on the writers' projects—that is, if it knows how they stand. But it does not do all those things. I know it is said, "Oh, this must be done for humanitarian reasons. All these poor actors will be thrown out of work."

Mr. President, I feel sorry for the actors, but I think that they can get work on other white-collar projects, just as can accountants and auditors who are not employed. We do not set up new auditing departments simply to take care of them. Furthermore, we must realize that the cost per capita of the Federal theater project is the highest of any project in America. They want it continued. Why? Because they can disseminate propaganda through the United States and spread it wholesale, because when one goes to a Federally-sponsored theater he does not expect it to be entirely communistic in its nature. I do not say that all the plays are communistic. That would kill their purpose. They simply put on a few here and there. The Communists are not foolish. They know how to do it. They do it gradually. They will probably give a half dozen plays that are all right, and then they show a Communist play and put that across. Then they give three or four more other plays, and as time goes on the development they desire has been made.

And through the theater project they have carried the policy that was referred to in New Masses, a new cultural life in America, so that communism could be sold to the people.

I have spoken about a good many plays, but I want to give Senators the titles of some plays that will probably surprise them. The Senator from North Carolina spoke about some of them. Here are plays sponsored by the United States Government, paid for by the United States Government. I will read the titles:

After Dark.
This Thing Called Love.
My Lady Friends.

Every one of these is from the record of the House hearings, if Senators want to find them, on page 128 and following that, under House Joint Resolution 209.

After Dark.
This Thing Called Love.
My Lady Friends.
Companionate Maggie.
Dollie of the Follies.

Oh, they provide a good wide variety. One can get any kind of girl he wants by going to the W. P. A. theater project. One can get:

Companionate Maggie.
Dollie of the Follies.
King and the Chorus Girl.
Shanghai Sai.

Now, all these are W. P. A. theater projects. I am not going to stop with them. Here is a particularly suggestive one:

Elizabeth Sleeps Out.

Here is another:

Just a Love Nest.

Just a Love Nest. And that is put on by the Federal Government. [Laughter in the galleries.]

And then after Love Nest do Senators know what one of the plays is? After Love Nest one can go and see another theater project play called Her Confession.

And then if one is in that love nest he can go and see the play No More Ladies.

Senators, I do not know whether any of you have any trouble or not with your wives. I am a single man. I do not have any such trouble. But if you have trouble with your wife and have such a problem, the W. P. A. in this theater project takes care of it. Here is what you can see at the expense of the Federal Government:

School for Wives.
Too Many Wives.
She is in Plenty of Trouble.
Old Captain Romeo's Four Wives.

But he was not so bad as the next to which I am going to call attention. If you think he was in a bad situation, you can go and see another W. P. A. play entitled:

Six Wives on a Rampage.

It is bad enough to have one on a rampage, from what I hear from my married friends, but if you have six of them on a rampage you are in bad. And that play, Senators, is sponsored by the Federal Government.

I am a single man, and I suppose single men are interested in love. I do not know. But I want to go to New York to see these W. P. A. plays.

Then if you are interested in love you can see—

This Thing Called Love.

If the love bug bites you, the W. P. A. have a play for it: Love and How to Cure It.

That is a W. P. A. play. And then if you are not cured the W. P. A. will furnish you with another kind of a play entitled—

New Kind of Love.

Of course, then, they have the More Abundant Life. Then if you are not satisfied, you can see the play:

Petticoat Fever.

All at the expense of the Federal Government. We are discussing a relief bill, and we have heard so much about the dole and work relief. So they have a play for you if you are interested in that. That play is entitled:

"Love on the Dole."

And then after that they have a play called—Puppy Love.

All these plays are sponsored by the United States Government out of the W. P. A. theater project, which they claim has been so fine and so wonderful.

The reason I give the names of these plays is that I think the people have the right to know how the money is spent.

Here is another play—

The Boudoir Diplomat.

I spoke about trouble with wives. If the wives have trouble with their husbands there is a W. P. A. play for them. They have a W. P. A. play for anything one may want. Here is one:

The Cheating Husbands.

Then you will find these other plays—

Do Men Gossip?

Gentlemen Prefer Blonds.

Here is some advice in the way of a play they give one if he has any trouble—

Lend Me Your Husband.

Senators, that is a W. P. A. play!

Here are two plays about Mary—

Mary's Other Husband.

New Deal for Mary.

Here is another one:

Ruling Passion.

Then two other plays:

Suppressed Desires.

The School for Scandal.

Then there is another:

Nude With Pineapples.

All those plays paid for by the United States Treasury, paid for by the Government, and under the Federal theater project.

Then, if you are interested in more plays, here is another:

Three Ways to Rob a Lady.

Senators, Three Ways to Rob a Lady. That is a Federal theater project play.

What Ann Brought Home.

What a Woman Wants.

Those are W. P. A. plays. There are three plays about Mabel. There are only two about Mary, but three about Mabel:

Up in Mabel's Room.

Mabel Looks Ahead.

Go Easy, Mabel.

All of those come out of Federal funds. It is purified Federal theater project, about which so many tears have been shed.

I am now going to give a list of plays in another part of the theater project. I have given the titles of those about the ladies. I do not know whether any Senators have any trouble with old King Alcohol, but the theater project has plays concerning King Alcohol, if Senators want to see them and are interested in them:

Ten Nights in a Barroom.

The Old Soak.

Hiccoughs and Happiness.

All those put on by Federal Government theater projects. Then here is one more play:

The Bishop Misbehaves.

But the best title of them all, one very typical with the W. P. A., comes next. We know how the W. P. A. loves the workers in September and October. That was shown when there was an election. They love them in September and October, but as Jimmy Walker's song, I Wish They Would Love Them in December as They Do in May. So, I will give the name of another play, which is typical of the W. P. A.:

Love 'Em and Leave 'Em.

That is what they do to the workers. They love them in October and leave them in December, under the W. P. A. That is what is going on under the purified W. P. A. As I said, I probably would not have gone into the matter so thoroughly had not my word been challenged; but when my word was challenged I went to the record to see what kind of a record Miss Flanagan had personally, and what the theater project had cost.

The Senator from North Carolina put into the RECORD the other day a very startling thing. I understand a conference committee had some beautiful paintings that were very startling. I did not see them, but I understand that under the names of the beautiful ladies, whose pictures were painted by the W. P. A., were their telephone numbers. I did not see the pictures, but I have been told about them by a Member of Congress. That was all paid for out of the United States Treasury.

Is it not time that we were realizing that if we are to have relief, we should have relief for constructive purposes? Let us have relief for the unemployed and for those who are in need; not to disseminate propaganda, not to spread filth over the country. I do not object to the people of the country being given the opportunity to see good plays. However, I say that the Federal theater project must be cleaned up. First, because it exhibits too many trends toward communism; second, because it is too expensive; and, third, because the selection of plays has been ridiculous so far as certain titles are concerned.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the subject further, except to say that I wish to compliment the House committee on the work it has done in cleaning up the Federal theater project in America. I favor relief for the actors, but I favor a different kind of relief than that given under the Federal theater project.

EXHIBIT A

[From the New Masses for August 1931]

ART IS A WEAPON—PROGRAM OF THE WORKERS CULTURAL FEDERATION

The world-wide crisis of capitalism has intensified the class struggle not only on the economic and political fields, but on the cultural as well. More than ever it is becoming clear to the workers of every country, and to those intellectuals whose economic distress or mental integrity has brought them to the side of the workers in their struggle for the overthrow of capitalism, that art and science, journalism, and education, indeed, every instrument for molding the mind and imagination of man, is being utilized by the capitalist class for concealing the truth and for spreading falsehoods regarding the system of exploitation upon which its power rests.

Capitalism has reached a period of material and spiritual decline. Bread lines fill the cities of the various capitalist empires. Millions of workers the world over, with the solitary exception of the Soviet Union, are vainly tramping the streets for jobs. Starvation and misery are widespread. The bourgeois governments are making frantic pretenses of halting the crisis while energetically preparing for the next war. In this critical period it must be clear, more than ever before, to all workers, to all honest intellectuals, that the capitalist class is using the instruments of culture at its disposal for propaganda purposes, sometimes crudely open, sometimes well concealed.

This campaign of capitalist propaganda is carried on through the church, the schools, the newspapers, the magazines, the movie, and the radio. The greatest inventions for the spread of ideas, which in a Socialist country like the Soviet Union are used to raise the cultural level of the masses, are used in the United States and other capitalist countries for spreading far and wide lies about the extent of unemployment, lies about the economic crisis, lies about the preparations for war, lies of the tremendous Socialist construction being carried out by the workers of the Soviet Union.

This is to be expected. In all class societies the dominating class rules by controlling the instruments of culture along with economic and political power; it rules by disarming the exploited classes culturally as well as economically and politically. In the present crisis in capitalist economy, the Fascist elements in every country have not only slashed wages and deprived the workers of economic and political advantages won in previous struggles, but have attacked the cultural strongholds of revolutionary working-class organizations. The American capitalist class has dropped the mask of democracy; it has broken up workers' meetings, suppressed workers' newspapers, deported foreign-born workers for revolutionary activity, attacked workers' organizations, and prohibited the importation of revolutionary books and pamphlets from other countries.

The most cursory glance at American cultural institutions will reveal them at once as instruments of capitalist domination. The American school teacher who ventures the mildest criticism of the fraud and violence by which the bourgeoisie maintains its power is in danger of losing his job. Students who engage in revolutionary activities face persecution and expulsion. The public-school systems are adjuncts to corrupt local political machines, while the private colleges and universities are controlled by Wall Street bankers. These institutions drill the students in the capitalist catechism based on patriotism, militarism, hatred and contempt for the working class, sacred worship of capitalist society. Similarly, the press is a loyal mouthpiece of the ruling class, presenting to the masses, day in and day out, the capitalist version of all important events, and distracting the attention of the workers from the burning problems which confront them by stressing pornography and crime. The church, through its servile priests, ministers, and rabbis, fills the minds of the masses with the most childish superstitions, hands them spiritual opium to make them forget their class interests, identifies the gospel of Jesus with the gospel of J. P. Morgan and brands as heresy and heathenism any effort of the oppressed toilers to better their condition. Keeping pace with the times, the church has now established itself as a recreational and cultural center in order to hold the workers in leash. Such semireligious institutions as the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Y. M. H. A., and Y. W. H. A. serve the same purpose.

Bourgeois sport, to which the press gives more space than to the most important political and economic questions, has ceased to be sport in any real sense of the word and has become a commercial and profitable form of fraud for profit. The corruption of professional sports, which are often closely connected with the underworld, is notorious. Discrimination against Negroes is rampant in both amateur and professional sports. Not content with the usual sport organizations, which are ballyhooed through the press, the movies and the radio, the capitalists have now resorted to organizing sport teams in the factories as a means of keeping the workers distracted.

From the point of view of reaching the widest masses of the population, the most important cultural instruments are the movies and the radio. Here we have two "arts" monopolized by a handful of capitalists organized in trusts, handling billions of dollars, reaching every day and every evening millions of people. Here bourgeois censorship has full sway. The movies writer, the radio speaker must conform to bourgeois policy or get out. While the literary teas still like to babble about the "freedom of the artist," the radio and the movies turn the American intellectual into a slave whose utterances are controlled in the interests of the sacred rights of private property. On this score even highly paid writers in Hollywood have complained. In the radio and the movie we have reached the industrialization of art, under capitalism the mass production of bourgeois ideas. It is no wonder that Hollywood turns out dozens of insipid films of "passion" and racketeering, while completely ignoring the life of the masses of the population; it is no wonder that workers' organizations cannot broadcast over the radio.

Capitalist culture in the twentieth century is imperialist culture. The American ruling class exports capital to foreign countries—and movies. American gunboats and missionaries are sent to China; American schools are opened in Cuba, Haiti, China, the Philippines for the sons of the middle classes who are trained to become efficient betrayers of their people while keeping the masses in ignorance. Beneath this upper crust of "Western culture," imperialism preserves intact the stagnant precapitalist cultural forms and levels, preventing the development of an independent national culture.

Within the United States itself this cultural domination is most evident in the case of the Negro. Negro children in the South (and in many Northern States), when they get any schooling at all, are segregated in Jim Crow schools that are vastly inferior to the white schools. Most Southern States spend from 4 to 10 times as much on the education of white children as on Negro children. In contrast, Negro preachers, Bible thumpers, and holy rollers of all kinds flourish amidst the economic, social, and cultural exploitation of the Negro. In the North the Negro is patronized culturally, kept at the level of a blues singer and tap dancer for the amusement of tired businessmen and white thrill hounds.

To the culture of capitalism in decay the new culture of the Soviet furnishes a striking contrast. For the first time in history, a true mass culture on a high level (as distinguished from the culture of primitive communism which was based on a very low development of the productive forces) is being developed. The entire working population of the Soviet Union is participating in the creation of a new culture, molding it on the basis of their own lives and struggles.

"Art belongs to the people," said Lenin. "It must have its deepest roots in the broad mass of the workers. It must be understood and loved by them. It must be rooted in and grow with their feelings, thoughts, and desires. It must arouse and develop the artist in them." In contrast to the spiritual exhaustion, mysticism, and despair of bourgeois literature, there is tremendous vitality and a creative strength in Soviet literature, rooted in the shops and factories and fields, fertilized constantly by the worker and peasant correspondents. In the other arts even bourgeois specialists are forced to express their admiration. It has become a commonplace that the Soviet drama and cinema (particularly the latter) lead the world. The cultural revolution in Soviet Russia, which is an integral part of the social revolution, has given complete cultural, as well as political autonomy to the numerous nationalities that were formerly oppressed by Russian czarism and imperialism. Stalin's formulation: "proletarian culture—national in form, proletarian in content" is being realized in life. Soviet culture is not only aiding the struggles and developing the creative powers of the Russian masses, but is a mighty force helping to undermine the domination of bourgeois culture throughout the world. In every capitalist country, in varying degree, we already see the birth of a proletarian culture within the womb of capitalist society. Just as the epoch of the bourgeois revolution witnessed the upsurge of bourgeois culture, so the epoch of the proletarian revolution is producing a powerful development of cultural activities among the working class.

In performing its historic mission of creating the material basis for the socialist society, capitalism also creates the basis for socialist culture. The development of the press, the spread of literacy, the establishment of publishing houses, libraries, and movies, the radio, in short, the entire cultural apparatus of capitalism becomes the foundation for mass proletarian culture and the arsenal from which the workers take their cultural weapons even before the overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

The possibilities for the development of proletarian culture in the United States have been immensely widened by the economic crisis which has shaken the pillars of capitalist society, has radicalized the workers, as well as large numbers of intellectuals, and destroyed in them the illusions about prosperity, the American standard of living, etc., which the ruling class had so carefully cultivated.

The economic crisis has roused many intellectuals out of their indifference to social questions and has brought them closer to the workers. Thousands of engineers, musicians, teachers, writers, artists, and newspapermen are walking the streets unable to find jobs. Even before the crisis rationalization (speed-up), technological improvements (e. g., the movietone), and trustification (e. g., newspaper mergers) had thrown large quantities of skilled mental labor out on the streets. Here, too, the anarchy of capitalist production plays its part. The colleges and universities produce thousands of teachers, engineers, chemists, etc., for an unknown market which is already glutted and cannot absorb these surplus commodities. And, as in industry, we find that skilled mental labor is being dumped into the ranks of the relatively unskilled. Many lawyers, for example, who imagined that they were going into business for themselves have been reduced to the position of little more than clerks for large banks and trust companies. How true today are the words of the Communist manifesto: "The bourgeoisie has stripped of its halo every occupation hitherto honored and looked up to with reverent awe. It has converted the physician, the lawyer, the priest, the poet, the man of science into its paid wage laborers."

The lowered economic and social status of the intellectuals, coming in the period of the decay of bourgeois culture and the rise of the culture of the proletariat, has produced a deep social ferment among them and a decisive swing to the left on the part of many. This leftward swing is of varying degrees and though it is accompanied by characteristic confusions and vacillations, it is nonetheless immensely significant. The first organizational expression of this radicalization occurred at the very beginning of the economic crisis with the formation in October 1929, of the first association of revolutionary writers and artists of the United States, the John Reed Club. This gave an impetus to the general proletarian cultural movement, which found organizational form in the Workers Cultural Federation of New York, founded in June 1931.

The Workers Cultural Federation of New York, formed at an enthusiastic conference at which 130 organizations, with a total membership of about 20,000, were represented, comes forward in the most acute period of the capitalist crisis. It is an expression on the cultural front of the will to struggle, on the part of thousands of workers, for the overthrow of the system that makes crisis, starvation, misery, and war inevitable. Against reactionary capitalist culture and its liberal, reformist servants we oppose the swiftly developing forces of revolutionary proletarian culture. Against the treacherous policy of cultural class collaboration and the open or concealed support of reactionary organizations, we pursue the policy of class struggle in culture and openly support all the revolutionary organizations of the working class. Against ideological reaction, fascism, mysticism, liberal tightrope walking and pseudo-scientific apologetics that have become the platform of the cultural representatives of capitalism, we stand firmly on the platform of dialectical materialism, on the discoveries and teachings of Marx, Engels, and Lenin.

For many years American working-class organizations of various nationalities have been engaged in some form of cultural activity. This activity has, however, been uncoordinated and has affected for the most part only the foreign-language workers. Little cultural islands have grown up among the various nationalities, and though all have common aims, there has been no contact among them. Moreover, this work has been confined largely to the big cities and to the advanced workers, while the broad masses in the shops and factories, and especially the native-born workers, have not been touched at all.

It was to remedy these defects and to broaden and develop cultural activity as a weapon in the struggles of the workers that the Workers Cultural Federation of the New York District was formed—the first step toward a Nation-wide federation of all proletarian cultural groups. The fifth congress of the Red International of Labor Unions and the Kharkov Conference of Revolutionary Writers and Artists, held last year, gave the immediate impetus to the establishment of the federation. The experiences of the highly developed proletarian cultural movements in Soviet Russia and Germany have shown us the way. That way is into the shops and trade-unions. The revolutionary trade-unions must, in fact, become the base of all the cultural work, from which it will penetrate into the other mass organizations, into isolated industrial and farming communities, into strike struggles and political campaigns, into all the activities of the working class.

The broad masses must be the basis for all our work and not merely the advanced workers. Special attention must be paid to the Negroes among whom the influence of the church is especially pernicious. It is our job to develop cultural activities with a special appeal to the Negro masses and to draw Negroes into the already existing cultural organizations. In this work the cooperation of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights is essential. Similarly, the Latin American workers in the United States, who, like the Negroes, bear the burden of a double oppression, are sorely in need of cultural organizations.

Strong ties with the worker correspondence and shop paper movements are essential if we are really to be close to the masses and respond to their needs. New and more varied forms of cultural activity need to be developed. Of paramount importance is the creation of a strong proletarian antireligious movement to free the workers from the strangle hold of the church.

The youth, both proletarian and intellectual, holds not only the future of the proletarian cultural movement, but its dynamic, vitalizing present. The Labor Sports Union, the radical students' clubs, and the Pioneer movement must be given all possible aid and their work coordinated with that of the other cultural groups.

Coordination of activity, broadening of our work to include larger numbers of workers and radicalized intellectuals, an interchange of material and experience, the development of greater internationalism among the workers in this country, relentless struggle against bourgeois culture, the development of a great mass proletarian culture to vitalize the lives of the workers and aid them in their struggles—these, in brief, are the aims of the Workers Cultural Federation. They can be achieved only on the basis of the platform adopted at the Kharkov conference which urged support of the workers revolutionary movement, struggle against imperialist war, and in defense of the Soviet Union, struggle against fascism and its "socialist" twin brother, social-fascism, struggle against the persecution of Negroes and the foreign-born, struggle for the release of all political prisoners, which include many cultural workers.

The struggle against imperialist war and in defense of the Soviet Union is especially important because of the widespread illusions that exist on this question. In the last war most of the writers, artists, scientists, teachers, and other intellectuals went over bag and baggage to the imperialist governments and did their best to lead the workers in the same direction. Today many of them are consciously or unconsciously doing the same sort of work, aiding in the ideological preparation of the new war, a war which will most probably be directed against Soviet Russia. To deny the war danger is to bury one's head in the sands; the Workers' Cultural Federation calls on all American workers, farmers, and intellectuals to unite in the struggle against the criminal war preparations of the American Government which spends billions for war, but not one cent for unemployment relief. We call on them to defend the Soviet Union.

Our federation emerges at one of the critical moments of history, the moment when the struggle between two systems of civilization has entered a decisive stage. We enter this struggle in order to hasten the death of the old world; we enter it in unshakable faith in the creative powers of the working class and in its ultimate triumph. Among the working masses in shop, mine, mill, and field, among the toiling and thinking youth of America our work will be noted. To all those who like Romain Rolland and Theodore Dreiser, by their opposition to the old world of oppression, of hypocrisy, lies, and corruption, already stand in the ranks of the fighters for the new, we hold out the hand of comradeship. The proletarian revolt sweeps on; whatever the vicissitude of its fortunes, it sweeps on to victory.

WORKERS' CULTURAL FEDERATION.

JULY 25, 1931.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrd	Gibson	Hughes
Andrews	Byrnes	Gillette	Johnson, Calif.
Ashurst	Capper	Glass	Johnson, Colo.
Austin	Clark, Idaho	Green	King
Bailey	Clark, Mo.	Guffey	La Follette
Bankhead	Connally	Gurney	Lee
Barbour	Danaher	Hale	Lodge
Barkley	Davis	Harrison	Logan
Bilbo	Donahey	Hatch	Lucas
Bone	Downey	Hayden	McCarran
Borah	Ellender	Herring	McKellar
Bulow	George	Holman	Maloney
Burke	Gerry	Holt	Mead

Miller	Pepper	Shipstead	Tydings
Minton	Pittman	Slattery	Vandenberg
Murray	Radcliffe	Smathers	Van Nuys
Neely	Reed	Stewart	Wagner
Norris	Reynolds	Taft	Walsh
Nye	Russell	Thomas, Okla.	Wheeler
O'Mahoney	Schwellenbach	Tobey	White
Overton	Sheppard	Townsend	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee what was done with the N. Y. A. appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senate conferees receded. The compelling argument, in addition to the pressure which is always exerted in conference in the adjustment of different disputed items, was a statement made by the House conferees that the Appropriations Committee had originally intended to put in $81,000,000 for the N. Y. A., instead of the $75,000,000 of a year ago. The committee was asked to place the figure at $100,000,000, and it did so, with the assurance from Mr. Aubrey Williams that he would not ask for an increase over the $100,000,000. The House conferees stated that there was a definite agreement on that point, and that they would not and could not go beyond their understanding with Mr. Williams.

I am merely stating what was reported to us. I have no personal knowledge of the agreement, but it seemed to be understood by all the House conferees, and they were insistent that they would not raise the figure.

Mr. TAFT. I also understand that because of the views of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt] the theater project has been entirely eliminated.

Mr. ADAMS. The theater project was eliminated with the exception of some rather minor provisions for salaries for theater project workers, in some cases for 1 month and in other cases for 2 months.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to make only one other statement, and that is with reference to the same matter which was discussed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg]. I do not make this statement because of any telegrams from mayors in cities in Ohio. I am convinced that there is no way by which those cities can raise the additional money to pay their sponsors' share of 25 percent. Fortunately, the effective date of the provision to which I refer is put off until the 1st of next January. I would vote against the conference report if that were not so. I hope that by that time conditions may have changed. I do not think they will. I feel perfectly confident that on the 1st of January we shall be insisting, with proper support from the statistics, that the 25-percent figure should not be maintained, or at least that there should be some leeway, such as a margin of 10 percent, which can be dispensed at the discretion of the Administrator, as was provided in the House measure.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator will recognize that the 25-percent provision was put in by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. I recognize that, and I congratulate the conferees on insisting on the Senate's views. I wish all conferees had pursued the same policy during the past few days.

I will say, Mr. President, that I am going to vote for the conference report, and I hope it may be adopted as soon as possible.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, too few realize the significance and importance of votes on conference reports. As a matter of fact, the conference report vote on the W. P. A. appropriation measure for 1939-40 is really the final vote on it. As the vote may not be a record vote, I want to take this opportunity to state that I am voting for the W. P. A. appropriation.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

Mr. McKellar and other Senators. "Vote!"

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee object if I ask a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. It is with regret that I am advised that the prevailing-wage features of the joint resolution, which were inserted in the Senate by a rather overwhelming vote, were not retained. I wonder if the chairman of the Senate conferees can shed any light on the reason for that provision being left out of the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I can only say that in the conference we considered 131 amendments. The House receded and accepted something over 100 of those amendments. The Senate receded in whole on only 4 amendments. There were about 12 to 15 amendments upon which there were adjustments. The Senate was not in a position to secure the adoption of everything it put in the joint resolution. We had, of course, to concede some things that we wanted to have in the joint resolution. As a matter of fact, everything the Senate put in the joint resolution it was the desire of the Senate conferees to retain. The Senator, of course, knows that that cannot be done.

The House conferees were very insistent upon some of these things. They were particularly insistent in regard to the amendment in reference to the prevailing wage. Back of them was the view of the Administrator, Colonel Harrington, and of the administration. In other words, the administration was opposed to the prevailing wage.

Colonel Harrington's statement on that subject appeared in our records. If the Senator will recall, on page 105 of the Senate hearings appears the statement of Colonel Harrington, made before the House Committee on Appropriations and repeated before the Senate committee. I think, perhaps, if the Senator does not mind, I will read that statement.

Mr. LODGE. I wish the Senator would do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Colonel Harrington said:

The next item I wish to take up is that concerning the 130 hours a month.

A very important new policy with which I am fully in accord is expressed in section 15 of the joint resolution. This is that all project employees shall be required to work 130 hours a month in order to earn the security wage. I sincerely trust that this provision will receive final approval.

My remarks in justification of that are contained in the House hearings.

Senator NYE. What line is that, Colonel?

Colonel HARRINGTON. Page 17, beginning with line 16.

Senator ADAMS. Colonel Harrington, I think there should be in our record at least a summary of your statement. That is one of the items which is apt to be controversial.

Colonel HARRINGTON. My testimony on that occurs beginning on page 19 of the House hearings from which I would like to put into the record the following—

Senator ADAMS. Yes.

Colonel HARRINGTON. Under the subject "Advisability of Adopting Wage Policies on Monthly Bases."

A great deal of consideration and study has been given to the advisability of the abandonment of the prevailing hourly rate of pay and the adoption of the principles of a monthly wage with a standard number of hours of work required each month. In addition, the Works Progress Administration has experienced the advantages and disadvantages of operating a works program on the basis of monthly wages with standard, uniform hours of work for all workers and also of operating a works program on the basis of prevailing hourly rates of pay with hours of work varying according to classes of work.

An example of the difficulties involved in scheduling operations as a result of the differences in the hours of work for different classifications is afforded by a building construction project in Pittsburgh. Bricklayers are permitted to work only 48½ hours per month while the hod carriers work 63½ hours, the building-trade laborers 89 hours, and unskilled laborers 120 hours. On the same project a plumber is limited to 50 hours of work a month, while his helper must be scheduled for 71½ hours of work. Compressor operators are limited to 56½ hours per month while jack-hammer operators are scheduled for 119 hours of work. It is obvious that schedules such as these render any practicable type of staggering of employment ineffective in producing efficient operations.

It is believed that the principles of the monthly wage requiring 130 hours a month will be an important factor in determining need, since workers who are able to secure part-time employment and who have any other means of livelihood would not, in general, accept employment on a works program requiring 130 hours of work per month at a subsistence wage except as a final resort.

It is my recommendation that persons employed on projects of the W. P. A. be required to work 130 hours per month and that the earnings of such persons be on a monthly basis with the requirement that substantially the present national average labor cost be maintained. Allowances should be made for differentials in these earnings according to existing differentials in cost, conditions of living, and the average earnings in private industry.

As I say, we were confronted with the solid opposition of the House conferees, backed up with the support of the administration. We did secure the inclusion in the report of the amendment which was put in by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], forbidding differentials in excess of the difference in living conditions in different sections.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Colorado for making such a complete statement. I know, of course, that he did everything he could to defend the view of the Senate. I think, however, the average citizen is going to be somewhat confused, if not bewildered, at the attitude taken by those in authority on the matter of prevailing wages.

After a certain amount of difficulty, the Senator will recall, provisions for prevailing wages have been incorporated in our Federal housing legislation so far as the overwhelming majority of the work is concerned. We have provisions for prevailing wages in other types of Federal laws. In my State we have requirements for prevailing wages on any work that is done by a public body. It is going to be difficult for the average man to grasp—and I confess the logic of it is not at all apparent to me—why a principle that is good for Americans working on one kind of project is not equally good for Americans working on another.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no desire to delay the adoption of the conference report. I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for making his explanation. I simply wish to express my regret that that has been the conclusion.

I desire to add two statements, if I may, that were made by the House conferees.

One was in an effort to meet the argument which the Senator has presented; that is, that the prevailing wage could operate in housing projects and in other industries. They say the difficulty is, "In the Works Progress Administration you have fixed the security wage. That is, you have fixed a maximum wage to which you have to adjust your hours; while in working on buildings the full amount of wages is not involved. The man is working the full time and getting a wage in accordance with the classification."

I am merely stating the argument which was made.

The other was that the House members contended that if those on W. P. A. worked longer hours, there would be less real infringement upon the prevailing wage than otherwise; that they were now confronted with the fact that the men on W. P. A. were working perhaps 2 weeks out of the month at the prevailing wage, and then there was some tendency for them to go out and take at a cut rate jobs which otherwise would go to men not on relief.

I am merely reciting arguments that were made which had convinced the House members.

I may add, purely as a personal matter, that when the prevailing wage was before the Senate, I voted for the prevailing wage. I voted to put it in the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator did.

Mr. ADAMS. So I am presenting the situation as it developed in the committee, which is not made up of a single individual.

Mr. LODGE. I appreciate that fact. What impresses me is the apparent contradiction between the expressions which quite often appear in the press that the administration is in favor of prevailing wages, and then an action like this, which, as the Senator from Colorado has explained, is an official administration policy not to have the prevailing wage in this joint resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in about 5 minutes I can at least utter a word of protest against what is about to be done by the United States Congress.

I am not so critical of the conferees, because I am sure they have been acting in accord with the sentiment of what is perhaps the dominant attitude of both Houses of Congress; but in the reduction of the appropriation which was made available by the Senate amendments to the National Youth Administration part of the joint resolution they have deprived a great many thousand boys and girls of this country of a chance to get an education.

I should be unworthy of an obligation which I owe to a Federal Government which made it possible for me to get a considerable part of my own education if I did not utter a sentiment of protest against depriving others who are ambitious for a chance to go to school of the same opportunity that I had.

Some Senator or some Representative had enough generosity and unselfishness in his heart to propose and secure the passage of Federal legislation of which I was the personal beneficiary. I shall be grateful to the last day of my life for the sentiment which on that occasion prevailed in Congress. When America is too poor to give the boys and girls of this country an opportunity to work for an education, I wonder about how seriously we have reflected upon the security of our people.

They are not asking for charity. As the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]—who so splendidly sponsored the increase which the Senate put in the joint resolution for the N. Y. A.—told us, we are helping these boys to get an education that will make them better citizens, and not only better citizens but more productive economic units in this country. By our present action we have not denied them charity; we have denied them an opportunity to work in order that they might increase their services to their country and their personal earning capacity; and we do that under the pretentious guise of economy and stability of government.

Not only that, Mr. President, but we have with evident glee, with the evident dominancy of some safe and sound conservatism, destroyed one of the splendid contributions which the Works Progress Administration has been making to the cultural and esthetic values of this country—the theater project—which some derive so much satisfaction from castigating and denouncing upon this floor and the floor of the other body of Congress.

I derive no satisfaction from being the kind of a demagogue that delights to raise my own position to greater prestige by taking advantage of a prejudice and a falsification; nor do I think it appropriate to castigate 7,000 as worthy persons as there are in this country with being Communists, or something else that is objectionable to the philosophy of some person, because there may be some individuals in that group of 7,000 who do not have ideas upon which perhaps some persons, or almost all persons, agree.

The people who are on the theater projects in this country, the actors and actresses of this Nation, have responded as generously as any other class of our citizens when catastrophe and suffering and emergency laid their hands of affliction upon the people of this Nation. They have given their services charitably and generously for the relief of the oppressed, and the drought-stricken and the flood-stricken and tornado- and storm-stricken people of this Nation, and it is an unworthy response for the American Congress to leave the inference that the people who are engaged in the theater are un-American, in sympathy with some foreign doctrine that is subversive of the principles of this Government, and I would not deem that I had discharged my individual duty to my personal conscience if I did not say a word in protest against that.

In my own State of Florida a few months ago I drove unobtrusively one evening into a small town in a rural county, and I saw perhaps a thousand people assembled there obviously observing some display. I slipped unnoticed up to the edge of the crowd and discovered that the occasion of the assembly was the showing of a third-rate western movie thriller on an open screen from a machine that was little better than a magic lantern of the old days, and that recreation-starved and hungry people came there, when there was no picture show in the town, to see that for recreation. The W. P. A., be it said to its credit, did give the people of that community better recreational opportunities than they had ever previously been able to enjoy, from the theater project, which were exhibited there from time to time.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, that the American theater has profited and American cultural sentiment has gained advantage and the American tradition of a better life for all the people has been added to by this plan which has been carried on under the W. P. A., and now is thrown to the dogs, as it were, with only a few to defend it.

Mr. President, I know it has not been perfect. There may have been a lack of wisdom on the part of some of its administrators, but that does not entitle it to what it has received from the American Congress.

The significant thing I wanted to say was that we know that there are at least seven or eight hundred thousand people in this country who are certified for relief by responsible State agencies to whom we have entrusted that authority and responsibility and we know that they were unemployed and unable to get jobs in January of this year when there were 3,000,000 working on the W. P. A. We know that since January of this year, due to what we have done in the Congress toward restricting the W. P. A. appropriation, hundreds of thousands have been taken away from the single opportunity they had to earn a dollar for a day's work. We know that this appropriation will condemn to unemployment, will separate from their only chance to get a job, another million of those people who have been certified after investigation as unable to get jobs in private enterprise.

We know those facts, and, in addition, we know from every census that has been made, from American Federation of Labor censuses, from investigations that have been made by the Department of Labor of the United States Government, and the investigation that was made in the taking of the unemployment census, which was conducted by a Republican, that, we know that every single investigation has disclosed that there are millions of unemployed men and women in this country. Yet what are we doing? Gradually we are choking the only alternative to persistent employment that was offered to those people.

What I rose to say was that I have observed the tendency in this country, which disturbs me when I think of what is likely to happen in the future. I have observed religious bigotry and intolerance growing in this Nation; I have observed racial bigotry and intolerance growing in this Nation. I have observed the attitude of antipathy toward the spirit of reform which occasionally asserts itself in this country. We are becoming tired of idealism again, and I suppose we are on the way toward the swinging of the pendulum of reaction. Perhaps we are going to see another era of "normalcy" such as that which came upon this country after the World War.

Perhaps it is just inherent in human nature, and in the infirmity of man, that we cannot maintain ourselves very long upon a high plane of ambition and idealism. Perhaps it is just that way that the world has been made in that cast, has been formed that way, but I remember what happened in the twenties under the reign of "normalcy," which our Republican friends promised us in this country.

I remember how debauched the American character became. I remember how sordid American ideals became. I remember to what low degree integrity, even in the highest offices in this country, sank, and I say God forbid that we should have something comparable in the years to come, if we are headed again toward another such reactionary period in this country.

The prospect now is that the millions who are unemployed, the thousands and hundreds of thousands who are certified as in need of work and unable to find jobs, and all the people who are dependent upon those millions of people look now, so far as I can see, not even to a hope. The Federal Government is decreasing rather than increasing what it is doing and if I were an unemployed person I would not see very much promise of getting assistance from the Federal Government, because steadily, steadily, steadily they are tightening their grasp upon this program and choking it, choking it, choking it to death.

I suppose that if I were in that category I would perhaps be in a frame of mind to listen to the fantastic assurances of the Republican Party, when they come along next year and say to the assembled multitude of hungry and unemployed, "The Democrats have had their chance, have they not? They occupied the White House, they had the Vice Presidency, they had the Presidency of the Senate, they had the Speakership of the House, they had the chairmen of all the important committees in the Senate and the House, they had the purse strings of the Federal Government, they had the assets of the United States of America at their disposal and look what a meager pittance they were willing to give you."

"Give us, the Republicans of this country, the control of the Government, and we will give you something. You older people, in the sunset period of life, we will give the Townsend plan, and that will mean $200 a month. We will give you, not a pittance, but we will give you aplenty," and naturally they are going to harken, in all probability, in far too many instances, if not in all, to the illusion and the snare of such a claim.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to say that it seems to me that if the United States Congress were actually disturbed about conditions as they are in this country it would want to protect the youth of America, that one-third of all the unemployed who are between 16 and 24 years of age, those 4,000,000 American boys and girls between 16 and 24 who are out of school, employable, who want to work, who do not have a chance to work in their own country.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the American Congress actually were cognizant of conditions as they are, instead of haggling here over a few hundred thousand dollars for cancer eradication or for the extermination of pneumonia or for the abolition of tuberculosis or for making it forever impossible for people to be stricken down by numerous preventable scourges and diseases, the American Congress out of the plentitude of America's resources would say to the Public Health Service, "How much can you intelligently and efficiently spend in eradicating disease which is taking such a deadly toll of loved ones of America's citizens every year, every month, and every second of the day?"

Instead of that we stand here and howl about economy, and let little children die, and let mothers die, and let men and women who ought to live die, and we are proud of the contribution we have made to the stability of the American Government.

Mr. President, I am not so sure but that I would not have in my heart some of the same sentiments the agitators display if I were in their category and I observed the lack of conscientious concern the American Congress exhibited about deplorable conditions in the United States.

I know a little bit about how the poor live, because I have been all my life practically in that category. I know the squalor which exists in millions of American homes. Senators know it, if they do not stay out of that atmosphere so long that they forget it. Just take your hat in your hand and go to any one of the States, or come into mine, and go actually out into the streets and the highways and the byways, and if you are not almost affronted by the callousness of what you see I think you will have made your heart callous before you begin the adventure.

In my State of Florida, which I have good reason to believe is not so very far behind the average, the head of the nutrition department of the University of Florida a few months ago told me that she had investigated the rural schools of that State, and that 50 percent of the children in the rural schools of the State were so undernourished that they were literally almost on the brink of the grave with an inadequate hemoglobin, so much so that only a little bit before that one of her case workers saw a little child ascend a short stairway and fall dead in the middle of the schoolroom floor from that meager exertion. Not only that, but pellagra, attributable to undernourishment, is rampant in my State, and in practically every other State in the Union, at least in the Southern States.

Anyone who says we are making conscientious approach to and an attack upon the real problems which disturb the hearts of America's people simply does not appreciate how relatively little we are doing.

It is now said, "Let us cut out this reform, let us get back to normalcy, let us yield to the plea of another Harding for normalcy" that was made to the American people after the stirring idealism of Woodrow Wilson. Very well, get ready, boys and girls, for another era of debauchery in the United States; if that is coming, get ready for business to be conducted under the rule of the jungle, get ready for the slimy way of corruption to wind its labyrinthine course to the front door of the sacred citadel of the people's White House, and put its vicious coils around the necks of Cabinet members of this Government. Get ready for normalcy to come back. Perhaps the signs indicate that it is on the way. Then let them stand up and parade their virtue who have claimed to realize success, and as they stand upon the broken bodies and the still forms of America's men and women and children, let them unsheath their gilded swords and say, "Thank God, we are back again to the good old fundamental principles of Americanism."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if room can be found for me at the wailing wall among the Senators who have bemoaned the loss of amendments which carried huge sums of money for various purposes, I should like to express my deep regret that the Senate conferees were unable to save the modest amendment I sponsored providing funds to enable the Public Health Service to function in conjunction with the W. P. A. program. On night before last I undertook to convince the Senate of the importance of this item in conserving the health of the Nation. The Senate adopted the amendment so I shall not repeat my statement under these inauspicious conditions.

Generally speaking, the Senate conferees have done an excellent job. It is not my purpose to complain of their action in surrendering my amendment. Out of my own experience I know that no conference can ever succeed unless both sides show a spirit of compromise. It was my misfortune that the spirit of compromise overwhelmed our conferees when my amendment was reached at the conference table.

I did not rise to deliver a sermon at the funeral of my amendment. It is so important and necessary that I wish to serve notice on the Senate that I consider it stricken down but not dead, and that I shall offer to revive it again when the next deficiency bill comes along. I hope that in the meantime Senators will understand its great importance. If it is understood I have no doubts as to its enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6791. An act making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 326. Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940; and

H. J. Res. 345. Joint resolution providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939 for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior.

EXCHANGE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES FOR STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS PRODUCED ABROAD

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont were present I would present a matter at this time. He suggested to me that I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2697. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, is the Senator from Vermont interested in it?

Mr. BYRNES. He is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2697, the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2697) to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that the legislation which proposes to implement the treaty which we ratified yesterday?

Mr. BYRNES. It is. The treaty was reported unanimously by the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection to it, but I wish the Senator would agree to the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, for there are some Senators absent who are interested in the matter.

Mr. BYRNES. If time is to be consumed in the consideration of the measure I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not think there will be much time consumed. I am not trying to cause delay. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont present.

Does the Senator from Vermont say he is satisfied with the suggestion the Senator from South Carolina makes?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Vermont is entirely satisfied because I have an amendment suggested by him and he was really desirous of having it considered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, just a moment. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRNES. I withdraw my request for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws his request. Does the Senator from California withdraw his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator from South Carolina withdraws his request for consideration of the bill I withdraw my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRNES. The request for the present consideration of the bill has been withdrawn and the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is withdrawn.

STABILIZATION FUND AND ALTERATION OF WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR— CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WAGNER. I submit a conference report and I propose to move for the consideration and adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Legislative Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. The second sentence added to paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the Act approved May 12, 1933, by section 12 of said Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, is further amended to read as follows: 'The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire June 30, 1941, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended.'

"Sec. 4. (a) Each United States coinage mint shall receive for coinage into standard silver dollars any silver which such mint, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is satisfied has been mined subsequently to July 1, 1939, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

"(b) The Director of such mint with the consent of the owner shall deduct and retain of such silver so received 45 per centum as seigniorage for services performed by the Government of the United States relative to the coinage and delivery of silver dollars. The balance of such silver so received, that is 55 per centum, shall be coined into standard silver dollars and the same or any equal number of other standard silver dollars shall be delivered to the owner or depositor of such silver, and no provisions of law taxing transfers of silver shall extend or apply to any delivery of silver to a United States mint under this section. The 45 per centum of such silver so deducted shall be retained as bullion by the Treasury or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this section. Such regulations shall contain provisions substantially similar to the provisions contained in the regulations issued pursuant to the Act of Congress approved April 23, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 535), known as the Pittman Act, with such changes as he shall determine prescribing how silver tendered to such mints shall be identified as having been produced from natural deposits in the United States or any places subject to its jurisdiction subsequent to July 1, 1939."

And the Senate agree to the same.

ROBERT F. WAGNER,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JAMES F. BYRNES,

ANDREW L. SOMERS,
W. H. LARRABEE,
JOHN J. COCHRAN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, now I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. I was going to make the same suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. Mr. President, the conferees upon this bill met yesterday afternoon and again last night. Of course, the conferees recognized that the powers with which we were dealing would expire as they exist in the law today at midnight tonight, and undoubtedly in attempting to reach a decision and report by the end of the day, were influenced largely by that consideration of time. In other words, we regarded time as of the essence. It was also essential if we were to consider this report in this body and in the House today, that an agreement, if possible, be reached last night before the adjournment of the House of Representatives. The conferees met and discussed the respective differences between the House and the Senate, both in the afternoon and again in the evening. Of course, I can speak only for myself, but I did my very best to carry out the mandate of the Senate, having in mind, of course, the consideration of time. The other conferees are well able to speak for themselves.

So far as the deprivation of the power to devalue the gold content of the dollar was concerned—that is the amendment of the Senate to the House bill eliminating the provision continuing that power—the conferees on the part of the House were definitely and unalterably opposed to the Senate amendment, and would never recede, and so stated in the conference.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I ask the Senator from New York whether or not any suggestion was made on the part of the Senate conferees that a yea-and-nay vote be had in the House upon the power to devalue the dollar.

Mr. WAGNER. Such a suggestion was made.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Did the House conferees refuse that suggestion?

Mr. WAGNER. They rejected the proposal.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, Mr. President, if the House conferees arbitrarily rejected a proposal to have yea and nay, and then took an adamant and arbitrary position, they were obviously quite unjustified. Does not the Senator from New York agree with that statement?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not like to characterize the attitude of any member of any conference; I assume that we all go into a conference with the desire conscientiously to carry out the mandate of the body which sends us there. As to whether or not the House conferees were unreasonable, that is a matter which each Senator and Member of the House must decide for himself. I can only tell the Senator what actually took place.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I quite agree with the Senator from New York; and it is far from my purpose to undertake to impugn the motives of the House conferees, but they had no mandate from the House of Representatives on the devaluation clause. The only point I mean to suggest at this point is that when the House conferees insisted upon the devaluation clause they did so without a specific mandate from the House of Representatives; and in refusing the request of the Senate conferees, which the Senator from New York says was made—and, of course, I know it was—I say the House conferees took a very arbitrary position.

Mr. WAGNER. The conferees on the part of the House felt that they had a mandate upon that question, which was decided by a vote of the House.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Did it occur to the Senate conferees that if they had simply said, "We will not continue the power to devalue the dollar, but we will go on with the stabilization fund," there would have been nothing for the House conferees to do but to accept it? In other words, the Senate conferees refused to take positive action. Does it occur to the Senate conferees that if they had simply stood pat, there was nothing the House could have done but to accept the view of the Senate as to the devaluation of the dollar?

Mr. WAGNER. Having in mind that an agreement had to be reached considering the expiration of the powers which were involved, it was finally decided by the majority of the conferees on the part of the Senate that rather than have no report and postpone, perhaps for a numbers of days, any consideration of this legislation, and have the legislation reintroduced and reconsidered, they should recede. I finally decided I would recede and two other Members of the Senate conferees decided likewise.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to point out that it seems to me the Senate was in a peculiarly strong strategic position by reason of the fact that the House was asking us to do two things. We could say, "No; we will do one of them." What could the House do except to say, "All right; we will take that?"

Mr. WAGNER. Take the relief measure, which we were just discussing. I am confident the conferees on behalf of the Senate struggled to the very end to keep many of the items which were included in the relief joint resolution by the Senate; and yet I am sure that the question of time must have influenced the conferees on the part of the Senate and they finally felt it their conscientious duty to recede. Speaking for myself that was the attitude which I took in the matter, and two of the other Senate conferees also took a similar attitude.

The House receded on the provision of the bill relating to domestically mined silver. The Senate placed a price of 77 cents per ounce on domestically mined silver, or a ratio of 60 and 40, the 40 for seigniorage. The House receded on that amendment placed in the bill by the Senate, with an amendment which had the effect of reducing the minimum to be paid for domestically mined silver from 77 cents to 70.95, which is almost 71 cents. So, in that regard the House receded from its position and, with an amendment, accepted the Senate amendment.

The Senate conferees receded from the amendment made by the Senate, which repealed the act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase foreign silver. On that question, too, the conferees on the part of the House were absolutely adamant, and said there was nothing that could persuade them to change their attitude. So the conferees on the part of the Senate felt that rather than have the entire legislation lapse, they should recede. There were three votes among the Senate conferees for receding upon that point.

As I have explained, those are the provisions which are contained in the conference report which is now under consideration. I take it, Mr. President, that automatically the question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ADAMS. I think not.

Mr. HOLT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Andrews	George	Logan	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard
Austin	Gibson	McCarran	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gillette	McKellar	Slattery

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the bill which is the subject matter of this conference report is a bill coming from the Committee on Banking and Currency; a bill which was there the subject of extensive hearings and considerable discussion. It came on the floor of the Senate, and was there amended in three particulars.

An amendment offered by myself was adopted by a substantial vote to terminate the powers of the President to devalue the American dollar. That vote was upon a roll call.

Another amendment was adopted to require the mints of the United States to accept silver produced in the United States upon a seigniorage charge of 40 percent; in other words, to establish practically a purchase price of 77 cents for American-produced silver.

These two amendments primarily were combined in one; but upon the motion or request of one of the Senators who was in opposition to the amendment a separation was ordered, and separate votes were had upon the two questions, and the amendments were adopted by substantial majorities.

A third amendment providing for the cessation of the purchase of foreign silver was adopted without a roll call.

Following that, the bill went to the House.

The House, in a normal, formal way, in one motion, disagreed with the Senate amendments, and asked for a conference.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. The House had first passed the bill; had it not?

Mr. ADAMS. It was a House bill.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senate was sending the House bill back, having passed it with three amendments, two of them upon roll-call votes. Then the Senate acceded to the request for a conference, and appointed conferees. The conferees were under definite, positive instructions, if any conferees in the history of this body ever were, to stand by the three amendments, and particularly the two amendments upon which the Senate had voted by roll call.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, in conferences, I had been repeatedly met by House Members of the conference committee saying, "We cannot yield upon this matter because there was a roll-call vote upon it in the House." That has always been, from the standpoint of House Members, an answer to any request from a Senate conferee to recede. But we went into a conference, and we asked the House Members to take the bill back and submit these questions to individual votes, as we had done. They would not do so. No one knows what the vote might have been in the House on separate motions to send these items to conference rather than on a composite motion upon three questions. Here we voted separately, and at the insistence of those opposed to the amendments. So I went to the conference instructed, as usual; and I had had some specific instructions on the floor of the Senate 2 nights ago. I had heard discussed the obligations of a conferee.

We met at half past 2 yesterday afternoon. The matter was discussed until 4 o'clock, when three members of the conference committee were compelled to go to the conference on the relief joint resolution. Then it was understood that the conference on the bill to which I am referring was recessed until 10 o'clock the next morning. Our very able, very fine chairman said, as we left the conference at 4 o'clock, "Well, we have not accomplished a thing." There had been discussion. It is not strange to Members of the Senate that I was responsible for a good deal of the discussion. I was presenting the views which I held as to the merits of these questions. The chairman of the House conferees was largely conducting a responding discussion on the other side.

We recessed at that time. Then we were called back at approximately 7 o'clock. I think there was a perfectly sound reason for recalling us, because I think the chairman had been advised that in order to bring the conference report up in the House today it would be necessary to have it filed by midnight, and if we had recessed over until this morning it would have taken a two-thirds vote at least to bring it up; and I think he exercised the proper legislative precaution in calling the conferees back. But when we came back, instead of being in the situation in which we left, when nothing had been done, we were advised that an agreement had been reached.

In other words, the articles of capitulation and surrender had already been agreed upon.

I am not complaining of that. I have not the slightest objection to discussions outside of the conference room. I am merely picturing the situation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I wonder if, in the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, the paragraph I am about to read from the New York Times of this morning aptly describes the situation to which the Senator from Colorado has just referred, upon the reconvening of the conference committee.

The New York Times of this morning says—I am reading from page 8—

There was little question from the first naming of the conference committee that it would report an agreement acceptable to the President, inasmuch as it was weighted with administration followers.

I ask the Senator from Colorado if that is not the situation which he and his colleagues had to face.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have no criticism to make of individual Members, other than as the facts inevitably suggest. I suggest none. It so happens that a majority of the conference committee voted against these amendments on the floor. They had a perfect right to do so. They had a perfect right, when they were appointed on the conference committee, to serve. So far as the little afternoon session was concerned, I accept the blame for myself occupying the time. The majority conferees kept their powder dry.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not usually the custom in the Senate to appoint members of conference committees according to seniority on the Senate committee?

Mr. ADAMS. It is. The conferees were appointed in accordance with the custom.

Mr. MINTON. And the senior members of the Banking and Currency Committee were appointed on the conference committee in accordance with that custom?

Mr. ADAMS. They were.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado does not rank me. I was not appointed on the conference committee. The rule was relaxed in order to put the Senator from Colorado on the committee.

Mr. MINTON. That is true.

Mr. ADAMS. I will make that plain also. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was first in rank in seniority on the Senate committee. The Senator from Virginia was not well, and he asked that I be substituted for him on the conference committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In order to accommodate the Senator from Colorado and let him go on the conference committee it was necessary to skip some other Senators who had a right to go on the committee if the Senator from Virginia did not want to go on it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I well recall more than one occasion when the Chair has refused to put on a conference committee Members of the Senate who had voted contrary to the Senate's judgment; and I think every other Senator recalls it.

Mr. ADAMS. With all due respect to the Senator from Alabama, I do not think it is an outrageous thing to put on the conference committee one man who was in favor of and voted for the three amendments which were the issues in the case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make no complaint. I was glad the Senator from Colorado was put on the conference committee. I simply wanted to emphasize the fact that certainly no partiality was shown in the selection of the conferees. I had no desire to serve, and I thought the Senator from Colorado ought to be on the committee; but certainly neither he nor any of his associates, either on the Republican side or on this side, has any just complaint about the appointment of the conferees.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has not heard any complaint from me, has he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Someone rose and complained.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has not heard any complaint from me, has he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. The Senator from Colorado could not complain when he got his selection. Somebody brought the question up, however. The Senator from Kansas brought it up. Republicans associated with the Senator in his program made the complaint.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment. I was on the Committee on Banking and Currency. The battle that was conducted on that committee was conducted largely by myself. If the Senator had been there more of the time he would have known that. The Committee on Banking and Currency divided 10 to 10 on the devaluation question, and I was not associated with anyone other than I am associated on every question which comes up on the floor. The more Senators who associate with me with their votes the happier I am, be they Democrats or be they Republicans, and never would I be happier than to have the Senator from Alabama with me, and the Senator was with me in part on this question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true; I was with the Senator when he was right. When he went over to the Republican side, then I left him. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to say that the Senator from Colorado upon the floor, in voting on the respective amendments which were brought up, took exactly the same attitude he took in the committee when we were considering the legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the Senator. I am one of the very few Senators, perhaps, who had a conviction which tacked on all three of these amendments. If Senators will look at the roll calls they will see that there was a shift back and forth on the different amendments, like the Senator from Alabama voting for one and being against another, and there were shifts of 12 votes on one and 10 on the others. So that it was not any hard-and-fast army. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that, while of course, I have always had a predilection for Democrats, I have also gotten on very well with Republicans. I have never had any fault to find with them. I have found them to be good citizens, good neighbors, good friends, good clients. The only criticism I have ever made of Republicans is that I have not thought they did very well as officeholders. [Laughter.] Everyone has some weakness, and I have rather felt that that happened to be a Republican weakness, that they did not do so well holding office.

Mr. President, this was a practical situation. I am not uttering any complaint about my fellow conferees. I am willing to accept at full weight the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that they did their utmost to maintain the position of the Senate, except that, having seen them in action at other times, knowing of their vigor and their virility, I would say that in this instance their efforts were greatly weakened. I know these gentlemen; I know how they fight sometimes. But they held back, I am satisfied, because, as I have said, I was making the presentation that was made, and I would be happy to think that I was speaking for them.

When we came back and the conference was called, we then were told that an agreement had been reached. I was not present during the negotiations which led to the reaching of the agreement. I do not claim it was essential that I should have been there. At that time it was submitted to the full conference, and I declined to sign the conference report. I felt that it did not represent the wish of the Senate as expressed by its votes; that we had no right, under the conditions, to surrender to the House when the Senate had given no specific mandate by vote.

I recognized the necessity of agreement by midnight, perhaps, of last night, in order to get the bill in, but it did not follow, because the conference report had to be agreed to, that there had to be a surrender to the House. It was a surrender much like that at Appomattox—we were allowed our side-arms. On two amendments the surrender was absolute, and on the third, the silver amendment, we were permitted to have a partial portion of the amendment.

The House conferees, we are told, were adamant. They would not take the matter back to the House, but they were ready to say that the House was willing that the mint should buy silver on a basis of 45 to 55, but they would not even take it back to see if the House would accept the 40-60 basis, that is, they were not adamant against the purchase of domestic silver.

Why did they take that position? There were the two main issues: The devaluation of the gold dollar and the purchase of domestic silver, and the collateral issue of the purchase of foreign silver.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and I, conferees, did not sign the report. It does not represent our views. The Senator and I disagreed on the silver amendment on the floor of the Senate, but I do not believe that the conferees representing the Senate should walk into a conference and permit the representatives of the House to refuse to take a proposal back to the House for instructions, and for the Senate conferees to defy the instructions which they received from the Senate. There is an issue here of the obligation of conferees, and the right of conferees appointed by the Senate, to defy the votes of the Senate solely because of a general vote in the House appointing conferees, and disagreeing to the Senate amendments generally.

Mr. President, I feel, under those conditions, that the Senate should refuse to approve the conference report, should send it back, and that it should be required to go to the House. Let those in the House who are in favor of or who oppose the individual items have a chance to express themselves, and then we will meet on equal ground.

As I have said, my difference is with the policy of the conferees, with their theory of the obligation of a conferee, and I do not think any pressure of time should be greater upon the conferees of the Senate than upon those of the House. If the pressure was there, it should have been upon the House conferees, who were without specific instructions.

Mr. President, that, in substance, represents the view I have. I feel that the majority conferees capitulated, practically without firing a shot, upon a matter of very great import. The question involved, of the power to devalue, is one of great importance. The question of the purchase of foreign silver is a serious one. The question of the purchase of domestic silver is vital to the Western States.

I cannot accede to a suggestion that I should surrender my convictions upon one issue in order that my State might receive some partial reward because I abandoned principles which I think are important to my country.

I say to those who come from the silver-producing States, who are interested in the purchase of silver, the adoption of this conference report is not essential to securing ultimately the purchase of domestic silver at a proper price. I say that if the House is favorable to the purchase of silver on a basis of 45 to 55, there is no reason why we should not at least submit the question to them of agreeing to the Senate figures of 40 to 60. To those from the silver States I say—and this is practical—we do not have the strength, the voting power, to put across that issue for ourselves. We did have the assistance of other men, men not interested in silver, men interested in a great public question, willing to consolidate forces, not formally, but informally. We were allied, as it were, the newspapers charged. Personally, having been sincerely and genuinely for every amendment, I did not have to make any arrangement with any one as to my vote, but those of us interested in either of the questions, devaluation or silver, may well remember that there are things of greater value than the mere temporary accomplishment, and loyalty and faithfulness rank above all.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to make but a short statement with reference to the action of the conferees. The question of the appointment of conferees is one which has been the subject of debate in the Senate on many occasions. The Senate has followed the seniority rule. Sometimes it works well, and sometimes it does not.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean that it has uniformly followed that rule, does he?

Mr. BYRNES. I said sometimes it works well.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator stated that the Senate had followed the seniority rule. Does the Senator mean to say that it has uniformly followed that rule?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I said it has usually followed the seniority rule. I think that is a correct statement. It has not always done so.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I wanted to call to the Senator's attention.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree, it has not; and I think that the Senate might well consider the question. I have always thought it might well consider the question of appointing as conferees upon a bill, especially a bill of the character of the one we are discussing, a majority of Senators who are in favor of the bill. In the appointment of conferees upon appropriation bills, where there are many items, it is exceedingly difficult to make any distinction, and the rule of seniority may be the wise one, but I have always thought that where a legislative bill was concerned, another rule should prevail, the rule of majority opinion.

I did not participate in the debate on the particular bill now under discussion. When I learned that I was appointed as one of the conferees, I expressed the desire to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that I be relieved of the assignment; but I was not relieved.

As to what occurred yesterday in reaching the agreement I desire to say only a word or two. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and myself are members of the Appropriations Committee. We were conferees upon the relief appropriation bill. We were conferees on this bill. We stayed in conference, as I recall, until 6:10 on the appropriation bill, at which time we recessed for an hour. Earlier in the afternoon the conferees on the stabilization bill had met and there occurred just what the Senator from Colorado has described. The Senator from Colorado conducted most of the argument—in fact, practically all of the argument—in favor of the Senate's position. It was his amendment. He was more familiar with the subject, in my opinion, than was anyone else there in the conference, certainly on the Senate side.

When the conferees on the appropriation measure recessed from 6:10 until 7 o'clock, without any arrangement or any engagement, by chance, I met the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is absent from the Chamber at this moment, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. They were in the Senate Chamber when I came up from the recess of the appropriation conference. We discussed this measure. The situation that confronted the conference, which has been accurately described by the Senator from Colorado, meant that unless there was a report filed last evening it could not be considered in the other House today except by a two-thirds vote.

We discussed our position and the opportunities of bringing about an agreement between the differences of the two Houses. That, as I understand, is the object of a conference. There has never been a time in all my experience—so long back that I do not want to recall it—when conferees under similar circumstances, when they have about an hour to discuss matters, would not consider every possible way of reaching a compromise between the two Houses and bringing about an adjustment.

The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York and myself, after discussing the matter, came to the conclusion that we would take the action that the conferees finally took. Before we did anything about it I told the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York that I was going to look for the Senator from Colorado. I went first to the committee room, then came up here, and then went to the Senate restaurant. I was told that he had left, and I went around the building spending about 10 minutes searching for my good friend the Senator from Colorado, and when I found him in the Committee on Appropriations I went to the room of the chairman in order that I might make to him a statement of the views of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York and myself as to what we should do when we came again to discuss this matter.

While I was engaged in discussing the matter with the Senator from Colorado the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York came to the Appropriations Committee room. I had advised the Senator from Colorado what the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York had stated to me. I wanted him to have a full statement in order that he might determine his course. He said to me that his view was just as he has now stated it to be on the floor, and he said that he could not agree to that proposal. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Colorado and myself discussed it then for some 10 or 15 minutes. Not being chairman of the conference, I may say that I do not know whether the Senator from New York had invited the House conferees or whether they had come and talked to him and the Senator from Kentucky before they conferred with me, but between 10:45 and 11 o'clock the House conferees were down in the Appropriations Committee room. And they went into a conference and stated just what has been stated by the Senator from Colorado.

My only purpose in making the statement is to say that I would not want the Senator from Colorado to be under the impression when he said that the agreement had been arrived at that any determination had been made by me until I went there and told him that I wanted him to know what was suggested by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York. He stated that he would not sign the conference report. I thought from his viewpoint he was right. The Senator from Colorado will say that my statement is correct, I believe.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement of the Senator from South Carolina is absolutely correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in all my 10 years in the Senate I have never known of a single instance when the will of the Senate was so completely ignored and cast overboard by a conference committee as was the case yesterday with reference to the monetary bill, House bill 3325, under consideration here today. This is a bill to extend certain monetary powers conferred by Congress on the executive branch of the Government during the time of national and international financial uncertainty which followed this country's abandonment of the gold standard in 1933. Of the 48 States of the Union represented in this body, the clear majority voted last Monday to do three things by way of amendment of the monetary bill. According to the Senate vote on Monday, this body favors:

(A) Discontinuance of the President's power to change our standard of value at will by varying the gold content of the dollar.

(B) Payment of seventy-seven and a fraction cents an ounce for domestic-mined silver for a 2-year period.

(C) Cession of the purchase of foreign silver.

The conference committee, however, yesterday decided that this body had made three big mistakes on Monday. The majority of that committee of 5 Senators and 5 Representatives decided that the 51 Senators who went on record as favoring discontinuance of the President's power over the gold dollar were wrong and the 35 Senators who voted to continue vesting that far-reaching power in the President were right! So the majority of the members of the committee of 10 recommended that the Senate now reverse itself.

The same conference committee has now passed down its judgment that 77 cents an ounce for domestic silver would not be the proper price to pay, that exactly 70 cents an ounce would be a very nice price, indeed, would be exactly suited to the country's needs, and that the 55 Senators who voted for 77 cents were much less sagacious than the 34 Senators who voted against 77 cents for domestic silver.

Therefore the conferees in their combined wisdom overruled the decision of those 55 Senators and last night voted to sustain the other 34 Senators. Thirdly, there is the question of buying foreign silver. So general is the disgust with the wasteful exportation and expenditure of American wealth on foreign silver that no tally of votes was necessary. By an overwhelming voice vote the Senate Monday recorded its opinion in favor of stopping the purchase of foreign silver. But the majority of the committee of 10 now tell us that the Senate is sadly mistaken, that this body should not pay any attention to its own convictions, that it should disregard all the facts in the case, all the expert testimony presented in the Senate hearings on the subject, that it should go along with a policy for which there is absolutely no rational defense.

Here is an account of the Senate vote on repealing the purchase of foreign silver as it appeared in the Baltimore Sun of June 27, 1939:

The Townsend amendment was declared adopted after a strong chorus of ayes and a weak response of noes.

The Washington Times Herald of June 27 reported that the Senate repealed those provisions of the Silver Purchase Act relating to foreign silver purchases. Here is what the Times Herald reporter wrote:

The ayes rang out loud and clear despite Majority Leader BARKLEY's pleas that the repeal would adversely affect our trade with foreign countries.

And this is how the New York Times correspondent, in the issue of June 27, reported the Senate's attitude on foreign silver:

As a final stroke in upsetting administration policy, the Senate voted by an overwhelming chorus of ayes to stop on July 1 the Treasury's purchases of foreign silver.

The Washington Post, of June 27, reported:

The amendment of Senator TOWNSEND (Republican), of Delaware, forbidding further purchase of foreign silver was adopted by the Senate without even the formality of a roll call, although it was vigorously opposed by Majority Leader BARKLEY.

The New York News said of the Senate's vote on foreign silver:

The ayes rang out loud and clear.

My able colleague from Colorado, Senator ADAMS, is discussing the question of the power to devalue the dollar, so I will limit my remarks on that subject. With the Senate's indulgence, I would like to read a statement on this subject issued earlier this year by a group of 55 economists and professors, which group included members of the faculties of such universities as Columbia University, Princeton University, Stanford University, Harvard, New York University, the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Wisconsin, Northwestern University, Swarthmore College, Yale University, the University of Chicago, and many others.

Concerning the devaluation power of the President, this group united in stating the following:

The Gold Reserve Act of January 30, 1934, gave the President the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar by not less than 40 percent and not more than 50 percent, and, thereafter, at his discretion, to change the weight of the dollar within the specified limits. This provision was to be in effect for 2 years, with the possibility of its extension for an additional year by proclamation by the President should he think such extension desirable.

The President extended this provision for the additional year, as authorized in the Gold Reserve Act. Shortly before that year elapsed, Congress, at the request of the administration, further extended the provision to June 30, 1939. On January 19, 1939, the President again requested the extension, until January 15, 1941, of his present power to devalue the dollar.

There are no adequate reasons for further extension of the President's power to change the gold content of the dollar. Since the devaluation of the dollar in January 1934 was close to the minimum specified in the Gold Reserve Act, any further alteration in the weight of the dollar would necessarily be in a downward direction. Further devaluation would be opposed to the best interests of the country and should not be permitted. Continuance of the President's authority to devalue the dollar still further implies that there are sound reasons for a better or stronger currency pursuing a weaker one in its downward course, whereas no such sound reasons exist.

In reply to the frequently heard argument that depreciating foreign currencies might suggest the desirability of continuing the power of the President to lower the gold content of the dollar, we wish to call attention to the fact that during the period from 1919 to 1923, when the pound was unstable, when the French and Belgian francs and the Italian lira were falling rapidly in value, and when the German mark was plunging toward a trillionth of its former value, the dollar remained firmly anchored to gold at an unchanged weight. This firmness of the dollar was both a source of great strength to this country and a stabilizing factor in the world economy. If any adequate reason for devaluing the dollar should arise in the near future, a situation which is difficult to envision, considering our huge supply of gold, it should be done by act of Congress, as provided by the Constitution, and not by an administrative order of the President.

The Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy has repeatedly taken a stand against any further devaluation of the dollar. The undersigned members of the committee, in reaffirming their conviction that further devaluation is opposed to the best interests of the country, hereby recommend to the Congress that it rescind immediately its delegation to the President of its constitutional power to change the gold content of the dollar.

With regard to the buying of foreign silver, the Senate vote on this question was the only rational position to take. I have been studying the facts concerning the foreign silver program, and I am solidly convinced that there is no argument in defense of foreign buying which would have a shred of substance if examined unemotionally.

Consider how that program originated. There was strong inflation sentiment based on the theory that there was a shortage of gold. That was in 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933. Many persons were convinced by that argument. There were those in Europe, Mexico, China, and elsewhere who had silver to sell and thought it would be a fine idea if the United States Treasury would buy it. They therefore called out all the fallacious arguments that could be found in the history of monetary controversies in past centuries and thus increased the number of those who were willing to enact a law compelling the Treasury to buy foreign silver. Both these groups combined to enlist the interest and support of American producers of wheat, cotton, tobacco, and other export crops, and of manufacturers of goods we exported. Then the sentiment for foreign silver purchases increased; and by 1934 a silver-purchase law was enacted, even though we had by then been given a revalued gold dollar, even though an inflow of capital from abroad had set in, and even though greatly increased gold stock measured in revalued dollars, and there was no faintest excuse for saying that the country faced a shortage of monetary reserves. In other words, the silver movement had achieved so much momentum by 1934 that a law calling for purchase of foreign silver was enacted.

Let us pause here a moment to recall how foreigners agitated here for the enactment of a law so injurious, as I shall show the Senate, to American interests. I cite just a few instances of this foreign propaganda.

Sir Henri Deterding, who, of course, was not an American, sought time and again to get us to buy foreign silver. He gave out press interviews on the subject. He wrote letters which were later published in Senate hearings, urging us to have our Government buy foreign silver. He wrote various signed articles on the subject, but in none of them did he point out that he would be a large potential beneficiary if we followed his advice. What eventually happened was that this country did follow Sir Henri Deterding's advice; and then the Treasury, under the law, bought from his concern a large amount of silver which it had exported from China, thereby intensifying that country's already serious monetary crisis caused by this Nation's silver policy.

Let me read just an excerpt from an article in the Chicago Daily Tribune of October 27, 1936, on this matter. I quote:

But the huge profits were made by foreign speculators. The Gaekwar of Baroda, an Indian potentate who receives a 21-gun salute throughout the British Empire, is said by one of the best-known authorities in America to have made $25,000,000 directly as a result of the New Deal silver- and gold-buying activities.

Sir Henri Deterding, head of the Royal Dutch company and one of the world's foremost industrialists, is shown by his voluminous correspondence with René Léon to have been in intimate touch with American monetary plans and to have profited accordingly. Newspaper accounts of Sir Henri's sailing from America on August 26, 1934, after he had been a guest at the White House, said that the Royal Dutch company's holdings had made up the bulk of silver shipments from China aggregating 60,000,000 ounces. Other newspaper accounts estimated the Royal Dutch holdings at 80,000,000 ounces.

Sir Henri, an ardent silverite, revealed in one of his letters to Léon that he was a shrewd trader and entertained a great contempt for the methods of his competitors.

On September 17, 1934, Léon had cabled: "Suggest you see Guaranty Trust, London, who, acting for Treasury, would consider your firm offer." Sir Henri's letter dated at St. Helen's, the 18th, said:

"DEAR MR. LÉON: * * * Thanks very much for your kind service re Guaranty Trust and silver. I should like to tell you the whole story of this transaction.

"About 3 months ago there was a great chance that China would demonetize that currency, so I bought forward sterling against local currency in Shanghai and covered myself by buying silver for same delivery here; in this way I secured that by the time my outstandings in Shanghai currency became due. I got the same dollar value as at the time I bought the sterling.

"Now, naturally, I have to turn that silver into sterling again to be 100 percent right. Incidentally I wanted to be sure of my silver price rather than put my silver into the four broker 'blind' pool in London. I think the Guaranty Trust took the silver at today's price, so I have done the brokers not only out of their commission but also made a silver transaction possible outside the pool, and if this silver is shipped to the States we shall have the pleasure of seeing some people look extremely foolish."

The Chinese, who had the largest stock of silver in the world a few years ago, also worked to get us to adopt a policy of supporting foreign silver. Chinese representatives at the International Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington in 1931 strongly urged us to buy foreign silver. They threatened to go on the gold standard if we did not buy silver. Well, we bought their silver. We gave them dollars and gold for it. We bought Chinese silver in such large amounts and so rapidly in 1934 and 1935 that for a time we hurt China because it did not give China time to readjust its currency system internally. But in the end we have conferred a vast gift upon China through our silver purchases, entirely without quid pro quo. We acceded to the propaganda of the Chinese, and all we have to show for it is a lot of silver in a hole at West Point.

The Mexicans also helped create the American policy of buying foreign silver. Mexico for years has been the world's largest producer of silver. Mexico had much to gain. It pressed for action on silver at various international conferences, at Montevideo, at London.

In 1933 the Mexican Government distributed to Americans a liberal quantity of a 300-page pro-silver book which had been written by a Mexican and translated into English. The book is called The Crisis in the Gold Standard, by Jose Luis Requeña. The volume is known to contain the silver views of the Mexican Government in 1933.

Another example was the pamphlet containing an English translation of the silver-purchase arguments of General Calles, distributed here by the Mexican Embassy.

In 1933 this country and Mexico were parties to an agreement on silver. Under this agreement Uncle Sam undertook to buy 24,000,000 ounces of silver each year for 4 years, while Mexico, the chief beneficiary of that agreement, undertook to buy only 7,159,000 ounces a year.

And what was the aftermath of that 4-year silver-purchase agreement? The aftermath was that in 1938, after the agreement had expired, the Government of Mexico got together all the silver it had bought under the commitment, added a few more million ounces, and sold 35,000,000 ounces of silver to the United States Treasury at 20 percent more than the Mexicans themselves were carrying the metal on their books.

The purchase of all that Mexican silver on the occasion to which I refer was made at a most peculiar time in American relations with Mexico. It seems incredible that our policy with reference to that Mexican silver was formulated entirely without reference to American interests, yet that seems to be what happened. It also seems unbelievable, yet it is an indisputable fact, that the administration's deal with Mexico's Finance Minister with reference to the 35,000,000 ounces of silver Mexico sold us at the beginning of 1938 was concluded at the very time when Mexico was preparing a sharp increase in its import tariff affecting American goods, was preparing its abrogation of the Morrow-Calles oil pact, and was preparing other moves injurious to American interests.

Exactly on the day when the United States Treasury undertook to purchase the 35,000,000 ounces of Mexican silver, Mexico seized American properties with a reported value of $6,000,000. The Mexican tariff increases were announced by the Mexican Government on the very day that the American Government agreed to purchase the silver which Mexico had accumulated under the London silver agreement which Mexico had worked so hard to have signed.

Mr. President, Mexico's recent policy toward American interests has been widely discussed in this country. Some people think the Mexicans are very grateful to us for following their advice that we buy their silver; but such people are mistaken about the matter.

I am not one who thinks that throwing money out of the window, or throwing away wealth in any other form, is a way of gaining the respect and gratitude of others.

When the Treasury was buying silver so rapidly in 1935, and when foreign speculators were rushing for the metal so that they could later sell it to our Treasury, Mexico was disturbed. In 1936 the Treasury let the price of silver decline slightly, and this is the attitude the Mexicans then took. I quote from the Mexico City newspaper Excelsior:

[The American policy] is causing Mexico more damage than the seven Biblical plagues. * * * It is time for the North American Republic to show its true desire to collaborate in the prosperity and development of the nations of this continent.

A leading Mexico City daily called the United States silver policy "disastrous" to Mexico and evidence of a "bad neighbor" attitude.

We are urged to consider the purchase of foreign silver as an instrument of our good-neighbor policy. We are urged to buy silver from all sources to further the administration's Latin American policy. We are told we must keep on our statute books a law compelling us to buy Chinese silver from Japan, Ethiopian silver from Italy, or Spanish silver from Russia, in order to keep the Germans out of Mexico. "Take what Latin America has to sell, even if it is only worthless silver, and thereby keep Latin America's friendship," we are told.

In the first place, we must remember that the most important countries in Latin America from an economic and political standpoint produce no silver. In some parts of Latin America silver is not even used as subsidiary currency. What we may expect in the way of future gratitude for present lavishness with respect to foreign silver is amply illustrated by what we got when we loaned billions of dollars to foreign governments during and after the World War. The war debts are not being paid. We shall never recover what we sent out in the form of such loans. Does anyone think the continued existence of these debts results in gratitude and respect from the debtors? On the contrary, such wastefulness only makes for ultimate bad feeling.

Silver purchases are not a proper instrument of foreign policy. If it is necessary to Santa Claus other countries, we can give them money outright, or we can lend them money. Why keep this back-door device that the country does not understand? If the country would not approve of direct loans to foreign lands, it certainly would not approve of this reckless delegation of broad financial power.

If this dissipation of American goods is so necessary and so desirable, why not pay twice as much for foreign silver, and thus make twice as many jobs for American factory workers? Why not pay 10 times as much, and make 10 times as many jobs for Americans? Would not that be logical?

We do not need any foreign silver. The Treasury already holds 1,130,000,000 ounces of idle silver, absolutely unused, as well as billions more in the currency system.

The folly of buying Mexican, Japanese, Russian, German, or any other foreign silver is illustrated by the drop in the price of silver since Monday from 43 cents to 38 cents. There is practically no support to the market but ours. If silver is worth so little that the mere indication of cessation of United States Treasury buying is followed by a price collapse, of what value is foreign silver to us? If, instead of merely not buying, we actually tried to sell our silver, who would buy it at any price?

Buying foreign silver is merely a way of extending the W. P. A. to foreign mining camps, for which we Americans receive neither remuneration, gratitude, nor respect. Is not that the height of folly?

A good part of China's silver is now in Japanese hands. When we buy Mexican or other foreign silver all sellers of silver throughout the world get a higher price than they otherwise would receive. Buying Mexican silver aids Japan. Even if we could discriminate against Japanese silver, Japan would still benefit by our good-neighbor silver-purchase program, since Japan would obtain a higher price than otherwise.

Buying foreign silver which we cannot again sell is equivalent to a gift to foreigners. We send abroad our wheat to feed them, our cotton to clothe them, our automobiles to carry them around—and they give us a receipt "written" on silver! And this very silver, which the Treasury buys today at less than 38 cents an ounce, it "sells" or issues to the American people at $1.29 an ounce!

To give the administration authorization to buy silver here, there, and everywhere is making a gift to foreigners. It is like giving the administration a huge fund over and above its ordinary Budget without requiring it to render an accounting. Do we want to vest such a power in the executive branch of the Government? I, for one, do not.

If the Treasury bought foreign copper or nickel, at least the country could use those metals. We are about to exchange surplus cotton for rubber, which program at least seems to be based on a rational argument. But to exchange valuable export commodities of our Nation for a foreign metal of which we already hold tons in buried vaults simply because the ancient Greeks used to coin it is utterly indefensible.

Even if there were the "benefits" now claimed for the purchase of foreign silver—a new excuse, incidentally—it would still be highly important for us, in formulating our attitude toward it, to consider the disadvantages as well. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve System has testified to the serious problem which is created by the large banking reserve since 1933, one-fifth of which is accounted for by the issuance of silver certificates. To continue issuing silver certificates against further silver imports is more than unnecessary; it is very undesirable and risky from a monetary standpoint.

We are told that retention of the foreign-silver program is important; that it makes jobs for Americans because it gives foreigners purchasing power here, and so is valuable to our export interests. A good commentary on that argument is that the outstanding export organization of this country, the National Foreign Trade Council, opposes the purchase of foreign silver.

In 1934, the final declaration of the National Foreign Trade Council Convention held at New York, N. Y., October 31–November 2, stated:

One of the first steps toward recovery, therefore, is the return to a definite and known monetary system and the abandonment of further experiments. Facing facts as they now exist, specific measures should include:

No further introduction of silver into the monetary system.

In November 1935 the final declaration of the convention at Houston, Tex., stated:

One essential step toward world recovery—only to be attained following at least a partial reestablishment of sound industrial activity—is the return to a sound and proven monetary system and the abandonment of further monetary experiments. Specific measures should include:

Repeal of such laws as may require the further purchase of silver for monetary purposes.

And at Chicago, in November 1936, the final declaration of the council's convention stated:

This convention urges reconsideration of laws requiring the purchase of silver for monetary purposes.

LXXXIV—531

The purchase of foreign silver is of no help to the silver States. In fact, the cost of the program must be shared by the silver States.

Mr. President, to date there have been spent on foreign silver hundreds of millions of dollars. This is simply a process of transferring purchasing power from Americans to foreigners. It is an insidious process, none the less real because it is in some respects invisible. It is going on all the time. Every week and every day more foreign silver is coming here. Just because the American Government does not have to appropriate a Budget for the purchase of silver, because it is buying silver with silver certificates, it does not follow that the American people are paying nothing for the silver we are importing. We are paying very dearly for it. We are buying silver with wheat, with cotton, with machinery, and with Treasury bonds in which the silver sellers invest their easy profits. By doing these things, we as a Nation are paying for every ounce of silver we buy. That is an indisputable fact, and there is no way to get away from it.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to the conference report.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, Mr. President. I thank the Senator; but there are so many Members of the Senate who want to testify upon this critical subject between now and morning that I hesitate to waste the time that a quorum call would take.

Mr. President, this conference report does not bear more than an utterly remote relationship to the recorded will of the United States Senate upon this proposed legislation. It does not represent a composition of the issues between House and Senate. It represents a complete and abject surrender on the part of the Senate conferees. Furthermore, it represents government by Executive decree, reaching even into the prerogatives of the United States Senate itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. How did the Senator vote on the original gold-devaluation bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Against it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The original bill of 1933?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to note that the Senator is consistent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his unmediated compliment.

Without requiring specific votes in the House to determine the actual will of the House upon these critical issues in dispute, and without returning to the Senate for supplemental instructions, three out of five Senate conferees have yielded the Senate's position and nullified the Senate's attitude.

I am unable to believe that the whole Senate will supinely accept any such quick, humiliating and wholly indefensible desertion of its considered judgments.

I shall have something to say a little later about the attitudes and the assertions of the executive branch of the Government as it has flung one misrepresentation after another into the discussions of the last 2 days, striving—at any hazard—to keep for itself the monetary powers which the Constitution commits to the Congress, and whiplashing the Congress into a continuing rubber-stamp surrender of its own prerogatives.

At the moment I deal only with the legislative spectacle itself.

The Senate voted on conclusive roll call to terminate the Presidential powers to devalue the gold dollar and to reclaim in the Congress the constitutional authority to fix the value of our money. The House has never been faced with this specific issue as raised by the Senate's deliberate action. But three Senate conferees at the end of two comparatively brief sessions signed away the Senate's judgment, vetoed the Senate's verdict, and nullified the Senate's action.

Again, the Senate voted to terminate the purchase of foreign silver which we do not want, cannot use, and which has represented an alien drain upon us of some $13,000,000 a month. Only one voice was raised in the Senate in defense of this foreign bonanza. The opinion of the Senate was so overwhelmingly obvious that no one bothered to even ask for a roll call. The viva voce vote was an irresistible mandate. The House has never been faced with this specific issue as raised by the Senate's deliberate action. But three Senate conferees at the end of two comparatively brief sessions signed away the Senate's judgment, vetoed the Senate's verdict, and nullified the Senate's action.

Again, the Senate voted on conclusive roll call to terminate the Presidential powers to fix the price of domestic silver and to restore this constitutional function to the Congress and to fix the price at 77 cents plus per ounce. It is beside the point at the moment whether that price was or was not intrinsically too high. The point is that the Senate spoke. The House has never faced this specific issue as raised by the Senate's deliberate action. But three Senate conferees at the end of two comparatively brief sessions signed away 50 percent of the Senate's judgment—and the other 50 percent represents the sum total of their pathetically inadequate achievement as the Senate's ambassadors.

There were three major issues in conference. On two, this majority of the Senate's conferees gave up the Senate's position with complete and effective abandonment. On one—by far the least nationally consequential of the three—they bring us back an inconsequential halfway Pyrrhic victory. It amounts to nothing as respects a decent consideration for the Senate's place as a component part of the legislative branch of the Republic. It amounts to nothing as respects the fruits of a fiduciary mission. It amounts to nothing as respects the bipartisan judgment of the Senate upon vitally and fundamentally important issues.

I submit, Mr. President, that the Senate cannot accede to any such contempt. Not even the pressure of a legislative dead line at midnight tonight can justify any such one-way verdict which is all "give" and no "take." If this pressure calls for extraordinary toleration and malleability in conference, it calls no less to the House than to the Senate.

We had considerable discussion Wednesday evening about the responsibilities of a Senate conferee and the extent of his obligation to the Senate to sustain the Senate's position with all reasonable diligence and tenacity. It was directed chiefly to the able and distinguished senior Senator from Colorado in connection with one favorite item in the relief bill. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado was also one of the conferees upon this bill. He is one of the dissenters from this majority report. With all appropriate respect for this majority, I can only say that if the diligence and the tenacity of the Senator from Colorado had been a little more contagious in this conference upon this bill, the Senate would not now confront the results of a battle which, from a Senate standpoint, is chiefly reminiscent of Waterloo.

I do not yet deal with the merits of the matters at issue. So far as this immediate consideration is concerned, the primary question at the moment is whether the Senate can be satisfied that sufficient conference effort has been made to sustain its views. It makes no difference whether I happen to think that the statutory price proposed for domestic silver is right or wrong. It makes no difference whether the three majority Senate conferees happen still to think that they were right when they voted against the Senate's verdict upon all three moot issues in the first instance. I can understand how this would perhaps dampen the enthusiasm with which they would set out to do battle for a cause in which they did not believe. But they are all honorable men and they will understand that I am not questioning the integrity of their attitudes as conferees. I question solely whether their effort has been adequate in the light of its dead fruits.

For myself, I cannot be content with the fruits, and therefore I cannot be satisfied with the effort. It is no reflection upon them to insist that the effort must be renewed. This would not be the first conference report that has been rejected because the Senate was dissatisfied. Yet in my 12 years of senatorial experience I have never known of greater reason for dissatisfaction and therefore for rejection.

Mr. President, it happens that the House and Senate are in original agreement upon this bill only at one point, namely, the stabilization fund. With new provisions for publicity in connection with the stabilization fund I should be glad to have it continued despite some of its untoward implications. I suggest and prophesy that if the administration leaders who have brought this disgusting conference report to our attention at the moment would bring a continuing resolution into the House and Senate now to continue the stabilization fund, it could pass practically unanimously; and if they miss their stabilization fund on the morning of July 1, as they inevitably will, they can blame it to their own laxity in refusing or failing to realize that a continuing resolution in respect to the stabilization fund would pass in five minutes.

The remainder of the contemplation, however, is something else. Since the action of the Senate a few days ago there has been much discussion of the matter in editorial comment—which has been almost universally favorable—and in the pontifical pronouncements of the columnists—who have been almost universally critical—and in bludgeoning dictums from Hyde Park, and the rest of the responsive executive machine.

By some inadequately informed critics, the action of the Senate has been called "partisan." Any such nonsense is completely dissipated by the roll calls which show a majority of the voting Democrats on record for the Senate's position. If anything was ever bipartisan it was this effort to restore a few steel beams to the public credit and to the structure of the public confidence.

By other equally inadequately informed critics, the action of the Senate has been called a blow at economy. Any such error is promptly apparent if one consults simple arithmetic. If you want to call the ratio of seigniorage on domestic silver a charge upon the Public Treasury—which it actually is not—then the Senate's bill would have cost perhaps an extra seven million a year. But its action on foreign silver would save the Treasury about ten million a month. When seven million a year for domestic American interest is balanced against one hundred and twenty-five million a year to fertilize foreigners, I am unable to believe that economy as well as national interest are not obviously served by the Senate program.

But there have been yet other and more highly placed critics who have been no less treacherously imaginative in their animadversions.

The distinguished Secretary of the Treasury was almost amusing—it would have been funny if it had not been so serious—when he said yesterday that our distraught people "had better start worrying about the dollar" if devaluation authority is not continued.

That hysterical threat was scarcely worthy of the distinguished Secretary and not even casually related to authentic prophesy. He said:

Certainly, since 1934, no farmer, businessman, or laborer needed to worry about the dollar, but they had better start worrying now if the devaluation power lapses tomorrow night.

I am sure the farmers and the businessmen and the laborers of America will be glad to be told by the Secretary that they have not been worrying for the last 5 years about the value of the dollar. They have done nothing else but worry, and why should they not have worried when there was a floating power resident in the hands of the President of the United States, to be exercised solely and exclusively by him without necessity of consulting any other single living soul on earth, a power in the hands of one man to affect the value of the money of 130,000,000 people, and thus to affect their destiny.

Ever since 1934, the date to which the Secretary of the Treasury refers, there has never been a morning when the American businessman did not have to consult his daily newspaper to ascertain whether or not the President, all by himself, had decided to do something new about the value of the great medium of exchange with which the business of this great United States is conducted. When the Secretary has the temerity to say, when that insecurity is ended, when that speculation is terminated, when, pursuant to the mandate of the Constitution of the United States, the Congress, representing the elective will of the American people, instead of one autocrat down on Pennsylvania Avenue, shall control the value of the dollar, that that invites a doubt as to the value of our currency, he simply does not make sense.

The exact contrary of the Secretary's statement is the fact, Mr. President. Part of the worry stops when this conference report dies, as it will in about 3 hours and 40 minutes. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. TAFT. Two hours and 40 minutes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How many, Mr. President? I should like to have the official and authentic ruling with respect to the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Two hours and 33 minutes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Presiding Officer promises me that the legislation will be dead in 2 hours and 33 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair does not promise that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on the question of value, the question of what we need to worry about in respect to the currency of our country, it is interesting to fall back for a moment upon the great standard classic, Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations.

I think that Adam Smith will still be a standard authority upon the subject long after Mr. Morgenthau has been gathered to his fathers, along with all the other "greatest Secretaries of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton." I shall quote what Adam Smith had to say upon some of these fundamentals. There are some fundamentals, Mr. President, which not even the most persuasive magician with all the white rabbits in the world in his hat can never overcome. I read from Adam Smith.

In the payment of the interest of the public debt, it has been said, it is the right hand which pays the left. The money does not go out of the country. It is only a part of the revenue of one set of the inhabitants which is transferred to another, and the Nation is not a farthing the poorer.

That sounds very familiar. That is precisely the thing we were told a little while ago by a gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue; that we did not need to worry about our national debt because we owe it to ourselves.

Well, Adam Smith was writing in 1776, Mr. President, the year of the birth of the great American idea. So long as that this sort of nonsense had been exploded. There is nothing new about it. That is not a New Deal. The only thing that is new about it is that its refutation is so old that we have forgotten about it.

Let me continue to read from Mr. Smith:

When national debts have once been accumulated to a certain degree, there is scarce a single instance of their having been fairly and completely paid. The liberation of the public revenue, if it has ever been brought about at all, has always been brought about by a bankruptcy; sometimes by an avowed one, but always by a real one, though frequently by a pretended payment.

Now, we are coming to the point. Do not overlook that last phrase—

By a pretended payment.

Continuing:

The raising of the denomination of the coin—

Mr. Roosevelt did not discover this. Oh, no. "Busted" dictators have been reverting to this device ever since time began.

I continue reading:

The raising of the denomination of the coin has been the most usual expedient by which a real public bankruptcy has been disguised under the appearance of a pretended payment.

Now that is exactly what happens when you devalue the dollar in the first place. Continuing:

A pretended payment of this kind, therefore, instead of alleviating, aggravates in most cases the loss of the creditors of the public, and without any advantage to the public, extends the calamity to a great number of other innocent people. It occasions a general and most pernicious subversion of the fortunes of private people, enriching in most cases the idle and profuse debtor at the expense of the industrious and frugal creditor, and transporting a great part of the national capital from the hands which were likely to increase and improve it to those which are likely to dissipate and destroy it.

The honor of a State is surely very poorly provided for when, in order to cover the disgrace of a real bankruptcy, it has recourse to a juggling trick of this kind, so easily seen through, and at the same time so extremely pernicious.

There is Mr. Adam Smith's definition of the process of the policy of devaluation, written the very year of the declaration of our independence. Devaluation is a juggling trick which fools nobody and ultimately penalizes everybody; and yet we are told by the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury that, unless we continue to license this juggling trick, everything is going to pot. I repeat, Mr. President, it just does not make sense.

But there was another petulant criticism from even higher thrones of grace. Oh, yes. The President himself volubly erupted in a fashion which, with great respect, it seems to me was what the lawyers call irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. In the first place, he said that if this power and authority were not left in the exclusive hands of the Chief Executive, commencing at midnight tonight, the national defense would be impaired.

Mr. President, there is a relationship between money and national defense, and a terribly significant and important one. But of all the factors essential to a successful national defense a sound and solvent public credit represents exhibit A. We cannot have a sound and solvent public credit rotating around a floating control of the value of our money at the mercy and the whim and the will of one single individual speaking the destiny of 130,000,000 people.

That is not all he said. He said that if we should not extend these devaluation powers of his that at midnight tonight the control of American money would pass back to Wall Street. That is not a literal quotation, but it is nearly so. At any rate that definitely was the impact and impulse of the assertion—that if we should take the power to control the value of the gold dollar out of the hands of the President and restore it, pursuant to the Constitution, to the hands of Congress, that it would be restored to the hands of Wall Street.

I wonder if our distinguished Executive realized precisely what he was saying, because there is no escape from the conclusion that he was saying, wittingly or otherwise, that when Congress, 531 elected Representatives of the American people, controls the value of money pursuant to the mandate of the Constitution, Wall Street controls it. Mr. President, if Congress wants to submit and surrender to any such implied slur as that they are welcome.

As a matter of fact, those who insist that the power to devalue the dollar, the executive authority which is going to die in 2 hours and 17 minutes [laughter in the galleries]—the Presiding Officer corrects me and adds 45 seconds, which makes it official—the power to devalue the dollar is attacked not by the racketeers of American finance but by the finest and most dependable economic thought available to the advice of the American public service. There are not any racketeers, there are not any Wall Street speculators, there are not any of the minions of the dark places of the world on the Economic National Committee on Monetary Policy. That is about as completely representative a group of the finest economic thought of the professional mind of the American Republic as exists.

What do they say about this power to devalue the dollar? They recommended in a joint statement last February that the President's power to devalue the dollar should be terminated. The distinguished Senator from Delaware preceding me in this debate read the full text of the forthright and unequivocal statement of the Economic National Committee on Monetary Policy. I shall not take the time of the Senate to repeat it, for I want to conserve time and leave an opportunity for all the other Members of the Senate who wish to testify between now and tomorrow morning. But I do want to call the roll of these American experts whose signatures are signed to the statement read by the Senator from Delaware demanding the precise thing that the Senate is demanding.

Now let us see whether they are the racketeers of American finance; let us see whether they are entitled to be classed with the undesirable citizens of the land simply because they happen to disagree with the President of the United States that he is entitled to be monarch of all he surveys in respect to the value of American money. Let us see who they are:

James W. Angell, Columbia University.
Charles C. Arbuthnot, Western Reserve University.
Leonard P. Ayres, Cleveland Trust Co.
Don C. Barrett, Haverford College.
Benjamin Haggott Beckhart, Columbia University.
James Washington Bell, Northwestern University.
Ernest L. Bogart, University of Illinois.
Jules I. Bogen, Journal of Commerce and New York University.

Frederick A. Bradford, Lehigh University.
Herbert M. Bratter, Washington, D. C.
J. Ray Cable, Washington University.
Wilbur P. Calhoun, University of Cincinnati.
Neil Carothers, Lehigh University.
Charles A. Dice, Ohio State University.
George W. Dowrie, Stanford University.
William E. Dunkman, University of Rochester.
D. W. Ellsworth, The Annalist.
William D. Ennis, Stevens Institute of Technology.
Charles C. Fichtner, University of Arkansas.
Clyde Olin Fisher, Wesleyan University.
Herbert F. Fraser, Swarthmore College.
Roy L. Garis, Vanderbilt University.
Harry D. Gideonse, Columbia University.
Lewis H. Haney, New York University.
E. C. Harwood, American Institute for Economic Research.
Hudson B. Hastings, Yale University.
William F. Hauhart, Southern Methodist University.
Frederick C. Hicks, University of Cincinnati.

Mr. President, I am not ashamed to be in this company, regardless of the animadversion of the President of the United States upon those who dare say that he should be stripped of the autocratic, single-handed power to decide for himself what the value of the American dollar shall be.

Let us go on with some of these gentlemen who join a majority of the Senate in asserting that the thing that is going to happen in about 2 hours and 12 minutes is exactly the right thing, the thing that ought to happen. Here are some more of them:

John Thom Holdsworth, the University of Miami.
Jacob H. Hollander, the Johns Hopkins University.
F. Cyril James, University of Pennsylvania.
Edwin W. Kemmerer, Princeton University.
William H. Kiekhofer, the University of Wisconsin.
Frederic E. Lee, University of Illinois.
J. L. Leonard, University of Southern California.
James D. Magee, New York University.
Arthur W. Marget, University of Minnesota.
Margaret G. Myers, Vassar College.
Melchior Palyi, the University of Chicago.

Russell Weisman, Western Reserve University.
William O. Weyforth, the Johns Hopkins University.
Nathaniel R. Whitney, the Procter & Gamble Co.
Max Winkler, College of the City of New York.

Mr. President, the statement was issued in February. I originally put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 27. I thought perhaps someone might say that it is ancient dogma, inasmuch as the world moves so fast under the New Deal that things in the latter part of June might be totally different from things as they were in the latter part of February; so I took the pains yesterday to send a few sample telegrams to a number of these gentlemen to find out whether or not they had changed their minds. Mr. President, they have not changed their minds at all.

Professor Bell, of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., telegraphs under date of June 30:

Continue to oppose renewal of President's power to devalue dollar.

It must be he does not know what a terrible thing it is to which he subscribes. It must be he has not heard of the dire consequences of this thing which the Senate has insisted, and will continue to insist, shall be done.

Prof. Charles A. Dice, of Ohio State University, replies:

The Congress should not extend the power to devalue.

I read just a few of these to prove that the opinion of the economics committee is the same tonight as it was when that statement was issued—that devastating statement to which no responsible answer has ever yet been adequately submitted.

Dr. Charles L. Prather, of Syracuse University, replies:

My position on devaluation of the dollar has not changed.

Hudson B. Hastings, of Yale University, replying from Walpole, N. H., states:

I continue to be unalterably opposed to both further devaluation and also extending power of the President to do so. May I also add that I am strongly opposed to the purchase of silver at any price. In any event there is not the slightest excuse for paying more than world market price.

I wish particularly to read a message from Dr. Walter E. Spahr, of New York University, who is secretary of this great volunteer group of economists who have joined themselves together for the purpose of giving the American Congress the benefit of their wisdom and advice—the finest, most dependable, and most responsible possible group of consultants to whom we could turn in our dilemma. This is what Dr. Spahr telegraphed me this morning:

I oppose further devaluation of the dollar and renewal of the President's power to devalue as Economists' National Committee asserted last spring. It would be very unfortunate should the Senate fail to hold its grounds on this issue. Fixing the weight of the dollar should make it easy for other nations to tie their currencies to the dollar—

That is the point.

and should lead the way to international stabilization of currencies which would contribute much to economic recovery. International stabilization of currencies through an international convention is probably a remote factor since the administration wrecked the London conference of 1933. I also regard as most misleading and unfortunate the President's major contentions as he denounced the Senate for its recent legislation and steps taken to regain—

To regain what, Mr. President?—

to regain its appropriate constitutional control over this Nation's monetary standard. The President's arguments are political—

Those are not my words but the words of Dr. Spahr, speaking for the mobilized economists of America.

The President's arguments are political, not economic or constitutional, and are an effort to retain an improper dictatorial control by the Executive over the dollar.

That is precisely the situation which we confront; and it is precisely why the Senate does not owe any apology on earth to any Washington columnist, to any editor anywhere in the land, to any critic, to the Chief Executive, or to any of the other administrative forces of this administration.

It owes not one word of apology for the fact that in 2 hours and 5 minutes the control of money will have returned to the Congress of the United States, where the Constitution says it belongs.

Mr. President, I could burden the Record with an infinity of messages from the massed citizenship of this country. I shall not do so. I must yield the floor in order to be fair to all the other Senators who wish, between now and tomorrow morning, to record themselves upon this vital question.

However, I wish to read one telegram, because it comes from Ralph W. Moore, master of the Texas State Grange, and J. E. MacDonald, Texas commissioner of agriculture. I quote:

In the interest of parity price and agricultural and national recovery we urge you please do all in your power to defeat the discretionary monetary powers and the secret stabilization fund which have been used in tripartite monetary agreement with England and France, which might involve us in European wars. As pictured in Wednesday's Washington News, the control of money, the greatest financial and economic privilege of all, does not belong under the control of Wall Street; the control does not belong to the President, but, according to the Constitution, the control of money belongs to the Congress.

The master of the Texas State Grange and the Texas Commissioner of Agriculture are a long way from my home. Nevertheless, they are representative of the thought of a great imperial section of this land. They say further:

Therefore, we hope you will defeat these discretionary monetary powers and will thus make it possible to restore the control of money to the Congress.

Mr. President, I have so many things to say that I do not know what to do about it. However, I think I shall rather shortly conclude this particular contribution. We shall see about a little more later.

Mr. President, the New York Times is certainly not a partisan newspaper. It certainly has not been partial to the cause of the critics of this administration, yet it frequently speaks editorially with an amazing degree of incisive logic which is worthy of attention regardless of its source. I wish to read merely one editorial from the New York Times of June 29, just 2 days before the Senate will have declined to permit the President's monetary powers to continue. I read an editorial entitled "Mr. Roosevelt and the Dollar" because it epitomizes the situation about as well as it could possibly be done. It will save time for all of us if I present it for what it is worth. I read:

There is one ground on which the President's sharp rebuke to the Senate for its failure to renew his power to devalue the dollar would be logical. It has long been evident that the administration has regarded this power as an ace in the hole for a purely domestic "emergency." If business continued to drag despite the Government's efforts to "prime" it, if farm prices continued to fall despite the elaborate schemes that have tried to peg them, if one great "spending program" after another succeeded only in adding new burdens to the national debt, then there was always the possibility of using the President's power of devaluation to give business and prices another quick "inflationary" boom. To one school of the administration's advisers it has always seemed, in fact, that devaluation was the most important single factor in the vigorous if short-lived spurt of business and of prices that began in the spring of 1933. If the thing worked once, even for a little while, why couldn't it be made to work again—perhaps on the eve of an election? But it cannot be made to work again; it cannot even be tried again unless the Senate now reverses itself and consents to give the President the power of devaluation. On this ground the chagrin of the administration at the Senate's vote is understandable.

That is, chagrin at the vote of the Senate in the first instance. There is no chagrin at the vote of the majority of the Senate conferees.

It is as if a perplexed magician—

I think this is a perfect description of the situation—

It is as if a perplexed magician discovered late in the second act that someone had his white rabbit.

This is the New York Times, not I.

On any other ground the President's objections to the Senate's action do not stand the light of examination. As he states the case, the Senate's refusal to give him personal authority to devalue the dollar jeopardizes the national defense, puts "Wall Street" in control of the country's currency and opens the door of opportunity to "the ring of international speculators" whose activities once before threatened, and now threaten again, to destroy the stability of the dollar.

But—

Says the Times, and, of course, correctly—

But this is exactly what the Senate's action does not do. It is a fact to be remembered now that there was no question of the stability of the dollar until Mr. Roosevelt himself took office.

That is a good deal for the Times to say—

The dollar was stable in terms of gold until the spring of 1933. It began to depreciate only when rumors first came from Washington that the new administration intended to force action which would cheapen it. It continued to depreciate only so long as this new administration played the extraordinary role of a "bear" on its own currency, in the most gigantic speculative operation which history has witnessed. It recovered stability—

When?

It recovered stability when that amazing Government-managed speculation ceased.

What is the situation now? The fact of the matter is that opportunity for private speculation in the value of the dollar has been present only because of the existence of the very power whose impending loss—

In an hour and 55 minutes from now—the President now so bitterly deplores. "The ring of international speculators" whose activities he properly condemns has its only opportunity to gamble in the value of the dollar—

When?

When word comes out of Washington, however ill-advised, that something will be done to change this value—that Mr. Roosevelt himself is once more contemplating making use of his power to devalue. Then rumors go around, "short selling" starts, and the dollar dips in terms of foreign currencies. The record of the last 5 years will show that every temporary decline in the dollar's value has been the direct result of such rumors—

Such rumors as what?

rumors of devaluation. These rumors can find credence only so long as—

What?

Only so long as it is possible for a single man—exercising a power never before given to an American President in the whole history of the United States—to devalue the dollar overnight, according to his own personal judgment or his private whim. Take that power away, and there goes with it the only opportunity for speculation which the situation now affords.

It is impossible to get away from the logic and the facts.

The American dollar is in a strong position so far as the reserves behind it are concerned. This country holds today more than half of the world's reserves of monetary gold—actually more than $2 in gold for every dollar of American currency outstanding. In these circumstances there is only one threat to the stability of the dollar.

"There is only one threat to the stability of the dollar."

What is it?

That is the possibility that Congress will restore the power to devalue and that the President himself will use it.

In other words, the only threat to the stability of American currency values tomorrow morning is that the Senate might weaken—as, of course, it will not—and permit a restoration of the power over the value of American money to the whim, or the judgment, or whatever you want to call it, of a single human mind. There never was one human mind, and there never will be, entitled either to assume or to be trusted with a responsibility of such magnitude.

Mr. President, I am going to suspend now until about early in the morning. There are many other things I should like to submit; but I think I have, at least to my own satisfaction, demonstrated that the position which the Senate has taken, and which the conferees have abandoned, is squarely related to the best welfare of the American people, is squarely tied to the restoration of constitutional government under the flag.

So far as I am concerned, even though my name does lead the list of those who are proscribed in a statement at Hyde Park, I apologize to no one for expressing gratitude that in 1 hour and 50 minutes from now there will be no concentrated power to control the money of America in any one man's hand, anywhere.

[Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BARBOUR obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I do not lose the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan if he recalls voting on January 27, 1934, on House bill 6976, which was called the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, which ratified and confirmed everything the President of the United States had done under the so-called Thomas amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope I voted for it, because it was very essential that the acts which the President had done should stand without question, inasmuch as they were ancient history. Furthermore, I often voted for emergency powers in the early emergency days which I am unwilling to continue when the emergency is past.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator does not recall how he voted?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the Senate acted properly, in my opinion, in refusing to extend further at this time the President's power to devalue the dollar. Since this question has come back to us in the pending conference report, owing to the action of the House in extending this power, it becomes appropriate to examine the possible reasons for further devaluation, or the threat of devaluation, and likewise the implications of such action or threatened action.

In the history not only of our times but of ancient peoples there is such abundant evidence of the dangers and disastrous consequences of the course we are now asked to follow that it would seem to be almost unnecessary to review them, and I am not sure time will permit even a superficial review of this evidence today. If it does, I shall be happy to go into this aspect of the problem later on in the discussion. For the present, I should like to present to my colleagues some of the reasons, as I see them, why it is unsound to extend this power of the President beyond today.

In the first place, we all know that the Constitution gives to the Congress exclusively the right and the responsibility to deal with this problem. It is the particular duty of Congress, under the Constitution, to regulate the value of money. There can be no question as to that. It necessarily follows that if Congress should refuse the President the authority he asks, it will simply be discharging its constitutional duty.

In the emergency of 1933, when our economic system was threatened with complete collapse, banks were failing, foreign currencies were declining, and disaster followed disaster almost too quickly to enable us to keep track of them, we may have been justified, though I doubt it, in giving to the President arbitrary power to devalue the dollar in his discretion, as he might regard it necessary to do so, to meet or partially meet the problems which then confronted the country so far as they were related to the management of our currency and to the currencies of other nations. No such emergency exists today, unless we are going to be continually in an emergency forever.

The currencies of the principal trading nations of the world are relatively stable, and have remained so for many months. There is no actual danger on the economic horizon which, to my mind, would make it advisable, let alone necessary, to leave this power in the President's hands. Accordingly, we should be false to our trust if we were to extend beyond today the unexercised portion of the power to devalue the dollar which Congress, wisely or unwisely, rightly or wrongly, to meet an emergency, gave him in 1933.

Nor is it conceivable, as I see it, even in this era of one handy emergency after another, that a new real emergency could develop so swiftly as to make it impossible for Congress to meet it in its own traditionally American way, and in the proper discharge of its constitutional responsibility for regulating the value of money. If it should seem necessary or desirable at some future time to devalue the dollar further, Congress can then take whatever action is required to meet this condition.

This Congress is the only agency of the Government that should take such action. The collective wisdom of Congress in such a situation certainly would be equal to the wisdom of any one man or any President, guided though he might be by his financial advisers. Such a situation could only arise as a result of further fluctuations in the currencies of other nations. These fluctuations, and particularly the depreciation of foreign currencies, could flow from one of two causes: Currencies could be made to decline as a result of deliberate governmental policy designed to meet competitive conditions in trade, or for use as an economic weapon against another nation, or as the second cause, depreciation, as we all know, may occur automatically in response to the law of supply and demand as a nation's wealth is dissipated and the metallic or other basis of its money either goes into hiding or flees elsewhere for greater safety, or is drained away in settlement of international balances. There is no reason at the moment to believe that these conditions will arise elsewhere in the world, and certainly they cannot arise here. Consequently there can be no justification, in my opinion, for action by Congress which inevitably would be construed as anticipating a new emergency of this sort.

But suppose, we are asked, such an emergency should arise—what then? President Roosevelt argues that if he possessed the power which he asks Congress to leave with him, other nations which otherwise might be inclined deliberately to depreciate their own currencies further, seeking advantage in trade, would hesitate to take such a step.

Mr. President, I can find no validity in this argument. So far as I can see, it is meaningless, since all of the European nations understand thoroughly that we are in position to finish anything they may start along that line. Possessing as we do the strongest currency, the greatest hoard of gold and the greatest basic wealth in men and materials in the world, we would emerge eventually and inevitably as the victor in any currency war which other nations might start. That being true, it cannot possibly make any difference to the other players in the international poker game, with currencies as chips, whether the American chips are held by the President or by Congress. But it might make an exceedingly important difference to us, if the American chips are held and the American cards played by a Chief Executive who, in the 7 years of his tenure in the White House, has shown what many Americans regard as unprecedented recklessness in the handling of public funds, and a dangerous disregard for American tradition and the prevailing sentiment of the American people in the development of our foreign policy. With the power to devalue the dollar in the hands of Congress rather than in the hands of the President, there will at least be a much greater check on the further use of the money weapon in fighting our economic battles. We have not yet reached the point, nor has Congress achieved that state of impotence or incapacity, in which we need someone else to do our thinking for us. And I do not think we shall reach that stage.

As a final reminder to other nations, as well as to my colleagues in Congress, that the United States will always protect itself against economic raids, whether in the form of currency depreciation or otherwise, it is only necessary to recall that, in addition to controlling 60 percent of the world's monetary gold stock, we have had and in the past have used the weapons which are a part of our tariff system. I speak, of course, of the basic principle of protection for the domestic market, to which we have been committed as a nation since the Republic was founded; to the flexible provision of the tariff law, which in recent years has been employed by the President to increase rather than decrease duties to meet foreign competition; and to the Anti-Dumping Act, which operates as a further check on the dumping of foreign products on the American market at prices below those at which they are sold in the market of origin. The application of the American valuation principle in the evaluation of imports in cases where the 50-percent limit of change provided for in the flexible provision of the tariff act is insufficient to equalize differences in costs of production here and abroad, gives us a further weapon which we can always use in any trade war with competing nations. But beyond this, as I said, other nations may be perfectly sure that Congress will take whatever steps are necessary to meet any new condition which may arise as a result of any new currency war and, that we will fight fire with fire, with the advantage on our side, so long as they choose to give battle on this basis. It is by no means necessary, nor, in my opinion, is it desirable, to leave this power in the President's hands when there is no justifiable emergency in sight to warrant it.

(At this point Mr. BARBOUR yielded to Mr. CONNALLY, who addressed the Senate. By unanimous consent the remarks of Mr. CONNALLY were ordered to be printed in the RECORD following the speech of Mr. BARBOUR, and they appear at that point.)

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, may I revert now for a moment to the danger which I see in leaving this power in the President's hands? It must be apparent to all of us that, exercised unwisely, perhaps in response to a secret understanding with the so-called democracies of Europe, it might tend to entangle us further in the mesh of European intrigue. With the leading nations of Europe on a war footing, ready to jump at one another's throats, we must not allow the United States to be placed in a position where a false move, perhaps made impulsively, would commit us to a policy of joint action with one or more European powers against other powers with which they were unfriendly or whose purposes they might distrust.

It is not the extent of the power which the President asks which to my mind is of primary importance to us or to the country as we seek to arrive at a decision. It is the power itself. There is a further argument against extending the power in the necessity for a stable currency as an indispensable condition not only of recovery but of trade at any time. I shall develop this point very shortly. But even this requirement, it seems to me, is overshadowed by the possibility that an internationally minded President, or a President whose sympathies are clearly with one group of nations as against another may inadvertently permit his emotions to commit the United States to a course of action having the gravest consequences to our security as a nation. I am thinking, of course, as all of us are thinking, of the danger that the United States may again become involved in war. This is a danger we must face so long as dictators rule three-fourths of the territory of Europe and a ruthless and ambitious military junta runs amuck in the Far East.

Secret treaties, so far as the United States is concerned, are a thing of the past.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I note what the Senator says as to the need for this legislation. I should like to ask him, in passing, whether or not he believes that this evident eagerness for power to change the metallic content of the dollar carries definitely the implication of an intention to use the power?

Mr. BARBOUR. I cannot think there is any doubt about that, Mr. President. I think it is perfectly obvious. I appreciate the thoughtfulness of the Senator from Vermont in bringing up the point.

Even our trade agreements, hedged in secrecy though they are during the period of negotiation, are an open book as compared with the understandings involving joint action between the United States and other nations which might be reached between President Roosevelt and the chancelleries of the so-called European democracies. On this ground alone, it seems to me, we would be more than justified in refusing to extend further a power which, if exercised at all, would only be exercised in response to some secret understanding with other nations, in which event the Congress and the country would have no voice in the decisions reached, or in a trade war in which so many factors would be involved that Congress ought to have the right in this case also to participate if not to decide the strategy or the steps necessary to meet it.

The power to take 9 cents more from the original gold dollar, that is to say, to inflate the present gold stock approximately 18 percent, resulting in a further paper profit of almost $3,000,000,000, which could be and undoubtedly would be, applied to a reduction in the national debt, or listed as an offset to the debt—a course which to my mind would be completely unsound—is evil enough in itself, particularly when there is no necessity for exercising it. When there is added to this evil the imminent danger that any unwise and unnecessary exercise of this power might under some circumstances take us a step further on the road to war, I think the argument against extending the present power becomes unanswerable.

But let us give the President the benefit of the doubt and assume that he would not make any mistaken move in the international poker game. Let us assume that he would act as cautiously and with the same deliberation as the most careful Member of Congress would act in using the power to devalue the dollar as an economic weapon in meeting any new European attack on our own country.

What other reason then, could he have for devaluing the dollar further within the 50-percent limit fixed originally by Congress? Why foreign currencies are not to be depreciated to the point where retaliatory action by the United States is required to meet such a condition, does he want the power for which he asks? What could be gained? I think the answer to these questions is obvious. Already the Government has realized a paper profit of between two and three billion dollars through the original devaluation of the gold dollar. The $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, as we all know, is a part of this so-called profit. To reduce the value of the dollar further would result in a further paper profit of comparable size. Thus between five and six billion dollars will have been cut from the national debt—on paper. Can it be that President Roosevelt desires this power so that it may be exercised for the benefit of the New Deal fiscal record? Had the original gold dollar retained its former value, the national debt in 1940 would be in excess of $45,000,000,000. It may reach that figure as it is. But whatever may be the level of the debt at that time, it will be more than $2,000,000,000 below the real debt as measured in terms of the gold dollar on which our currency was based until 1933. And if the power which he now asks were to be given him, and were to be exercised during the next year and one-half, the debt total would, of course, show a further drop of about $2,700,000,000. I hesitate to raise this issue and we naturally cannot read the President's mind. Nevertheless, it is apparent that this would be one of the results of devaluation, and to that extent the record of the New Deal would be made to appear better than it otherwise would.

But, Mr. President, whether this is the President's true purpose or not—regardless of what reasons motivated him in asking Congress to extend this power—all that we know of the history of monetary systems and monetary experiments by other nations, both ancient and modern, attests the truth of the statement that currency depreciation acts like a drug, first to stimulate, then to depress, and finally to become a habit which it is all but impossible to break. Devaluation is simply inflation by another name; and devaluation by means of a bookkeeping transaction does not differ in principle from the chipping of metal currencies by the emperors of ancient Rome, searching then as we are searching now for remedies for the economic evils of the day.

Currencies may be debased in more ways than one, but debased they are; and the ultimate effect is always the same, once the process gets out of control, as it usually does. It is not yet out of control in the United States; but we have taken the first step toward inflation, and are now asked to take the second step. Who can say that before the New Deal ends we shall not be asked to take a third or a fourth step in the same disastrous direction? I cannot help but recall in this connection that President Roosevelt assured the country in 1933 that the national debt would not go above $30,000,000,000.

We also know that in his preelection speeches during his first campaign he ridiculed the idea that we should ever be forced off the gold standard. We know now how little those assurances meant. How, then, can we be sure that the power to devalue the dollar further will not be exercised by a President who has constantly used the power given him to meet emergencies and has constantly asked for more?

I shall not at this time go into the philosophic aspects or political implications of this incessant drive for personal power. These issues have been discussed before and will be discussed again. For the present I desire to discuss only the immediate issue now before us, involving the soundness of our currency system and the possible uses and results of the use of the devaluation power.

Perhaps the Senate will be interested in this connection in the observations of Roger W. Babson on the subject of inflation, as found in the volume, If Inflation Comes, published in 1937. I quote it because we are asked now to take a further step, or at least give the President the power to take us further along this road:

INFLATION IS A STIMULANT

What is inflation? Inflation is a stimulant. What is a stimulant? A stimulant performs a useful function in an emergency, but it is not of permanent value. There usually is a bad reaction from a stimulant. To the extent that general business justifies increased prices, such prices hold; but otherwise they react. Those who are depending on inflation should realize this fact. Any benefits that come from inflation are like benefits from borrowed money—they must be paid back again. Let me repeat, I am not violently opposed to inflationary remedies. I believe that inflation is often a useful method of temporarily redistributing wealth. But here, again, wealth distributed by inflationary measures usually flows back again to its original owners. Water can be pumped uphill, but sooner or later works its way back again. It is the same concerning prices, debts, profits, rents, and wages when raised by inflation. Sooner or later they return to their natural levels. On the principle of the pendulum, when falling again, they go as much below their normal level as they were risen above by an inflationary movement. This means that a great deal of distress often follows an inflationary era.

How is inflation administered? I have already answered this inquiry, but to continue my illustration let me say: There are different ways of administering stimulants. Some stimulants are taken into the stomach; other stimulants are injected with a hypodermic; other stimulants are given by gas, or in other ways. Therefore, let me repeat that there are many ways of bringing about inflation besides the printing of currency. As stimulants may be taken without the person knowing it, inflation may take hold unconsciously in the same way. The great danger in connection with all stimulants is that they are habit forming. This especially applies to the use of inflation to correct economic evils. The more one depends on inflation, the harder it is to quit depending upon inflation. Controlled inflation is a splendid theory, but it does not work out in a practical manner. Stimulants have their uses but also their abuses. Unfortunately, abuses seem to be a natural reaction from uses. This is the danger of inflation.

I have read these passages from Mr. Babson's book simply to emphasize once more that devaluation or inflation is an insidious habit-forming drug.

If it can be assumed that the President would not use this weapon unwisely if given him, either to meet an international situation or to improve the financial statement of the New Deal, what other reason could there be for devaluing the dollar at this or any other time? Currencies may be depreciated for any one of several reasons:

First. To meet a corresponding depreciation of competing currencies. I have already discussed this point.

Second. To increase the volume of the circulating medium when there is a shortage of money. This condition does not now exist in the United States nor can such a condition possibly arise in the visible future. So there is no justification on that score for further devaluation or for extending the power to devalue the dollar further.

Third. A currency may be inflated to bring about an advance in the general price level. That has been one of the consistent purposes of one group of economic thinkers in the United States who believe that a higher price level would be desirable. Certainly it would be one of the results of devaluation. But here, again, there is always the danger that the upward tendency of prices, like the inflation habit, will get out of control.

Let us for the moment consider what a rising price level in the United States would mean to the American people at the present time.

In the first place and immediately the result would be to increase the cost of living to the nine-tenths of the population who are employed or who are dependent on persons who are employed, and two-thirds of whom are dependent on incomes averaging less than $1,500 per year. Can they stand an increase in the cost of living at this time? Is there any Member of this body who, knowing this would be the inevitable effect of devaluation, would deliberately place this burden on the backs of the wage earners, the housewives, and the small farmers of this country?

As for the one-tenth of the population who are on relief, or dependent on various forms of charity, or the several measures of social security taken for their benefit, it is tragically clear that any rise in living costs would simply cut down the quantity of food and clothing purchasable out of their little allowances. Do Senators want to see those on relief suffer? Shall we, by our action today, say to these unfortunates, "You are eating too much. You don't need so many clothes. We have no interest in whether or not you can pay your rent. We are interested only in the debtor and the speculator and in international exchange and problems of high finance. You will have to get along as well as you can. You will get as many dollars as before, but, of course, they will not buy so much. That is too bad; but we can't do anything about it, because the President wants to devalue the dollar again, and has to have his way."

I do not think we want to say that to those worthy unfortunates who are on relief; nor do I think that, having set up a social-security system, we shall deliberately tear it down within a year or two of its creation by acting in such a way as to impair the benefits extended by the system to the millions for whom it was created.

There is, of course, an alternative. Unless we were to invite destruction of the social-security system, or deliberately destroy it and see those on relief suffer, it would be necessary alternatively to increase the present allowances for relief, old-age pensions, aid for the blind, aid for widows with dependent children, and the present schedule for the social-security payments as well. The rise in the price level would inevitably be reflected also in increases in all the other costs of government. The salaries of all Government employees would have to be increased, although they would find, as wage earners and salaried people always find, that wages lag behind any rise in the cost of living, whether attributable to inflationary measures by governments or to the natural play of economic forces. Is there any Senator here who believes that under these circumstances the national debt would not get out of control, and that further inflation would not be necessary? Is there anyone who believes it would be possible under these circumstances to balance the Budget?

If these are Senators who wish to impose these burdens on the poor, to bankrupt millions of other Americans who are on the verge of bankruptcy now, and at the same time give aid and comfort to the wealthy owner of securities, to the speculator and to the debtor, he is welcome to this course. It is one I shall not follow.

And may I say a word at this juncture about the effect of inflation on the debtor? There is a prevalent belief that the man in debt gains by inflation. The agitation for so-called cheap money invariably starts in agricultural areas. The farmers have been led to believe that inflation means higher prices for crops, and that debts can be paid more quickly. Many of them envision a condition in which the farm is free of debt and crops can be raised at a constant and substantial profit. What they forget is that as prices rise the consuming power of cities declines, so that the net return to the farmer not only is no greater than before, but his own maintenance costs tend also to increase with the rise in the general price level. His farm implements cost more; his clothing costs more; taxes are higher; seed costs more; transportation costs rise; and all other items which enter into his cost of raising crops increase proportionately.

I happen to know that a study of this particular effect of inflation on the farm population in Germany was made some years ago by one of the ablest and best-informed students of the subject in the United States. I refer to Dr. Landis, of New York, vice president of the American Cyanamid Co. and engineer by profession. Some of you may have seen his brochure An Engineer Looks at Inflation. The particular fact I am giving you now does not appear in this booklet.

Dr. Landis was in Russia during the period of Russian inflation, saw inflation run its cycle in Italy, and studied the effect of the disastrous post-war inflation in Germany on the Rhine, spending several years in these countries and bringing from Germany particularly a great volume of data bearing on this problem, some of which is now to be found only in his files. Dr. Landis was interested in discovering whether it were really true that the farm population of Germany benefited from inflation. His investigations disclosed that at the end of the inflationary cycle in Germany the total farm indebtedness of the country was greater than before inflation.

What happened was this: First, the markets for farm quotas declined, and in the end disappeared, as the value of money was wiped out and people had nothing with which to buy the crops the farmers raised. During the interval of wild inflation and the subsequent period of economic readjustment, and as Germany attempted thereafter to get back to a gold basis, the physical plant on the farms deteriorated, houses fell to pieces, barns went without paint, implements rusted, and the farmers' families suffered deprivations inevitable in such circumstances. The old mortgages were paid off in inflated currency, it is true, but when the new currency was established and money was hard to get the farmers had to borrow for seed, living expenses, rehabilitation of the farms and other purposes, and in some instances paid interest as high as 20 percent or more on the money borrowed. It is my recollection also that in the general economic readjustment which followed inflation in Germany, 25 percent of the face value of urban mortgages and 20 percent of the face value of farm mortgages of the preinflation period were reinstated. So, while the farmers had only one-fourth of the original mortgage to pay, their total mortgage indebtedness in the end was greater than formerly, and they were worse off, as were the people of the cities, than before the rulers of Germany adopted inflation as an instrument of national policy employed to wipe out the Government's internal debt.

We could, of course, go on indefinitely with a review of the record of modern Germany, of eighteenth century France, and of ancient Rome, along the way of horrible examples of the consequences of currency debasement. For the moment, however, let us see what a sound currency means, and why it is important to the economy of a trading nation.

What are the requirements of a serviceable currency? First, soundness. Second, stability. Third, it must be related in value to the stable currencies of the principal competing nations, if it is to serve as an acceptable medium of exchange in settlement of international balances.

Under modern conditions, until the post-war cyclone swept into the discard much of what we have known of economic practice, the currencies of the trading nations were based on gold or silver, or a combination of the two. When the cyclone struck, gold went into hiding and is still in hiding, except as a basis for settling international balances, and, at least in theory, as a backing for currencies of other forms.

We all know, of course, that the monetary system of a country need not be based on gold. It need not even be based on silver. In its broadest interpretation, money may be any medium of exchange which has a definite value and in which people have confidence. It may be, in short, anything which serves its purpose as a circulating medium. In the development of modern civilization and the evolution of human society, most human beings have found it more satisfactory to use gold or silver coins or paper currency as a medium of exchange rather than the sea shells, stone, iron, or other currencies of primitive peoples. But in any case, whether money be sea shells or gold, it must have a definite and substantially stable value in the minds of persons using it if it is to serve as a basis for the exchange of goods.

Assuming its soundness and its stability, there must be enough of it to enable a community or a nation which wishes to trade to do so. That is, volume must be added to value as the second condition of a serviceable currency. Finally, if the money of any country is to serve its maximum purpose in encouraging the exchange of goods, velocity must be added to soundness and volume. When these three conditions exist, we have a reasonable chance for prosperity. In an industrial country such as ours there can be no prosperity when any one of these three conditions is lacking, whether the currency be based on gold, silver, or a combination of these metals.

So much for the elementary principles of money. Now let us see whether there is anything in our own economy which would make it advisable to devalue the dollar further at this time, or to give the President the power to do so in his discretion, or whether our situation argues against it.

Our money is unquestionably sound. We all know that. The dollar is accepted everywhere by all the peoples of the world. It is the soundest currency on the face of the earth, notwithstanding the size of the national debt. It may not be possible to make this statement a few years hence, but it can be made now without fear of substantial contradiction. It is self-evident.

For several years, further, the dollar has had a substantially stable value, both as a medium of domestic exchange and in relation to the currencies of our principal competitors. It is not subject to fluctuation. It is reinforced not only by our tremendous and unprecedented gold stock, but by the security afforded that stock by our strength as a nation, our determination on the one hand to remain at peace with the world, and on the other to make our defenses so strong that no nation will dare attack us.

There is plenty of money available in the United States for all possible purposes to which it might be put. We have the broadest and strongest metallic base of any nation, and the quantity of money available for commerce is more than sufficient to finance the present volume of business or any volume now in sight.

There is, however, one weakness in our domestic economy so far as it concerns the uses and circulation of money. This is the sluggishness with which money moves. We have soundness and volume without velocity. More simply, the money we have is locked up in the banks. The reason it is locked up is that the Government itself—and by the Government I mean the New Deal—has kept business in such a state of uncertainty, and failed so completely to bring back prosperity to the majority of Americans, as to offer no hope of a new national prosperity under present conditions. The banks of the country have been all but ruined as lending institutions, as the Government absorbs their surplus funds and they are in turn spent, redeposited, reborrowed, and respend in an unending cycle. This is the condition of our national economy at the present time. If any one thing is needed to help the country find its way back to prosperity, it is confidence in the Washington Government, a change of direction on the part of those in power, and the stabilization, rather than the further unsettlement or threat of unsettlement, of our currency. Certainly the way to restore prosperity is not to devalue the dollar further. There is nothing whatever in our economic picture to justify a further step in this direction. We do not need more money. We do need sound money. We do not need uncertainty. We need certainty. We need stability, not instability. We need confidence above all else—confidence in our institutions, in the Government, in our officials, in the President, in Congress, in the future, in ourselves. And we are asked by the President to pursue a course which could only result in further loss of confidence, uncertainty, and increase the Nation's fears, all of which unquestionably would be reflected in a further business recession at a time when, if the common-sense course is followed, business normally should improve.

Let us not be deceived by calling the debasement of the dollar, devaluation; or deluded in the belief that it is not, or would not be, another step on the road to inflation.

Stephen Leacock, head of the department of economic and political science at McGill University, expresses the same thought as Mr. Babson in a different way.

"The first consequences of an inflation of currency," he remarks, "are as cheering as the first consequences of taking a brandy and soda." Perhaps a few Senators will understand what he is talking about.

"There is nothing like it," he says—and I quote from the volume Back to Prosperity. "The only problem in both cases is how many do you take and when are you to stop?"

Well, we had our brandy and soda in 1933 and the headache lasted ever since. And a good many Americans are beginning to wonder if it would not be better to sober up completely and stay sober, rather than invite a succession of headaches.

If we were living in the Middle Ages, under a monarch whose rule extended over half the world, and whose power within the boundaries of the country was absolute, it might be possible, as in the time of Kublai Khan, to do business with a currency made of what Marco Polo describes as "the bark of the mulberry tree." So far as I am aware, this was the first use of paper currency in recorded history. The Mongolian emperor whose hordes devastated eastern Europe and extended his sway from the Russian steppes to the coasts of China, required all persons entering his dominion to leave behind them all of the precious metal, jewels, and all other articles of enduring value brought with them, and to accept in exchange a currency serviceable only for the purchase of other goods within the empire which it was permissible to possess or export. Unfortunately, perhaps, we are living under different conditions, and it is necessary to give those with whom we trade a little more consideration than they received in trading with Kublai Khan. It is because we have played fair with other nations and because we are strong economically and in a military sense, that the owners of gold the world over have shipped their holding here, where we hold them as owner or trustee until such time as the balance of trade or the restoration of stable conditions abroad shall result in a reversal of the gold flow. How long do you suppose gold would continue to flow to the United States if we were to travel the road to inflation? How long before it would take flight to safer shores? We are on that road now, but it is not too late to turn back. And that is precisely what the Senate, or those of us whose vote determined its action the other day, propose to do.

I commend to the Senate, or to those Senators who are interested in the subject, a small volume in which is reproduced a paper read by Dr. Andrew White, a one-time president of Cornell University, before a committee of Congress in 1876, in which he vividly presents the picture of the inflation which preceded the French Revolution. The volume is obtainable in the Congressional Library. I cannot but feel that while the wrath of the American people would hardly express itself in the same manner as that of the French people in their revolution, this country would be in grave danger of a social upheaval more violent than anything it has ever known if those of us entrusted with the responsibility of directing its destinies ever take it down the road of uncontrolled inflation. And the penalties visited at that time on those in power, whatever they might be, would be justified.

If we want to see the average American wiped out completely and nine-tenths of the population nailed to the cross of human misery, let us give the President the power he asks; otherwise let us be sensible and call a halt on the march toward inflation before it is too late.

A contemporary writer, Mr. H. J. Haskell, the editor of the Kansas City Star, has recently written an interesting book, in which he shows the parallel between many of the things which are happening today and those which happened in the days of Rome's decline in the early centuries of the Christian era.

Perhaps because the records for that period are more complete than for some others, he discusses in some detail the condition of the empire and the people under Diocletian and the efforts of this able administrator to deal with the consequences of currency inflation by his predecessors. I think it worth while to recall this story once more.

At this point I wish to read from a book by H. J. Haskell, The New Deal in Old Rome:

Diocletian, with army backing, became dictator, reorganized the administration, and stabilized the currency on what he believed was a sound basis. Unfortunately, like some modern rulers facing a similar problem, he overvalued his new monetary unit. Prices promptly responded with another violent rise. Diocletian recognized the suffering that resulted, but naturally did not understand the cause. The trouble, he thought, lay in greedy profiteering. In 301 he issued his famous edict setting maximum prices and wages. After denouncing the profiteers in the preamble, he announced maximum prices for between seven and eight hundred articles and types of work and service.

In its technical descriptions the edict reads like a modern tariff act. There is millet ground and millet unground; olive oil first quality and olive oil second quality; goose artificially fed and goose not artificially fed; cabbages best and cabbages small; washed Tarentine wool and washed Laodicean wool. Maximum salaries are included for barbers, wagon makers, elementary teachers, teachers of Latin and Greek, and many others.

The act had teeth. The penalty for evasion was death. The Emperor had so expanded the civil service that a contemporary wrote, with disgusted exaggeration, that half of the men of the empire were on the government pay roll.

There were plenty of inspectors. But this early attempt at price fixing failed. It is recorded that businessmen closed their shops, that many articles of commerce disappeared, and that food riots resulted. A dozen years later we read the obituary of the act: "For merest trifles blood was shed and, out of fear, nothing was offered for sale and the scarcity grew much worse until, after the death of many persons, the law was repealed from mere necessity."

The attempt of Diocletian and his successors to save an empire that was crumbling resulted in complete regimentation under a totalitarian state. In the reign of Marcus Aurelius many villages and towns had been virtually wiped out by a great plague, probably a malignant type of smallpox, that had swept the empire from Persia to the Rhine. On a diminished population with greatly impaired resources, taxes were increased to support the enlarged army and the vast bureaucracy. Heavy contributions of grain were exacted from farmers to feed the soldiers and the population of the large cities. There were land taxes, property taxes, occupation taxes, poll taxes. It has been said of this period that "the penalty of wealth seemed to be ruin." The heart was taken out of the enterprising men. Finally the burden became so intolerable that to escape the imperial levies tenants fled from the farms and businessmen and workmen from their occupations. The government intervened and bound the tenants to the soil—the beginning of serfdom—and the businessmen and workmen to their occupations and trades. Private enterprise was crushed, and the state was forced to take over many kinds of business to keep the machine running.

As oppression by the central authority increased, many Romans in the frontier provinces escaped from its heavy hand to find refuge among the Germans and even the Huns. It is recorded that a refugee with the Huns told a Roman ambassador that "he considered his new life with the Huns better than his old life among the Romans." To the poor, it was said, the enemy was kinder than the tax collector.

Mr. President, could any description more accurately portray the conditions which result from a steady march down the road in which we stand at present?

Nor can we believe that these things happen and could happen only in the ancient world. For we know—from having seen or read with our own eyes of the suffering resulting from inflation in Germany following the World War. We know that it was this suffering that made Hitler possible. And the rest of the story, including the threat to world peace inherent in the Hitler program, we live from day to day. Do we want this to happen here? I do not think so, and I earnestly believe that the American people will sustain the Senate in its action if it refuses once more to give the President any further power to tamper with the currency, and that we shall be condemned and punished, as we should be, if we yield to his importunity.

I now desire to read an extract from Prof. Edwin W. Kemmerer's work on money:

In Germany we have a case of an inflation that was held in control throughout a great war and for some time afterward, and then broke away completely and ran amuck.

When the war broke out, Germany was on the gold standard and all her currency was maintained at a parity with her monetary unit, the gold mark, which had a value equivalent to about 24 cents United States gold. Although there were several kinds of paper money in circulation, none of them was important, except the notes of the German central bank, the Reichsbank, which constituted about two and six-tenths billion marks out of Germany's total coin and paper money circulation of six and one-half billion marks.

WARTIME INFLATION

Immediately upon the outbreak of the war Germany went off the gold standard and the Government took vigorous measures to bring into the vaults of the Reichsbank as much of the country's gold coin and bullion as possible. A strong, patriotic appeal was made to the public to sell to the Reichsbank for paper money their gold jewelry and ornaments; and a memorial medal of iron was given to those who did so. It bore the inscription:

"Gold I gave to defend my country.
Iron I took for a badge of honor."

Restrictions on the issue of notes by the Reichsbank were lightened and a new form of war emergency paper money, the Loan Bureau notes, was authorized to be issued under Reichsbank control. They were to be used chiefly in the granting of credit to the smaller business concerns.

Since Germany expected the war to be a short one and hoped to recoup her war expenditures from a defeated enemy, she adopted the policy of obtaining her war revenue chiefly through borrowing, rather than from increased taxation. Politically it was the more popular method, at least for a short time. Germany's wartime inflation, therefore, was merely another case of the old story of exploiting the monetary function of government—namely, the function of providing the public with a good medium of exchange—for the benefit of the fiscal function of providing government with an adequate revenue.

INFLATION VIRUS WORKED SLOWLY

Under the influence of the war, Germany's national expenditures increased fivefold from the fiscal year in which the war began to the fiscal year 1918 in which it ended. During the same 4 years her total national debt increased sixfold. Her circulation of paper money (other than emergency money) increased from less than 3,000,000,000 marks at the beginning of the war to 29,000,000,000 at the end of November 1918. During the war the amount of Government treasury and commercial bills discounted and of advances made by the Reichsbank increased from 1.3 billion to 22.1 billion marks. The demand deposits of the Reichsbank increased from 858,000,000 marks to 10.7 billion marks, and the country's gold reserve from 1.25 billion marks to 2.38 billion marks. From the calendar year 1914 to 1918 the price of gold in terms of marks, as measured by New York-Berlin exchange rates, rose only 41 percent. Wholesale prices in Germany slightly more than doubled, and wages for every class of labor for which wage index numbers are available covering these years moved strongly downward.

Considering the extent of the expansion of the country's circulating medium during the war, the advance in prices up to the time of the armistice was strikingly moderate. It usually takes considerable time for the inflation virus to work, as we have been experiencing recently in the United States.

There is also an interesting extract in Frank F. Abbott's work The Common People of Ancient Rome, which I should like to read to the Senate:

The history of the growth of paternalism in the Roman Empire is still to be written. It would be a fascinating and instructive record. In it the changes in the character of the Romans and in their social and economic conditions would come out clearly. It would disclose a strange mixture of worthy and unworthy motives in their statesmen and politicians, who were actuated sometimes by a sympathy for the poor, sometimes by a desire for popular favor, by an honest wish to check extravagance or immorality, or by the fear that the discontent of the masses might drive them into revolution. We should find the Roman people, recognizing the menace to their simple, frugal way of living which lay in the inroads of Greek civilization, and turning in their helplessness to their officials, the censors, to protect them from a demoralization which, by their own efforts, they could not withstand. We should find the same officials preaching against race suicide, extravagant living, and evasion of public duties, and imposing penalties and restrictions in the most autocratic fashion on men of high and low degree alike who failed to adopt the official standards of conduct. We should read of laws enacted in the same spirit, laws restricting the number of guests that might be entertained on a single occasion, and prescribing penalties for guests and host alike, if the cost of a dinner exceeded the statutory limit. All this belongs to the early stage of paternal government. The motives were praiseworthy, even if the results were futile.

During the delivery of Mr. BARBOUR's speech,

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. This power has resided in the President for about 6 years, has it not?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not so long as that, I believe.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was ratified by the act of 1934, but the power to buy gold was conferred in May 1933. The Senator expresses fear that the power may be abused. Will he say that the President has abused the power within the past 6 years?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I was on a vacation for 2 of those years, so perhaps I am not as competent a witness as I might otherwise be.

Mr. CONNALLY. Whether the Senator was on vacation or whether he was here, he had to have a little money, and he is a businessman of large means and large operations. Will he, or will he not, now say that the power which has been resting in the hands of the President to fix the value of the gold dollar for 6 years in fact has heretofore been abused?

Mr. BARBOUR. Of course, "abused" is a strong word. I will say that I myself regret that the dollar was devalued. I think that was a mistake. Whether it was an abuse or not is a matter of personal opinion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that the question now is not whether it was right originally to devalue the dollar, but would the Senator say or not say that the power given to the President to vary the content from 60 to 50 percent has been unwisely exercised during the past 6 years? The President has not changed it since it was fixed at 59 cents.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think it was unwise to give the President that power, and I think it is unwise to let him retain it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Merely to have the Record show the exact time when the action of the President occurred, I ask the Senator from New Jersey to take notice that the proclamation of the President with respect to the gold standard under the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 was promulgated on August 9, 1934, and that the proclamation of the President relating to silver purchases under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 was issued on the 10th day of April, 1935.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator from Vermont very much.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will yield, I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that the original power to purchase gold at a higher valuation was conferred on the President by the act of May 12, 1933, by the so-called Thomas amendment. In 1934 Congress passed House bill 6976, known as the Gold Reserve Act, to which the Senator from Vermont makes reference. It was under that specific act that the President issued his proclamation to which the Senator now refers, was it not?

Mr. AUSTIN. It was directly referred to.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the act for which the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who made the very exhaustive and scholarly speech a while ago, voted, according to the Record, on January 27, 1934, as is shown on page 1484 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it is indicated that the yeas were 66 and the nays 23, and among the "yeas" appears the name of Mr. VANDENBERG, of Michigan.

Under that act it is provided, in section 13, that—

All actions, regulations, rules, orders, and proclamations heretofore taken, promulgated, made, or issued by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury, under the act of March 9, 1933, or under section 43 or section 45 of title 3 of the act of May 12, 1933, are hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed.

The act of 1933, to which reference is made, was the agricultural appropriation act of that year, which carried the so-called Thomas amendment, which empowered and authorized the President to buy gold, not to fix the gold content of the dollar, but to buy gold at a higher valuation, and the President did conduct a buying operation.

In 1934, after all of that had been done under that act, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] solemnly voted for the Gold Reserve Act, which specifically ratified, approved, and confirmed everything which had been done toward devaluation under the act of 1933. He voted for more than that.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I do not want to lose the floor by this question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I assure the Senator he will not lose the floor, because it is a big floor, and the Senator fits it very well. [Laughter.]

I thank the Senator for his cordial reception, and I would not interrupt him except for the fact that the Vice President, or the President pro tempore, has such a long list of Republican orators who are ahead of the Senator from Texas that he can never hope before about 3 o'clock in the morning to obtain the floor.

The Senator from Michigan also voted for this act, which contains this language:

SEC. 12. Paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title 3, of the act approved May 12, 1933—

And I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey. I hope he will not be diverted by any questions of those around him. [Laughter.] This is not a silver speech, I will say to the Senator from Oregon. This is the Thomas amendment to the act which originally gave the President power further to change the price of gold—

Is amended—

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was not satisfied with the act of 1933. He wanted to give the President some more power. That act is—amended by adding two new sentences at the end thereof, reading as follows:

"Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight."

In 1934 the Senator from Michigan voted not to permit any more gold in the dollar than 60 cents. Now he says he wants to put back 100 cents in it.

The powers of the President—

Listen to this. This is the solemn language of the Senator from Michigan, because he voted for it at a time when whisperings were not perhaps assailing his ears with as much force as they are now along certain other political lines. [Laughter in the galleries.] This is the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] speaking through his vote, through the solemn act of the Congress as it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and * * * objects of this section in his judgment may require;

Not the judgment of the Congress, but the judgment of the President of the United States—

Except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of the enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President—

Not the Congress—

Unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but—

Not the Congress—

But the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

I will not take up more of the Senator's time, because I know he is anxious to convert somebody on his side of the House, and to conclude his remarks.

I wish Senators would read this act for which the Senator from Michigan voted. Let me merely read one more line.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. CONNALLY. This measure for which the Senator from Michigan voted in 1934 also has a silver thread running through it, "Silver threads among the gold."

Mr. BARBOUR. I merely want to mention at this point for the RECORD that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is not present during this discussion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish he were. I like the Senator from Michigan as a Senator and a gentleman. I think he is a splendid, fine, lovable individual; but I cannot say as much for him as a Senator. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. President, let us see about silver. "Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled"—and so forth—that is the Thomas amendment to the Agricultural Act of 1933. The Senator from Michigan tonight wants to strip from the President every power he has with regard to gold and with regard to silver. I am not interested in silver, but I am interested in the devaluation of the gold dollar. Some Senators will remember that I raised my voice on the floor of the Senate before Mr. Roosevelt became President, in a speech in January 1933, in which I took the position that if we were to make the dollar worth less, the only sensible way to do it was to take some of the gold out of it and reduce the gold content of the dollar. Senators were incredulous. They did not believe it could be done. They made sport of the Senator from Texas. They said, "That is unconstitutional. It cannot be done. It won't work." But afterward, when the President took it up, many of them saw a different light.

The Senator from Michigan was not content with the act of 1933, giving the President power to value gold in different values, so he voted for the act of 1934, which said:

The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio so fixed—

He was not satisfied with the President's unlimited power; he wanted to give him some more—under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

Is there anything there about the Congress of the United States prescribing it? The Senator from Michigan was voting to give the President the power, not the Congress. He was giving up the powers of Congress, surrendering them to the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The same President, however.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; the same President. Tonight the Senator is balking the President, seeking to strip from him what little vestiges of power he has not exercised. Here is what the Senator said:

Under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe—

Who? The President of the United States; the same President that now sits in the White House—under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued—

The Senator from Michigan has given him more authority. He was not satisfied with the act of 1933. He wanted to give him some more power—is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage—

Why silver? This unholy thing; this thing which would ruin all of us.

The President * * * is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined—

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not think it discourteous or unfriendly of me, but I wish to inquire of him how much longer he will talk?

Mr. CONNALLY. About 3 or 4 minutes. And I thank the Senator very much for permitting me to do so. I am not a glutton. I appreciate what I have. And it is fairly satisfactory, but I will not trespass long.

This is what the Senator from Michigan said. He was not satisfied with all the other powers that had been given to the President. He said:

The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates.

But wait a moment.

The President is authorized in his discretion—

In the discretion of Congress? No; not in the discretion of the Senate. Oh, no. The President is authorized "in his discretion." The same President that is now in office, who has not changed the gold content of the dollar since he originally fixed its value. The same President we are talking about here tonight.

And to make different charges, or to collect different seigniorage for the coinage of silver of foreign production—

What? Silver from foreign lands. Why, we ought to shut it out under the immigration laws or the tariff laws. But the Senator from Michigan is willing for the President to buy foreign silver—than for the coinage of silver produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates, except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal-tender characteristics.

The Senator from Michigan was voting to make a silver dollar legal tender along with the gold dollar.

The President is authorized—

He was not satisfied with giving the President that power. He had to give him some more power.

The President is authorized, in addition to other powers—

The Senator from Michigan was piling on the powers, making of the President—what did he call him?—making of the President an economic monarch, a financial emperor.

The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to reduce the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar.

The President is further authorized—

And this is the language of the Senator from Michigan at a time—

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, how long does the Senator expect to continue?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just 3 minutes more. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very much afraid the Senator from Texas is going to be accused of filibustering.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; the Senator from New Jersey would not accuse the Senator from Texas of anything of that kind. And the Senator from Texas would not say anything which might cause offense, considering our respective circumstances and our proportions. [Laughter.]

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is all right.

Mr. CONNALLY. But if the Senator is filibustering, which I am not charging—

Mr. BARBOUR. No. I said I am afraid the Senator from Texas might be accused of filibustering.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would strike hands with him across the aisle, because I am not unacquainted with filibustering. That is no crime in my life. And if the Senator is filibustering he need not complain if he gets someone to help him a little.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am not complaining.

Mr. CONNALLY. Three other lines, and then I am through. This is the language of the Senator from Michigan at a time when the country was encompassed by economic stress and economic difficulties, at a time when business was disrupted, at a time when we were groping around seeking to correct the abuses under which we were suffering and at a time when the Senate was in calmness and could practice wisdom and work without division, trying to arrive at a remedy. And the Senator from Michigan voted for the bill.

Mr. President, 5 years is a long time in a republic, where people vote and run for office. Many currents and storms and zephyrs and other manifestations of disturbances in the elements may be generated during such a period. So we cannot judge the Senator from Michigan of today as of 1934.

The President is further authorized—

The Senator from Michigan was not satisfied with monkeying with the dollar. He went down to nickels and dimes. [Laughter.]

The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and with the gold dollar.

Mr. President, I do not want to put this speech in the bosom of the speech of the Senator from New Jersey, but I should like to have placed the entire act, Public, No. 87, Seventy-third Congress (H. R. 6979), into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. I shall not undertake to belabor the Senate with quoting all of it, but I have read some pertinent extracts from it. These are the things for which the Senator from Michigan voted. I particularly want to charge the Senate's memory with section 13.

All actions—

Not just some actions, not one or two actions of the President about buying gold and changing the value, but—

All actions—

Are approved by the Senator from Michigan, because he said in this law—

All actions—

And if it did not happen to rise to the dignity of an action—regulations, rules, orders, and proclamations heretofore taken, promulgated—

They may not be taken but simply promulgated—

All actions * * * made or issued by the President of the United States—

Not by Congress or by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator from Michigan is willing to include the Secretary of the Treasury—

All actions * * * made or issued by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury under the act of March 3, 1933, or under section 43 or section 45 of title III of the act of May 12, 1933—

These were the Thomas amendments, the silver and the gold and the paper money amendments—are hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed.

By Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, in 1934. I thank the Senator from New Jersey very much.

I ask that the act to which I referred be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public—No. 87—73d Congress]

[H. R. 6976]

An act to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the short title of this Act shall be the "Gold Reserve Act of 1934."

SEC. 2. (a) Upon the approval of this Act all right, title, and interest, and every claim of the Federal Reserve Board, of every Federal Reserve bank, and of every Federal Reserve agent, in and to any and all gold coin and gold bullion shall pass to and are hereby vested in the United States; and in payment therefor credits in equivalent amounts in dollars are hereby established in the Treasury in the accounts authorized under the sixteenth paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as heretofore and by this Act amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 467). Balances in such accounts shall be payable in gold certificates, which shall be in such form and in such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine. All gold so transferred, not in the possession of the United States, shall be held in custody for the United States and delivered upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Reserve banks, and the Federal Reserve agents shall give such instructions and shall take such action as may be necessary to assure that such gold shall be so held and delivered.

(b) Section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended in the following respects:

(1) The third sentence of the first paragraph is amended to read as follows: "They shall be redeemed in lawful money on demand at the Treasury Department of the United States, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, or at any Federal Reserve bank."

(2) So much of the third sentence of the second paragraph as precedes the proviso is amended to read as follows: "The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this Act, or bills of exchange endorsed by a member bank of any Federal Reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this Act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14, or gold certificates:"

(3) The first sentence of the third paragraph is amended to read as follows: "Every Federal Reserve bank shall maintain reserves in gold certificates or lawful money of not less than 35 per centum against its deposits and reserves in gold certificates of not less than 40 per centum against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation: Provided, however, That when the Federal Reserve agent holds gold certificates as collateral for Federal Reserve notes issued to the bank such gold certificates shall be counted as part of the reserve which such bank is required to maintain against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation."

(4) The fifth and sixth sentences of the third paragraph are amended to read as follows: "Notes presented for redemption at the Treasury of the United States shall be paid out of the redemption fund and returned to the Federal Reserve banks through which they were originally issued, and thereupon such Federal Reserve bank shall, upon demand of the Secretary of the Treasury, reimburse such redemption fund in lawful money or, if such Federal Reserve notes have been redeemed by the Treasurer in gold certificates, then such funds shall be reimbursed to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury in gold certificates, and such Federal Reserve bank shall, so long as any of its Federal Reserve notes remain outstanding, maintain with the Treasurer in gold certificates an amount sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary to provide for all redemptions to be made by the Treasurer. Federal Reserve notes received by the Treasurer otherwise than for redemption may be exchanged for gold certificates out of the redemption fund hereinafter provided and returned to the Reserve bank through which they were originally issued, or they may be returned to such bank for the credit of the United States."

(5) The fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs are amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Reserve Board shall require each Federal Reserve bank to maintain on deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum in gold certificates sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption of the Federal Reserve notes issued to such bank, but in no event less than 5 percent of the total amount of notes issued less the amount of gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve agent as collateral security; but such deposit of gold certificates shall be counted and included as part of the 40 per centum reserve hereinbefore required. The Board shall have the right, acting through the Federal Reserve agent, to grant in whole or in part, or to reject entirely the application of any Federal Reserve bank for Federal Reserve notes; but to the extent that such application may be granted the Federal Reserve Board shall, through its local Federal Reserve agent, supply Federal Reserve notes to the banks so applying, and such bank shall be charged with the amount of the notes issued to it and shall pay such rate of interest as may be established by the Federal Reserve Board on only that amount of such notes which equals the total amount of its outstanding Federal Reserve notes less the amount of gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve agent as collateral security. Federal Reserve notes issued to any such bank shall, upon delivery, together with such notes of such Federal Reserve bank as may be issued under section 13 of this Act upon security of United States 2 per centum Government bonds, become a first and paramount lien on all the assets of such bank.

"Any Federal Reserve bank may at any time reduce its liability for outstanding Federal Reserve notes by depositing with the Federal Reserve agent its Federal Reserve notes, gold certificates, or lawful money of the United States. Federal Reserve notes so deposited shall not be reissued, except upon compliance with the conditions of an original issue.

"The Federal Reserve agent shall hold such gold certificates or lawful money available exclusively for exchange for the outstanding Federal Reserve notes when offered by the Reserve bank of which he is a director. Upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury the Federal Reserve Board shall require the Federal Reserve agent to transmit to the Treasurer of the United States so much of the gold certificates held by him as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes as may be required for the exclusive purpose of the redemption of such Federal Reserve notes, but such gold certificates when deposited with the Treasurer shall be counted and considered as if collateral security on deposit with the Federal Reserve agent."

(6) The eighth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"All Federal Reserve notes and all gold certificates and lawful money issued to or deposited with any Federal Reserve agent under the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act shall hereafter be held for such agent, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, in the joint custody of himself and the Federal Reserve bank to which he is accredited. Such agent and such Federal Reserve bank shall be jointly liable for the safekeeping of such Federal Reserve notes, gold certificates, and lawful money. Nothing herein contained, however, shall be construed to prohibit a Federal Reserve agent from depositing gold certificates with the Federal Reserve Board, to be held by such Board subject to his order, or with the Treasurer of the United States for the purposes authorized by law."

(7) The sixteenth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold or of gold certificates with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States when tendered by any Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent for credit to its or his account with the Federal Reserve Board. The Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the form of receipt to be issued by the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer to the Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent making the deposit, and a duplicate of such receipt shall be delivered to the Federal Reserve Board by the Treasurer at Washington upon proper advices from any Assistant Treasurer that such deposit has been made. Deposits so made shall be held subject to the orders of the Federal Reserve Board and shall be payable in gold certificates on the order of the Federal Reserve Board to any Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent at the Treasury or at the Subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of such Federal Reserve bank or such Federal Reserve agent. The order used by the Federal Reserve Board in making such payments shall be signed by the governor or vice governor, or such other officers or members as the Board may by regulation prescribe. The form of such order shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury."

(8) The eighteenth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"Deposits made under this section standing to the credit of any Federal Reserve bank with the Federal Reserve Board shall, at the option of said bank, be counted as part of the lawful reserve which it is required to maintain against outstanding Federal Reserve notes, or as a part of the reserve it is required to maintain against deposits."

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulations issued hereunder, with the approval of the President, prescribe the conditions under which gold may be acquired and held, transported, melted or treated, imported, exported, or earmarked: (a) for industrial, professional, and artistic use; (b) by the Federal Reserve banks for the purpose of settling international balances; and, (c) for such other purposes as in his judgment are not inconsistent with the purposes of this Act. Gold in any form may be acquired, transported, melted or treated, imported, exported, or earmarked or held in custody for foreign or domestic account (except on behalf of the United States) only to the extent permitted by, and subject to the conditions prescribed in, or pursuant to, such regulations. Such regulations may exempt from the provisions of this section, in whole or in part, gold situated in the Philippine Islands or other places beyond the limits of the continental United States.

SEC. 4. Any gold withheld, acquired, transported, melted or treated, imported, exported, or earmarked or held in custody, in violation of this Act or of any regulations issued hereunder, or licenses issued pursuant thereto, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law; and in addition any person failing to comply with the provisions of this Act or of any such regulations or licenses, shall be subject to a penalty equal to twice the value of the gold in respect of which such failure occurred.

SEC. 5. No gold shall hereafter be coined, and no gold coin shall hereafter be paid out or delivered by the United States: Provided, however, That coinage may continue to be executed by the mints of the United States for foreign countries in accordance with the Act of January 29, 1874 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 367). All gold coin of the United States shall be withdrawn from circulation, and, together with all other gold owned by the United States, shall be formed into bars of such weights and degrees of fineness as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

SEC. 6. Except to the extent permitted in regulations which may be issued hereunder by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, no currency of the United States shall be redeemed in gold: Provided, however, That gold certificates owned by the Federal Reserve banks shall be redeemed at such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, are necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States: And provided further, That the reserve for United States notes and for Treasury notes of 1890, and the security for gold certificates (including the gold certificates held in the Treasury for credits payable therein) shall be maintained in gold bullion equal to the dollar amounts required by law, and the reserve for Federal Reserve notes shall be maintained in gold certificates, or in credits payable in gold certificates maintained with the Treasurer of the United States under section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as heretofore and by this Act amended.

No redemptions in gold shall be made except in gold bullion bearing the stamp of a United States mint or assay office in an amount equivalent at the time of redemption to the currency surrendered for such purpose.

SEC. 7. In the event that the weight of the gold dollar shall at any time be reduced, the resulting increase in value of the gold held by the United States (including the gold held as security for gold certificates and as a reserve for any United States notes and for Treasury notes of 1890) shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt; and, in the event that the weight of the gold dollar shall at any time be increased, the resulting decrease in value of the gold held as a reserve for any United States notes and for Treasury notes of 1890, and as security for gold certificates shall be compensated by transfers of gold bullion from the general fund, and there is hereby appropriated an amount sufficient to provide for such transfers and to cover the decrease in value of the gold in the general fund.

SEC. 8. Section 3700 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 734) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3700. With the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase gold in any amounts, at home or abroad, with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States, authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest; any provision of law relating to the maintenance of parity, or limiting the purposes for which any of such obligations, coin, or currency, may be issued, or requiring any such obligations to be offered as a popular loan or on a competitive basis, or to be offered or issued at not less than par, to the contrary notwithstanding. All gold so purchased shall be included as an asset of the general fund of the Treasury."

SEC. 9. Section 3699 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 733) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3699. The Secretary of the Treasury may anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt, by a period not exceeding one year, from time to time, either with or without a rebate of interest upon the coupons, as to him may seem expedient; and he may sell gold in any amounts, at home or abroad, in such manner and at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest, and the proceeds of any gold so sold shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury may sell the gold which is required to be maintained as a reserve or as security for currency issued by the United States, only to the extent necessary to maintain such currency at a parity with the gold dollar."

SEC. 10. (a) For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, directly or through such agencies as he may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section. An annual audit of such fund shall be made and a report thereof submitted to the President.

(b) To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of the receipts which are directed to be covered into the Treasury under section 7 hereof, the sum of $2,000,000,000, which sum when available shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a stabilization fund (hereinafter called the "fund") under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States. The fund shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and in his discretion, for any purpose in connection with carrying out the provisions of this section, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States of any portions of the fund which the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may from time to time determine, are not currently required for stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. The proceeds of all sales and investments and all earnings and interest accruing under the operations of this section shall be paid into the fund and shall be available for the purposes of the fund.

(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire two years after the date of enactment of this act, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated; but the President may extend such period for not more than one additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, with the approval of the President, such rules and regulations as the Secretary may deem necessary or proper to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. Paragraph (b) (2), of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, Numbered 10, Seventy-third Congress), is amended by adding two new sentences at the end thereof, reading as follows:

"Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 per centum of its present weight. The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire two years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than one additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency."

Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes," approved May 12, 1933, is amended by adding at the end of said paragraph (2) the following:

"The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio so fixed, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined standard silver dollars that the tenderer of such silver for coinage would receive in standard silver dollars.

"The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates.

"The President is authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe different terms and conditions and to make different charges, or to collect different seigniorage, for the coinage of silver of foreign production than for the coinage of silver produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates, except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal tender characteristics of existing silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States, or in circulation.

"The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to reduce the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar.

"The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and with the gold dollar."

SEC. 13. All actions, regulations, rules, orders, and proclamations heretofore taken, promulgated, made or issued by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury, under the act of March 9, 1933, or under section 43 or section 45 of title III of the act of May 12, 1933, are hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed.

SEC. 14. (a) The Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, is further amended as follows:

(1) By adding at the end of section 1 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 752; Supp. VII, title 31, sec. 752), a new paragraph as follows:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of the foregoing paragraph, the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time, when he deems it to be in the public interest, offer such bonds otherwise than as a popular loan and he may make allotments in full, or reject or reduce allotments upon any applications whether or not the offering was made as a popular loan."

(2) By inserting in section 8 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 771), after the words "certificates of indebtedness", a comma and the words "Treasury bills".

(3) By striking out the figures "$7,500,000,000" where they appear in section 18 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 753) and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000,000,000."

(4) By adding thereto two new sections, as follows:

"SEC. 19. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any obligations authorized by this act may be issued for the purchase, redemption, or refunding, at or before maturity, of any outstanding bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills, of the United States, or to obtain funds for such purchase, redemption, or refunding, under such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"SEC. 20. The Secretary of the Treasury may issue any obligations authorized by this act and maturing not more than one year from the date of their issue on a discount basis and payable at maturity without interest. Any such obligations may also be offered for sale on a competitive basis under such regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the decisions of the Secretary in respect of any issue shall be final."

(b) Section 6 of the Victory Liberty Loan Act (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 767; Supp. VII, title 31, secs. 767-767a) is amended by striking out the words "for refunding purposes", together with the preceding comma, at the end of the first sentence of subsection (a).

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue gold certificates in such form and in such denominations as he may determine, against any gold held by the Treasurer of the United States, except the gold fund held as a reserve for any United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890. The amount of gold certificates issued and outstanding shall at no time exceed the value, at the legal standard, of the gold so held against gold certificates.

SEC. 15. As used in this act the term "United States" means the Government of the United States; the term "the continental United States" means the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Territory of Alaska; the term "currency of the United States" means currency which is legal tender in the United States, and includes United States notes, Treasury notes of 1890, gold certificates, silver certificates, Federal Reserve notes, and circulating notes of Federal Reserve banks and national banking associations; and the term "person" means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation, including the Federal Reserve Board, Federal Reserve banks, and Federal Reserve agents. Wherever reference is made in this act to equivalents as between dollars or currency of the United States and gold, one dollar or one dollar face amount of any currency of the United States equals such a number of grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, as, at the time referred to, are contained in the standard unit of value, that is, so long as the President shall not have altered by proclamation the weight of the gold dollar under the authority of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933, as heretofore and by this act amended, twenty-five and eight-tenths grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, and thereafter such a number of grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, as the President shall have fixed under such authority.

SEC. 16. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 17. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved, January 30, 1934.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator for his very welcome contribution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD be so arranged that the remarks of the Senator from Texas, if agreeable to him, follow the conclusion of my address.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New Jersey would allow me to make that request. I would prefer to do so.

May I request, Mr. President, that the remarks which the Senator from Texas, by the kindness, generosity, and grace of the Senator from New Jersey, had the honor to submit to the Senate, be placed at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

During the delivery of Mr. BARBOUR's speech,

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senate is honored by many guests tonight. I think they should be cautioned that merely slight conversation creates a murmur which interferes with the performance of the duties of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. Let the Chair remind those in the galleries that they are guests of the Senate. Senators are attempting to transact very important business, and it is against the rules for the occupants of the galleries to indulge in conversation if it is annoying on the floor; and it is. Order must be preserved in the galleries. As the Senator from Vermont says, constant talking, although it may not be loud, causes disturbance on the floor of the Senate.

After the conclusion of Mr. BARBOUR's speech,

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. BULOW, from the Committee on Civil Service, reported favorably the nomination of Arthur S. Flemming, of the District of Columbia, to be a Civil Service Commissioner, vice Samuel H. Ordway, Jr., resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

ADDITIONAL BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Additional bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

S. 2741. A bill to amend section 308 (an administrative provision) of the Tariff Act of 1930; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 2742. A bill to provide an allowance to civilian officers and employees of the United States permanently transferred to a new post of duty equal to the cost of transporting their family and personal goods to such new post; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of indemnity for losses suffered and damages sustained as a result of the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Claims.

NEUTRALITY OR WAR?—EDITORIAL FROM SEATTLE STAR AND TACOMA TIMES

[Mr. BONE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Seattle Star and the Tacoma Times of June 23, 1939, entitled "Neutrality or War?" which appears in the Appendix.]

KEEP AMERICA OUT OF WAR—ADDRESS BY DR. GERALD B. WINROD

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Dr. Gerald B. Winrod on April 30, 1939, on the subject Keep America Out of War, which appears in the Appendix.]

STABILIZATION FUND AND WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, would the Senator mind if I suggested the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. I really do not care to have one, but I thank the Senator for his kindness in thinking of it.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the question now before the Senate and the question now before the country is a very simple question indeed. We are not debating tonight whether it is advisable to devalue the dollar further. We are not debating whether or not we intend to change the value of our money either in terms of gold or in terms of foreign exchange. We are debating one thing and one thing only, namely, Shall we give to the President of the United States the power to further devalue the dollar, or, having once given him that power, and now having the opportunity to recapture it, shall we get it back and keep it, and, if advisable, devalue the dollar by ourselves by a law enacted by the Congress? That is all there is to the pending proposition.

No one maintains that if we give this power to the President he is going to devalue the dollar further. Indeed, in an interview given out at Hyde Park, I believe he is quoted as saying that the odds were, he said, about 10 to 1 that he would not use the power if Congress gave it to him.

If the President of the United States tomorrow, next week, next month, or next year, feels that it is advisable, for the good of this Nation, for the good of the people of this country, for the economy of this country, for the welfare of this country, that the dollar be further devalued, he can make such recommendation at the desk of the Senate, where it will be read, and at the other end of the Capitol, in the House of Representatives, where it will be read, and if the Congress thinks there is merit to the recommendation of the President, we can devalue the dollar within a week.

It would be supposed, from the futile arguments made on this floor, that if in the future it should become advisable to devalue the dollar, and we do not give this power to the President, my goodness, there would be no way under God's eternal sun by which we could devalue the dollar if we wanted to. That is childish; it is not worthy of debate; it is so void of any logic that it hardly merits discussion.

It may be advisable in the future to devalue further our dollar, depending on conditions which we do not now know; but if that time should come, whether we give the President this power or whether we do not give him the power, Congress could devalue the dollar if it decided to do so by passing a bill declaring what the value of the dollar shall be in terms of gold. The bill would go to the President, and if he should sign it, that would be the value of the dollar in terms of gold, and if the President should veto the bill and it should come back to the Congress and two-thirds of both branches should decide that they still wanted to devalue the dollar anyway, they could pass the bill over the President's veto and still devalue the dollar, whether the President wanted it devalued or not.

Let us get it straight that the only thing now pending before this body is a simple matter of policy, whether Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the right and authority and the sole power to coin money and fix the weight and value and standard thereof, shall keep that power until such time as it feels it may want to exercise it, or whether it shall say in advance that it transfers the power to the President to use it as he sees fit.

Mr. President, this matter is just exactly like the neutrality bill. I am in favor of neutrality; every Member of the Senate is in favor of neutrality; every Member of the House of Representatives is in favor of neutrality, and I suppose nearly every person in the United States is in favor of neutrality. But when we come to writing a neutrality bill before a war actually happens, we are in the situation of a doctor who attempts to write a prescription for a patient before he knows from what disease or difficulty the patient is suffering.

That is exactly the case of the bill before us. While no emergency exists, we are not asked to give the President this power so that he may devalue the dollar tomorrow or next week or next month, but we are asked to give it to him merely in case at some time away off in the future he may think it wise to devalue the dollar.

For my part, I am of the very definite opinion that if the time shall come again when it will be wise or necessary or expedient to change the value of the dollar, then the Congress should take the appropriate action, and if the time shall come when it is necessary or wise or expedient to change the value of the dollar and the President thinks that to be the case, all he will have to do will be to make such a recommendation to the Congress, and the Congress, if it agrees, can take action within a week and the dollar will be devalued.

Yet we have heard, in the arguments when the bill was pending in the Senate, and in similar arguments from some of the columnists, and, indeed, from interviews given out by some officials in the administration, that, in effect, if we do not give the President this power and it shall become necessary to devalue the dollar for the good of the United States, it will just be too bad, because the dollar will never be devalued again. Every Member of the Senate knows that is childish; every Senator on this floor knows that is not the case.

Mr. President, when we passed the original devaluation bill in January 1934, what were the conditions in the United States and abroad in comparison with the conditions in the United States today and the conditions abroad today? In 1934, when we passed the act, it was within 9 months of the time when every bank in the United States was closed; it was within 9 months of the time an entire administration had gone out of power and an entirely new administration had come into power. It was at a time, as the Senator from Oklahoma has said, when wheat was selling at a very low figure, when corn was selling for a very low price, when cattle and hogs were down to a very low price, and it was at a time when Germany was not being governed by the present chancellor.

It was at a time when France and Great Britain had depreciated their currencies. It was at a time when there was the lowest ebb of public confidence, the greatest mass of private debt, and the most unprecedented low-scale prices within the lifetime of most of the people of this Republic. So in that period of great chaos, in that period of uncertainty, it was felt that the dollar was too high in relation to commodities, and, as all nations were attempting to depreciate their currencies in an effort to attract foreign trade to themselves and away from nations which did not depreciate their currencies, it was deemed advisable by Congress to turn this power, among others, over to the President of the United States.

Let me burn this statement into the thoughts of my colleagues with letters of fire: There was no stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 at the time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield, for a question, of course.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator to the fact that the power to devalue the dollar was contained in an act passed in 1933. The power was conferred on the President in the Agricultural Adjustment Act which was approved on May 12, 1933, and the President, acting under that authority, proceeded to bid up gold, and by the 30th day of January 1934 he had the gold price bid up to where he wanted it. The Gold Reserve Act was passed on the 30th day of January 1934, and the next day the President stabilized the dollar at its present value of fifteen-and-five-twenty-first grains of gold.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma. That is a case in point. All these actions were taken in 1933 or early in 1934. There was no $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund in those days which stabilized our currency in relation to the currencies of France and England and other nations. Congress had not taken any of the actions which have since been taken.

The situation was entirely different and any Senator would be justified in having taken one view by virtue of the condition then existing, and taking another view today when the conditions are utterly changed, when there is a $2,000,000,000 fund with which to support the American dollar in all the exchanges of the world, and back of that $2,000,000,000 there are $16,000,000,000 of gold in the United States, which is about 60 percent of all the gold in the world. If there is any such situation existing today, comparable to that of 1934, I do not know where it is.

Therefore, there is only one thing before this body tonight. Shall we recapture, now that the time limit has expired, the right vested in Congress by the Constitution to fix the value of the money of the country, or, with no need—for the President himself says it is 10 to 1 if we give him the power he will never use it—shall we give up that power in advance, without an emergency, to the President of the United States and deprive ourselves, should future opportunity or need arise, to take action which Congress may think is wise in relation to the value of money?

This is what we do when we give the President the power to devalue the dollar: We give him the power to declare by Executive decree that all tariffs shall be reduced. Mark that. He can reduce every tariff in the country against foreign importation by Executive decree if we give him this power and if he desires to exercise it.

He can by Executive decree reduce the wages and the salaries of every worker in this Nation who works for wages and salaries if he desires to exercise the power to devalue the dollar, if Congress confers it on him. He can by Executive decree increase the cost of living to every salaried and wage earner in America should he decide to exercise the power, if Congress gives it to him, to devalue the dollar. He can decrease by Executive decree the purchasing power of all the wage earners of this Nation should he decide, in the event we give him this power, further to devalue the dollar. He can increase the cost to our citizens of all imports coming into the United States, by Executive decree, should we decide to give him the power to devalue the dollar and should he exercise it. He can decrease in terms of wealth the customs revenues of the Nation by Executive decree, should we give him the power and should he exercise it.

What is involved here? Mr. President, let us tear down the camouflage, let us tear away the veil. Let us look at what is really involved in this issue. What is it? Daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, all of us, the President of the United States, Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, people in the administration and out of it, point to the dictatorships in Russia, Germany, and Italy and say, "What a horrible thing it is to have to live under a dictatorial form of government. What chaos it brings." And while we denounce these strange and novel forms of government in one breath here in the Congress, by request of the President from the other end of the Avenue, we adopt the very measures which imitate the dictator system of which the power to fix money is one.

In one breath we assert that democracy is a great boon; that we have a representative government; that power rests in the representatives and in the people of the Nation; and by legislative action we immediately go back on all we have said, and pass laws one after the other which make of our Government at least an invitation to and a reflection of the very systems of government which we denounce.

What is the difference between the Government of Russia, of Germany, and Italy, and the Government of Great Britain and the United States, for example? The sole difference is that all the dictatorial countries have laws for unemployment; they have laws for the army and they have laws for the navy and for railroads and for agriculture, just as we have; but in those countries laws are made by decree, whereas in this country and in Great Britain, thank God, up to this hour the power to legislate resides in the representatives of the people.

Mr. President, ours is a representative form of government. There is not a representative form of government, because when an election is held over there it is held under such auspices that the people can, in the main, vote only as the head of the government wants them to vote. That is the reason why, having been a party, as practically every Senator and every Member of the House has, to giving the President some power in the past of a temporary nature to meet a certain emergency, to fit a certain condition, and that time having passed, with the growth of these dictators, with the retreat of democracy, with the imitations of democracy by dictatorial forms of government, I feel that the hour has come when, if we do not want to walk the same road that other nations have walked, we should take action to steer our course away from it. They all walked it gradually; not overnight, but step by step, step by step, they have arrived at their present state of governmental philosophy. I think we have gone far enough in that direction, and that the time has come to restore to the Congress and to the people of America the time-honored means and traditions and methods of transacting governmental business by having power which the Constitution vests in the Congress remain in the Congress, to be used by the Congress whenever an emergency demanding its use shall arise.

I now wish to call to the Senate's attention a few remarks of the Chief Executive of the United States which appeared in all the newspapers of the Nation, and which appeared also in the Chicago Daily Tribune of Wednesday, June 28, a copy of which I happen to have, and from which I shall read to the extent of a paragraph or two:

In his conference at Hyde Park, the President, in clipped syllables, denied flatly that he had any intention of exercising his fading power to devalue the dollar but insisted the right should be lodged with him because it might prove important during a national or international crisis. He set at 10 to 1 the betting odds against further devaluation.

In other words, he himself said, "I cannot do this without the Congress of the United States giving me the power, and even if Congress gives me the power, I do not expect to use it; indeed, the odds are 10 to 1 that I shall never use it." Which leads me to ask, Why in the world is he not content? If there is no immediate emergency, if he does not intend to use it, if the odds are 10 to 1 against its use, why in the world does he not let it reside in the Congress of the United States until the time comes when he thinks perhaps it may be wise further to devalue the dollar, in which event all he has to do is to point out the circumstances, the conditions of the crisis, the particular events which make it mandatory or necessary or wise, and Congress can act upon it instantly. That is all there is in this bill—whether we want to lodge that power at the Executive end of the Avenue or whether we want to keep it right here.

I read further:

The President asserted that the Senate action was not final by any means. He referred to approval by the House of extension of his monetary powers, which, in the face of Senate disapproval, forces the measure into conference. His manner indicated, however, that he has little hope the conference will bring a return of the power he covets.

He accused the coalition of silver bloc New Dealers, conservative Democrats, and Republicans of returning the control of international exchange to Wall Street from the Treasury. Control is going back to the hands of bankers, he said, who profited in 1930 and 1931 by international currency manipulation which cost Americans hundreds of millions of dollars.

I thought we had put the stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 down there to stop that very thing, and I venture the remark that if these bankers can amass a fund of $2,000,000,000 that is available instantly, that can be used to buy and sell the currencies of the world, then they are a great deal richer bankers than any I ever heard of.

They cannot begin to match in volume, in finesse, in information, or in anything else the ability of the Government in the field of international currency stabilization. Here are $2,000,000,000 backed by a Government with $16,000,000,000 in gold; and if $2,000,000,000 should not stabilize the currency of this country, we could double the amount, we could treble the amount, indeed, we could increase it eight times before our resources would be exhausted.

So it is absolutely silly to say that the international bankers are going to manipulate the currency of this country. To show how absolutely silly, in my judgment, that statement is, let us go back to 1920, 1921, 1922, and 1923. What happened then? France devalued its currency; Great Britain devalued its currency; but we never devalued our currency. What happened? Did we go down into the doldrums? Did that wreck our economic structure? Were people out of work? Was there unemployment? Were there bad times? Not at all. From the period of 1922 to 1929, although the foundation was unsound insofar as money valuation was concerned, it was otherwise sound, and it was one of the contributing factors to the prosperity that was then enjoyed.

Therefore, in my judgment, if without a $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund we could go through those years of prosperity, with governments all over the world devaluing their currencies, and we did not need to devalue ours, how much more readily can we go through the present time without further devaluation, when we have a $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund with which to support our currency in any market in the world.

This statement, as it was printed in some of the press of the country, shocked me at first, until I applied some reason to it. I visioned that on tomorrow morning, July 1, which is just 15 minutes away from the moment I am speaking, the sun would not shine. I visioned that all the wheat out on the prairie would stop growing; that every railroad train would cease to run; and I thought that the water in all the streams would dry up, and there would not be a mouthful of food for a person in the Republic; that the farmers down South would go out in the cottonfields and find them all withered; that up in Vermont the granite would turn to putty and no longer would make the beautiful building stone which bedecks the Republic. Indeed, I thought that never again would a President of the United States go across the country in an attempt to enlist the people in any particular cause in which he might be interested; and, above all things, I knew that in the State of Wisconsin never again would a round, solid cheese be produced from the cows of that beloved and progressive State. [Laughter.]

Then I had another view. It seemed to me that if everything was going backward all the nations of the world which owe us money would begin paying their war debts. I even thought, to change the scheme of things, that the Chief Executive would go abroad and visit in England in order to show the English people the kind of ruler we have in the United States. Never again would my ears hear the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] in his eloquent efforts to send all the beloved colored brethren of our Republic to Dark Continent.

But there was one ray of hope that came down from the clouds, even like a bolt of lightning; for I knew that the debts which my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] wants the people of this Nation to be in a position to pay would not have to be paid after all; and I could see no reason, therefore, for continued and future sessions of the Congress. I thought that after all there might be some good in the end of the world, which the President predicted.

Tomorrow will be Saturday, just 13 minutes away from this good hour. Tomorrow will be the first of July. I have a feeling—I may be wrong—that even in New York City overnight grass will not be growing in the streets. I have a feeling that the banks will all open, that all the merchandising establishments will have their wares on display; that people will be going back and forth to the world's fair; and that down in North Carolina Mount Pisgah in all its glory will kiss the first refulgent rays of the golden rising sun.

I have a feeling, Mr. President, that the end of the world will not come, whether Congress grants this power or whether it does not grant the power. I have a feeling that if an emergency should arise in the future, as it may, in which it may be wise for us further to devalue the dollar, when that emergency arises and the President of the United States, whether he be our present President or another, calls it to the attention of the Congress, if the action is wise the Congress will pass a law further devaluing the dollar and fixing the value of the money at a lower value in gold than its present value.

That is all there is in the bill—whether in advance, before an emergency arises, we wish to give the power to the President to devalue the dollar, or whether we wish to retain it until that emergency comes, and then, upon the suggestion of the President, agree or disagree with the action he recommends. That is all. Whether we give it to him or do not give it to him will not matter; for we will devalue the dollar whenever Congress makes up its mind that it is wise to devalue it. One can bet on it. The very day that a majority of the Congress—this or any other—feels that it is wise further to devalue the dollar of the United States, one can bet his last cent that that very day the bill will be introduced and speeded on its way to passage, and when it is passed it will result in further devaluing the dollar of our country, and not until then.

I was not one of the silver bloc. I was not one of the conservative Democratic bloc. I was not one of the Republican bloc in whatever deal or agreement was made. I voted against the silver proposal. I wanted to vote, if opportunity presented, for the continuance of the stabilization fund. I did not want to vote to give the President further power to devalue the dollar, because I think conditions today are utterly different from the conditions which existed in 1933 and early in 1934, when the laws which are the subject of debate were passed. There is absolutely no comparison.

I do not mean to say that if we should give the President this power he would abuse it. I do not think he would. I do not think he would use it any further, as far as we can now see. I do not think he now intends to use it, as far as he can see. Therefore, why give him the power, which always rests in Congress? It does not disappear. It does not evaporate. It is always where he can get it if the people's representatives want him to have it. It is always right here; and if some emergency down the road of time arises which makes it necessary for us to take further action in this field of legislation, that is what we are here for, and that is what we ought to be here for and ought to do if it is necessary for the country that we take such action.

Mr. President, I do not want to be captious or mean in what I am about to say, or to draw invidious comparisons; but I defy any man to read the list of authorities and experts, the professors and teachers of economics in colleges from Maine to California who oppose this proposal and match it with a list of students, economists, professors, or whatever you please, who are in favor of the proposal. In other words, if we go back to the lingo of 1932, the brains of the country are opposed to the brain trust. If there is any group which has studied and is familiar with the history and consequences of currency depreciation in the world, not only here, but in Rome, in England under Henry the Eighth, in France under Napoleon, in connection with the South Sea Bubble, the Mississippi Bubble and John Law, and depreciation in Holland during the tulip craze which swept that country, they are enumerated on the pamphlet which was read into the RECORD by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] a while ago.

What group of people in America has come forward and asked for this power for the President? The bankers? No. Big business? No. Little business? No. College professors? No. The economists? No. The railroads, which are on the verge of bankruptcy? Not that I know of. Labor? Perhaps it has, but I have not heard of it. The farmers? A few, perhaps, but not any considerable number. Then who? Who?

It seems to me that the President stands almost unsupported by the people of this Nation, by classes, by professions, by avocations, by wealth, by poverty, or by any standard which may be employed. He stands absolutely unsupported by the people of the Nation, insofar as I know, in having the Congress give him the powers which he has requested further to devalue the dollar. On the other hand, we have an array of students of the question—not rich men, not international bankers, not Wall Street fellows, not speculators, not persons allied with the money ring, for the most part not in any way connected with high finance, but students, teachers of the question, persons whom the President sometimes consults, or at least the class from which he frequently draws advice.

They stand opposed to the request. Fifty-five of the outstanding experts and economists of the country stand in a solid phalanx and tell the Congress to retain these powers; for if the time comes when it is wise further to devalue the dollar, Congress can then devalue it by law or give the power to the President to do so.

There is a difference between military preparedness for international hostilities under the heading of war and financial preparedness or armament. Financial preparedness or armament has to do with money, credits, trade, and things of that sort. Military or naval preparedness has to do with guns, men, ships, supplies, organizations, and what not. The difference between the two is that we cannot build a battleship in less than 42 months; we cannot train a soldier overnight; we cannot make a machine gun or a cannon except in a plant with trained men and at an expenditure of time. However, we can prepare ourselves financially overnight, insofar as changing the value of our money is concerned, if financial hostilities break out.

We could devalue the dollar in a week if desired. We could start such legislation in the Congress, and if there were enough sentiment in the Senate and at the other end of the Capitol we could act on it in a night, or in a week at the outside. Therefore there is no financial war which any nation or group of nations could declare which we could not meet with financial preparedness in a week, 2 weeks, or a month. That is the reason why Congress does not have to give up the power. Now that the emergency which first called for the transfer of that power has passed, Congress can now safely retain the power until hostilities again break out on the international financial front.

If the achievement of financial preparedness required a long time and a cumbersome method, as does the achievement of military preparedness, we should have to lodge such a power with the President. But that is not the case. I do not believe there is a Senator on the floor who, in his heart of hearts, will contend that if it became necessary for the dollar to be further devalued Congress could not be called into session, if it were not in session, and pass the necessary legislation within a period of 10 days or 2 weeks.

No one will challenge that statement, I believe, in honesty. If that is true, why in the name of common sense should we take this great power, which primarily was lodged in the Congress by the framers of the Constitution and set forth in that document, and give it to the Executive, who does not represent the people in a lawmaking sense, when we ourselves were elected particularly to deal above all other things with that power, because it is an express and not an implied power in the Constitution?

Mr. President, I note that we are now in Saturday morning. It is slightly after 12 o'clock. I think, to be exact—my eyes being fairly good—that it is about 1 minute after 12. There is a point of view, therefore, we having gotten over into Saturday, which I think is appropriate for a Saturday morning discussion.

Why do we have international currency depreciation? Why did we devalue the dollar? The first thing we ought to do in this troubled world occasionally is to try to diagnose the disease we call "depression," to isolate as many of the germs as we can, so that we can evolve the proper medicine and antitoxin with which to meet it.

Now, listen to me for a moment, if you please, and see if this makes good, ordinary, hardheaded, common horse sense.

When France and Great Britain devalued their money, I have a feeling, which I cannot prove but I think everyone will concede, that Great Britain devalued her money primarily because France started to devalue hers.

Mr. President, may we have order? This is a very important argument I am making now, and I hope it will convert any wavering Senators, and I should like to have their attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped for order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. For a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator if he can advise me whether this is the end of the calendar day of June 30 and the beginning of the calendar day of July 1, or whether it is some other day?

Mr. TYDINGS. I can advise the Senator as to that, and I can do it almost instantaneously. The official time of the Senate of the United States on any and all occasions is fixed by the clock over the desk of the Vice President, and, for verification, by the clock over the door of the Senate which leads to the House of Representatives. In order to be exactly specific, and in order that there may be no question about the exact time, in answer to the Senator's interrogatory, at this moment it is 4 minutes past midnight, Saturday morning, July 1, 1939.

I hope I have fully answered the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. TYDINGS. For a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Maryland has been in the Senate longer than the Senator from Vermont, and he doubtless can answer this question for the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will if I can.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator know whether or not the Journal shows the fact when it is important to have such an event recorded in the Journal?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is another point in my argument which I am just warming up to, if the Senator will bear with me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Maryland will not let me interrupt him.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate what the Senator has said.

Mr. President, I do want to make, in all seriousness, an argument. Senators may disagree with me, may think there is no point in it, but I want to make it in a sincere way and I hope in a logical way; and I think it is a point of view which deserves the consideration of even the opponents of this measure.

Out in the western towns, particularly in the days of the frontier, every man carried a gun. The reason why every man carried a gun was because every other man carried a gun; that is all.

One day a few fellows felt that toting a gun around was rather heavy and uncomfortable; they were not using guns as much as they had been using them 5 or 10 years before; and a fellow said to his wife, "Mary, I do not believe I will put on my gun today." So the movement spread, until if you go out in the West today you will find that there are very, very, very few men who carry a gun.

Currency stabilization and currency depreciation are very much like that. You will never, never, never, never get this world back on a sound-currency basis, if you want to, while every nation walks around with a great, big currency club on its shoulder. Just put that down as a fact. There is nothing, except perhaps armaments and the threat of war, that is unsettling the social, economic, and I will even say the spiritual life of the world today like the currency wars that have gone on and are likely to go on.

Any nation that can afford to set a good example, when the whole world is in a state of economic fear, by taking that club off its shoulder, is going to give to every other nation that wants sound currency an invitation to come along and take the club off its shoulder, too. The more clubs you put on your shoulder, the more clubs the other fellow will put on his shoulder as long as he can get them. It is just like the case of battleships. The more battleships you build, the more battleships the other fellow is going to build; and if you want to bring about a basis of currency stabilization in this Nation and in the world, you want a leadership away from currency wars, and not a leadership in favor of currency wars.

That is the point of view I want to leave with you. Indeed, I should like to see the President of the United States, through whatever medium he thought wise, endeavor not only to stabilize our currency through international arrangement with Great Britain and France, as is now the case, but stabilize as far as he can without making us the "goat," without giving us the hod to carry up the ladder of time. I should like to see him encourage the people of Germany and Italy and Russia and Belgium and Holland and Switzerland, and all the countries of the world to enter into some sort of agreement for the stabilization of international currency, to lay a foundation upon which international business could be done, and international contracts for a long time could be made for the purchase of goods and supplies. That way leads to democracy; that way leads to peace; that way leads away from war. The way we are proceeding leads to war, because war is not fought with guns and cannon and men and shells. It is fought with money. You can starve a people to death, if you have money power, even beyond your own national limits, just as quickly as you can starve them to death by locking them up in a jail and depriving them of food.

What the world wants is cooperation on business lines, and not more threats and financial clubs put on the shoulders of this or any other Nation. Until we take off our gun—we being the biggest Nation in the whole lot, the strongest one financially in the whole lot, towering a million miles in height, with 16,000,000,000 foot-pounds of gold muscles in our arms and legs, a Nation of rich natural resources—if we do not lay down our gun, how in the name of common sense can we expect the other nations of the world to lay down their guns?

What is the purpose of the stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000? One purpose only, and that is to do just the opposite of what this power held over the people of this Nation, and held over the people of other nations, is going to do to financial stability. The equalization fund is cooperative, helpful, a matter of mutual assistance, leadership, understanding, and promotion of trade. The power to devalue money in the hands of the President is an antidote to that, the antithesis of the equalization fund, for it is a constant threat that keeps every other nation on the tip-toe, in anxiety if you please; and they, in turn, marshal every force and asset they have, because we have marshaled every force and asset we have.

Yes; I should like to go further than 'o try to bring the nations to an understanding on the stabilization of currency. I should like to bring them into a conference for disarmament, for the way to end war is not to build battleships or to make cannon. I am going to vote for our Army and our Navy as long as the other fellow builds up his, and he is going to vote for his army and navy as long as we build up ours; but I should like to see coupled with this question of currency stabilization a call for disarmament to a peacetime basis so that the tremendous revenues which are now going into battleships and guns and cannon and airplanes should go into roads and hospitals and other things that every community of this Nation needs a thousands times more than it needs a battleship.

I would go further than that. I would try to encourage every nation on the face of the earth to take our surpluses, particularly of the farm, as well as the factory, and we would take their surpluses. We would swap wheat for rubber, cotton for tin, and other things I might mention, so that there would be a greater exchange of surpluses, a greater exchange of goods; for the greater the exchange of goods, the more work there is for the people in this and every other nation.

Then I would drag out from the closet the skeleton of 21 years, and I would really try to settle the war debts, and clean up the whole international debris at one time. When I came to settling the war debts, I do not mean that I would say, "You do not owe us a dollar, any one of our Allies"; but I would settle the debts with the humanities in mind. I would not forget that after we went into the war on April 6, 1917, our Allies lost several hundred thousand men killed on the field of battle while we were training our Army over here; and with the money we loaned them they bought from our people, in large part, the supplies with which they carried on the war. While I would not, by any means, let that wipe out the war debts, I would let it be a big factor as a matter of justice and humanity, and I would meet the debtors with that spirit; and if they came to me in that spirit I would be willing, as a Senator, to do my part to ratify such an agreement.

But this business of acrimony is not getting us any money. All we are doing is making fun of the fact that we are not being paid. We are not even trying to arrange a settlement, as a lawyer or a businessman tries to do when he has a difficult debt to collect. We are not trying. This great Nation, which has more wealth and more power and more opportunity to bring about order than any other, is not trying to bring about disarmament, so far as I know. It is trying in some degree to increase foreign trade. Whether we agree with the policy or not, it is making an honest effort to do that; but if we give the President this power to devalue the dollar further, we are simply putting one more financial battleship in the international financial battleship race.

It has no place in America at the present time. This country is not going to be a dictatorship; it is not going to walk the road some other nations have walked, because the American people are sound at heart, and they are not going to be the first really to take the steps which bring such a possibility to reality.

Men in this body are going to point it out, men in the other body are going to point it out, the press of the Nation is going to point it out, and we can start today to keep America democratic and to help protect the international economy and good will by not giving this authority to the President, which he himself says he would not use. He says it is 10 to 1 that he would not use it. "I only want it as a sort of a threat," his words imply, "so that I can have this as a club in case they do something again."

It is not possible to build a world order with that sort of thing going on. It is not possible to build a personal friendship, to build a business, to build a name, to build anything, except by cooperation, and the strong man owes it to the weak man to take the lead in cooperation, or he is not a strong man after all.

Mr. President, I was always fond of the number 17, always have been fond of it, and looking at the official clock over the distinguished Nevadan, who is President pro tempore of this body, I see that it is now 17 minutes past 12 o'clock midnight January [laughter]—I mean July 1, 1939. No Senator on this floor will dispute that. Do I hear that denied? No one rises to deny it. What I have said has met with the approval of all present, at least no Senator has dared to contradict me that it is now 18 minutes after midnight, January the 1st [laughter].

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was not wrong, after all, for it is a new year, if we do not pass this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will state his inquiry.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the present day the 1st day of January, or the 1st day of July. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is the 1st day of July, and no man on this floor will dispute that statement.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate longer, but I should like to ask unanimous consent to have entered in the Journal of the Senate that at 18 minutes past 12 o'clock a. m., July 1, 1939, House bill 3325, an act to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised was before the Senate and under debate, and had not been acted upon by the Senate of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the Journal contain that minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have no desire to keep the Senate here at this late hour, and I should like to make it perfectly clear that at any moment when the Senator from Kentucky wishes to move that the Senate adjourn, that process will be entirely agreeable to me, and I should be delighted to discontinue, although I should like to discuss the principles involved in the pending report. I have great confidence in the legal judgment of the Senator from Kentucky—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment or two, without losing the floor?

Mr. TAFT. I would yield only for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. With the understanding that the Senator would not lose the floor?

Mr. TAFT. No; I would prefer not to yield. I should like to read from the RECORD the remarks made by the Senator from Kentucky on yesterday. He said:

I appreciate the remarks made by the Senator from Oklahoma. I will say frankly that consideration, naturally, has been given to the question of the effect of the automatic expiration of these various powers tomorrow night. The legislation we have been considering, of course, is based upon the continuation of an existing power, and so long as that power exists it may be continued. But when it has expired by operation of law, it is just as dead as if it had never been the law; and it is my view, in concurrence with the Senator, that it would take legislation ab initio to revive these expiring powers. We can revive them by new legislation just as we could create them in the beginning; but when they have once expired we cannot, in my judgment, revive them simply by continuing what does not exist.

Consequently, it seems to me that since there is no other business to come before the Senate, the Senator from Kentucky might well move to adjourn. But there is even more distinguished authority, if possible, for the statement that these powers have expired.

Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Kentucky has just entered the Chamber, and I repeat to him that I stated that at any time the Senator from Kentucky wished to move to adjourn I should be delighted to discontinue, and not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. Morgenthau, in his interview with the press yesterday morning, made approximately the same statement the Senator from Kentucky has made. He said:

The situation, I repeatedly told the Congress, was that the powers the Congress delivered to the President and the Treasury were ample to take care of any situation I could foresee. Well, after midnight the 30th of June I cannot make that statement any more and of all the time to lose these powers I cannot imagine a more unfortunate time.

In that I might say I do not agree with the Secretary. Again, later, in the press conference, he said, in answer to a question:

On the first of July, if the President will see me and discuss the matter—he may be busy—why, we will talk the matter over, but I am not going to—he is so busy and has got so much on his mind—I'm not going to bother him as long as there is a chance that the bill may pass. As I say, if he is not too busy and will spare the time Saturday morning, why, I'll talk with him.

I trust the President will have time to discuss the situation with the Secretary this morning, and that he will announce there is no serious emergency before the country.

I insert another question.

You still have the stabilization fund, Mr. Secretary.

No; it expires.

That apparently is going through, though.

No; nothing has passed. That money will go back to the general fund.

The stabilization fund is in that bill.

Yes; but supposing no legislation passed on the monetary question. Then on the 1st of July the money in the stabilization fund goes back into the general fund of the Treasury, on the 1st day of July it would go back to the general fund of the Treasury.

If that money at this time has gone back to the general fund of the Treasury, how on earth can we re-create the stabilization fund by an act which merely provides in a few words that the powers of the President shall continue until January 1941?

There is even more distinguished support for the statement, because the President himself in his press conference yesterday morning said that he had not consulted the Attorney General, but understood that the present monetary power expires at midnight unless an extension bill is enacted. He said he was willing to go to the Capitol tonight and sign the bill, if necessary. It has not been necessary.

There is still one more occurrence which makes it perfectly clear that the gentlemen who have been supporting the bill realize and recognize that the time for its passage has now gone by and that we might just as well lay the conference report on the table and get rid of it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, if he and those with whom he is associated are so confident as to their position, why they keep on talking on into the night?

Mr. TAFT. Because the Senator apparently has not fully admitted the fact, and the Senator from South Carolina, with whom I was talking, advanced a theory of some kind that in some way the law had not expired. The only excuse given for the action of the conference committee last night was that these powers would expire at midnight tonight.

In order that the stabilization fund should not expire, because that was the only interest the Senate had in these powers, the only part of the law the Senate was willing to continue was that relating to the stabilization fund, and the Senator from New York stated that the reason why the conferees had to get together in 10 minutes and recede from all the Senate amendments was the absolute necessity for the bill to be passed by midnight. If that be not a fact, then it seems to me that all justification for the outrageous performance of the conference committee in abandoning all three important decisions which the Senate made only a day or two ago is gone.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I take it, then, that the Senator, despite the very great confidence which he exhibited a few minutes ago, making the statement that the powers had died at 12 o'clock midnight, after talking with the Senator from South Carolina now has doubts about the question, and feels it is necessary to keep on filibustering for the remainder of the night.

Mr. TAFT. No, indeed. I should like to state the reason why I think the adoption of the conference report would be the most unfortunate action the Senate could take, but I see no reason why the Senate should remain in session. I think that at half past twelve there is every reason for going home, unless Senators on the other side of the Chamber have an idea that something can be accomplished by adopting the report at this time.

Mr. President, I wish to discuss, first, the question of the stabilization fund, because apparently it was the necessity of getting the stabilization fund through which led the conferees of the Senate to recede from all the Senate amendments.

The stabilization fund is a fund of $2,000,000,000, but the report on that fund which appears on page 11 of the hearings on this measure shows that of the total fund $1,800,000,000 remains in gold in the Treasury of the United States, and has never been used in any way whatsoever. Of the other $200,000,000, about $77,000,000 is in cash, about $80,000,000 is in a special account of the Secretary of the Treasury in Federal Reserve banks, secured by additional gold, and about $43,000,000 is in loans to the Central Bank of China, against the security of silver, I believe, as I remember it.

The fund has once or twice been operated fairly successfully, but I have made inquiry from bankers who understand the situation, and I have not found a banker who does not say that, so far as anything the stabilization fund has ever done is concerned, the Government could have done it without the stabilization fund.

They could have operated as they operated through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in dealing with currency. They could maintain exchange against possible speculation or against raids of speculators. They could accomplish what the stabilization fund is aimed to accomplish, to keep the rate of exchange fairly stable from day to day so that there would not be speculation at the expense of American producers and consumers.

I am advised that the power can be carried on. The testimony of a number of bankers was to the effect that it may be carried on. If a new resolution establishing the stabilization fund were introduced, I certainly should be willing to go along with it, although I think it ought to be in a reduced amount, for I wish to point out one of the dangers even of the stabilization fund, if we go ahead with this proceeding.

In the hearings I asked the Secretary of the Treasury the following question:

Suppose there is a foreign war and suppose you go out and do what you can to buy $2,000,000,000 worth of pounds. Isn't the effect of that to give England the power to buy $2,000,000,000 worth of goods in this country under the cash-and-carry provision?

In other words, I asked him whether, if he wished to do so under the wholly unlimited powers granted in connection with the stabilization fund, he could not, in effect, make a loan to England without any authority from the Congress or anyone else, in the sum of $2,000,000,000 in case a war developed in England. His answer was:

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Senators, if there is a war in any foreign country, before we would use the stabilization fund or any money in the Treasury to assist any country in prosecuting that war, I would come up before the proper committee and ask for guidance.

Senator TAFT. I have no doubt you would, perhaps. But nevertheless, the authority granted in this extension would give you power to do that, would it not, if you did choose to do so?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. To do what?

Senator TAFT. What I suggested: To buy pounds, and in effect, create an English credit here of $2,000,000,000; and we would wake up, in the end, and find ourselves with $2,000,000,000 worth of pounds that were worth nothing? I am not asking whether you would do it. My question is whether that is not legally possible. Isn't that legally possible?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, if I lost all sense or reason in the performance of my duty, I might do a lot of things.

Senator TAFT. In other words, it is legally possible?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, a lot of things are legally possible, which you would not do under the rule of common sense.

I say, without any authority, there is no limitation on the purposes for which this tremendous fund may be used. There is a necessity to report, but no necessity to account. That money could be used to finance foreign wars. That seems inconceivable, and yet the administration has shown today its desire to use money and use loans for political purposes in many countries throughout the world. It apparently is an established policy of the administration. They want the power. I believe they want the power to buy foreign silver largely to use that power for political effect in different countries.

We examined, for instance, the Export-Import Bank. It develops that the Export-Import Bank loaned $25,000,000 to the Bank of China, which is in reality the Chinese Government. They are interested in assisting China in a particular war.

It was testified that they had loaned $6,000,000 to Haiti for internal improvements. So far as I could see, only a very small part of that was going to be used in order to finance the export of American goods. The Export-Import Bank was created not to loan money to foreign governments; that was not its purpose; its purpose was to finance from time to time and over and over again, on 3 months and 6 months credit, the exports that American exporters and importers wished to make. That was its purpose. There was no intention to loan through it to foreign governments. Yet, nearly every important loan made today by that bank is made to foreign governments, and largely for political purposes.

The loan was not made to Haiti. It was made to some American contractor, and that American contractor took the notes of the Haitian Government and then turned around and sold them without recourse to the Export-Import Bank.

There have been loans made to Mexico. Loans have been made to the Mexican railways, rather, which are owned by the Mexican Government. Loans have been made to sell American locomotives, although there are any number of holders of bonds, there are any number of people in the United States who built the Mexican railroad and whose bonds are in default. The railroads have been taken over by the Government and the holders of those bonds have never been paid.

We read in the newspapers of a loan to Brazil. What for? In order to finance American exports? No. In order to enable them to set up some kind of central bank to help them in their whole financial situation. And recently we find another loan being made to Paraguay.

So, it is perfectly apparent, as I have said, that the American administration desires to use loans for political purposes.

If the Government have this $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, there is no limit to the amount of purchasing power which they may create in this country for the British Government. They simply buy British pounds. If the British should become involved in war when they got through the war we would have about $2,000,000,000 worth of pounds, and if the British Government lost the war those $2,000,000,- 000 of pounds would not be worth anything. So, we are giving unlimited powers under this provision.

I believe $500,000,000 would be ample to provide all the purposes of the stabilization fund, and would remove a temptation which would be difficult to resist.

There is one other power which the stabilization fund contains, and that is that the Treasury may buy Government bonds, may infringe on the power of the Federal Reserve Bank to buy and sell Government bonds for its effect on credit. In fact, Secretary Morgenthau admitted that he had actually bought a number of bonds with the stabilization fund, a purpose for which I do not believe the stabilization fund should ever have been used.

So I say that I believe the stabilization fund could expire permanently, and certainly it could expire temporarily, without the slightest danger to the economy of the country.

The question arises whether under the Silver Purchase Act the Government may continue to buy silver. It seems to me, as a matter of fact, that if the administration wishes to do so, even though the act is not continued, it could buy domestic silver at any price it saw fit to pay. That question was also discussed by Secretary Morgenthau. Of course, the Silver Purchase Act is not affected by the failure of the bill to pass. The Silver Purchase Act remains in full force and effect. It contains this provision:

Whenever and so long as the proportion of silver in the stocks of gold and silver of the United States is less than one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase silver at home or abroad, for present or future delivery with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States * * * or with any funds in the Treasury * * * at such rates, at such times, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem reasonable and most advantageous to the public interest.

It seems to me that under that law he may say, "I will not buy foreign silver. I will buy domestic silver, and I will pay for the domestic silver any price that I think is for the public interest under $1.29, which might be 64 cents, or might be 77 cents."

Apparently in order to scare the silver people the Secretary of the Treasury suggested that the 50-percent tax would become in force upon silver. I notice the Journal of Commerce, in reporting the interview, said:

Failure of the Senate amendment to the House-adopted bill which would fix the price of silver at 77.57 cents to provide a specific exemption may subject the sellers of metal to the Treasury to a 50-percent tax on the amount of the difference between that figure and the world price, it was suggested in Treasury circles today.

That is the way these things are started. I tried to figure on what basis they could figure that the tax applies. A reading of the act, it seems to me, makes it clear that it does not apply to the purchase of silver from American producers, because the tax only arises when it is sold in excess of cost; and—

In case of silver bullion produced from materials containing silver which has not previously entered into industrial, commercial, or monetary use, the price to a profferer who is a producer shall be deemed to be the market price at the time of production, determined in accordance with regulations issued hereunder.

There seems to me to be no reason why the market price at the time of production should not be the market price fixed in the United States by the Treasury, and so long as that price is continued and the silver is produced at that price, I see no reason to suppose that the tax would go into effect.

So I say that the expiration of the law does not end the power of the President to buy domestic silver. It does not end his power to pay 64 cents, or 70 cents, or 77 cents, or any other price he chooses to fix under $1.29.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator know that at the time the President signed the Silver Purchase Act, and in the presence of the now Secretary of the Treasury, both the Secretary of the Treasury and the President said that they would carry out the spirit and policy of the Silver Purchase Act enthusiastically?

Mr. TAFT. No; I was not familiar with the past history of that act.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the Senator from Ohio that at the time that act was signed—and it was signed one evening in the study of the President in the presence of many Senators and some Representatives—the statement was made by the President and by the Secretary of the Treasury then present that the spirit and policy of the Silver Purchase Act would be carried out enthusiastically.

The Senator from Ohio is entirely right that there can be no tax penalty imposed against the producer of silver under the language of the Silver Purchase Act. We did impose a tax on those who dealt in silver, and by voting that tax we lost the American market for silver and transferred that market to London, so that there has been no market to speak of in American silver or in any other silver in America since we passed the Silver Purchase Act.

If I may interrupt the Senator once more? It is now about 20 minutes to 1. The hour of 12 o'clock midnight has passed. If the act referred to, known as the Thomas amendment, has expired or would expire at 12 o'clock, then it has expired now. Therefore, so far as the argument offered in the press today by the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, which would affect those of us interested in the silver question, it has already become effective.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to have the Senate adjourn and go home also, if it please the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. There are two of us of the same mind.

Mr. TAFT. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Nevada. I wish to say that the purchase of foreign silver seems to me to be utterly and completely unnecessary, and I have yet to hear a single argument in favor of the right to purchase foreign silver which our conferees so lightly gave up in the conference committee.

It seems to me again that the administration is interested in the purchase of foreign silver primarily for political effect, in order to have a political weapon with which to deal with this country or that country. I do not believe that is a weapon the administration ought to have, or one that the Senate intended to give it when it passed the Silver Purchase Act.

I suppose everyone knows that during the Spanish controversy, in order to help the then government of Spain, because of hostility to Franco, the Government of the United States proceeded to buy something like $20,000,000, as I recall, of silver, which was in the Bank of Spain, which Franco says today the Government had no right to purchase. They purchased that silver. They rushed it out of Spain. I am told that Mr. Thomas Corcoran himself went down to New York Harbor to meet the boat to conduct it into New York Harbor. I understand the Federal Reserve bank would not touch it, for the simple reason that it knew that the Franco government claimed that the Government of Spain could not sell that silver.

I am told—I do not claim it is necessarily true, but I have seen it stated, and have not seen it denied—that the silver was brought here, and that the Secretary of the Treasury himself paid the Spanish Ambassador at that time in currency in order that the Spanish Ambassador and the Spanish government might escape the attachments and other claims against them which were likely to be filed if it were known that the $20,000,000 was being paid in American dollars.

That is one instance in which silver was used in a foreign dispute in order to help one disputant against another.

It seems to me that the purchase of silver from Mexico today is largely a political affair. Apparently, there is an effort to stir us up, because it is said that if we stop buying silver from Mexico we shall wreck the Mexican Government. I do not know why we should be particularly interested. We are going to force Mexico in some way to confiscate some more mines. I do not see any reason to believe that Mexico is not going to confiscate those mines anyway. Mexico has already confiscated all the oil wells.

On the subject of Mexican silver, I should like to read an editorial from the New York Times of yesterday dealing with the subject of how much harm we may be doing Mexico by discontinuing the purchase of foreign silver. The editorial reads:

Immediately following the Senate's vote to terminate purchases of foreign silver, "emergency conferences" were held by officials of the State Department to consider "the serious crisis caused in Mexico."

And, incidentally, to stir up opposition to that feature of this bill in the Congress of the United States.

The Mexican Government, it appears, obtains more than half of its total revenues, either directly or indirectly from the silver industry. It has depended largely on income from silver to keep going since the American oil properties were expropriated.

I do not know that anybody denies the right of the Mexican Government to expropriate the properties. The point is that they have been expropriated, and they have not been paid for; and, so far as we can see, there is no prospect that they are going to be paid for.

Some officials of the State Department are said to fear that a "dangerous situation, politically as well as economically" has been caused by the Senate's action. One of their fears is that the Mexican Government may now expropriate American mining properties, valued at $400,000,000, in order that the Government might get all money from silver sales at what is expected to be a lower price.

All this sounds as if the Senate, in voting to discontinue purchases of foreign silver, did something irresponsible.

That is the impression which the State Department interviews are really intended to create.

But what do such fears really imply? Must we continue to buy Mexican silver that we do not need and continue to pay a wholly artificial price for it, to prevent Mexico from expropriating American mines? Are our purchases of Mexican silver to be thought of as a form of political blackmail that we must pay to keep more American property in Mexico from being seized? A worse argument for continuing our purchases of foreign silver could not possibly be imagined.

It is true that if we cease to buy foreign silver at an artificial price the foreign individuals and governments who were profiting from those sales will be less well off than they are now. Our Government will no longer be supporting them. But the inconveniences of readjustment are no reason why our Government must continue to support them indefinitely. By our silver purchases we have actually continued to contribute heavily to the support of a government that meanwhile has been seizing American private property on a grand scale. It is an astonishing situation. Even now we would not be discontinuing these silver purchases in any sense out of retaliation but because there is no good reason why we should ever have made them in the first place. If the American people decide that they owe any foreign government their financial support, they can give that financial support directly and not under the subterfuge of doing something else.

Incidentally, if any support is to be given to foreign governments, it seems to me that is a function of Congress to decide, and not a function of the Executive to decide.

That editorial is from the New York Times, a Democratic newspaper. A similar editorial is published in the Baltimore Sun, another Democratic newspaper, taking approximately the same position. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the editorial from the Baltimore Sun at this time.

However, I should like to read an editorial from the Columbus Evening Dispatch, in my own State:

A dispatch to the Baltimore Sun from its London correspondent says that Germany now has obtained from Mexico a supply of oil sufficient for 100 days usage at war-time consumption rates. This oil—and additional supplies which the Reich will purchase in the future—are to be paid for by the now-familiar Nazi barter method, in this case the payment being in the form of arms and munitions secured through the seizure of Czechoslovakia. The reports current in London say that Mexico in turn plans to sell the military goods to China receiving in return silver which will, in turn, be sold to the United States.

Here is an improvement over the technique of robbing a victim going and coming. American interests, as we figure it, are being gypped three ways.

The oil belonged to American producers in the first place and when the wells were seized by the Cardenas government under expropriation proceedings, but without payment of any kind, it was gyp No. 1.

Selling to Uncle Sam the silver received in exchange for the arms that were swapped for the oil, in accordance with the baffling and unpopular New Deal silver-buying, constitutes gyp No. 2.

Then, as it is reasonable to believe if some or all of the cash used by China to buy the arms and munitions comes from the recent $25,000,000 loan granted China by the United States, it isn't hard to see where gyp No. 3 comes in.

In other words, American property is bartered for silver obtained by a loan from the United States Treasury and then the silver is sold back to this country at an artificially boosted price. Maybe this is being a good neighbor or something. We think it's more like being the goat.

Apparently, the only argument advanced in favor of the purchase of foreign silver is that in some way, by buying silver, we send dollars to foreign countries with which to buy our exports. Of course, if we could use the silver, or if it were like any other import, that might be some argument; but, as a matter of fact, we are no better off with the silver than without the silver. It seems to me that we are again doing in substance what we did in the 1920's, what every member of the Democratic Party has condemned, and what I, myself, am quite willing to condemn. We are in effect again lending money to foreigners to enable them to buy our products so as to create an artificial market for American products.

We can create an artificial market. We did it in the 1920's, and we built it up. I think we loaned from five to ten billion dollars during that period; and sooner or later we discovered that we could not go on indefinitely. When we had to stop lending, we absolutely cut off the market for American products, which either resulted in the depression itself, or in making the reaction of the depression infinitely more severe. The final result was the complete destruction of the prices of the very American products whose exports we had stimulated.

That is, in effect, the same thing we do when we artificially create a market for exports by buying foreign silver. That would be the effect of this policy, because sooner or later we would be bound to stop. We could not go on indefinitely buying all the silver there is and storing it at West Point. When we do stop, it only means that the prices of the very products we are trying to help are going to be more affected by the reaction, and are going to be lower than they would have been if we never had adopted the silver-buying policy.

I am sorry that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is not present. I think the senior Senator from Virginia was as much interested as any one in killing once and for all the power to devalue the dollar. I should like to read what he had to say in the Senate when a similar bill was before it in 1934, because I think his statement very clearly sets out the objections to the bill, and states the reasons why nothing that was promised could be carried out, and why nothing that was promised actually resulted.

The senior Senator from Virginia said, as recorded in his biography by Rixie Smith and Norman Beasley:

I cannot in any circumstances, painful as it is to me to differ from the occupant of the White House and from my party colleagues, support the second section of this amendment, relating to the devaluation of the gold dollar.

I will say that I have since talked with the Senator, and I do not see that he has changed his views in any respect since that time.

Continuing the quotation:

England went off the gold standard because she was compelled to do so, and not from choice. She had less than a million dollars in gold left after paying her indebtedness to the United States. Of course, she went off the gold standard; and her going off has not resulted in increasing the prices of commodities. There was a temporary flurry then as there has been in this country now; but the inevitable reaction came.

Why are we going off the gold standard? With nearly 40 percent of the entire gold supply of the world why are we going off the gold standard?

We now have 60 percent of the entire gold supply of the world instead of only 40 percent.

With all the earmarked gold, with all of the securities of ours that they hold, foreign governments could withdraw in total less than $700,000,000 of our gold, which would leave us an ample fund of gold in the extremest case to maintain gold payments both abroad and at home.

To me, the suggestion that we may revalue the gold dollar 50 percent, means national repudiation. To me it means dishonor. In my conception of it, it is immoral. All the legalistic arguments which the lawyers of the Senate, men of eminent ability and refinement, may make here or have made here have not dislodged from my mind the irrevocable conviction that it is immoral, and that it means not only a contravention of my party's platform in that respect but of the promises of party spokesmen during the campaign.

Mr. President, there was never any necessity for a gold embargo. There is no necessity for making statutory criminals of citizens of the United States who may please to take property in the shape of gold or currency out of banks and use it for their own purposes as they may please.

I do not think there is anyone for whose financial judgment I have more respect than that of the senior Senator from Virginia, and I feel confident that in quoting what he said at that time I will meet with his approval, and that those views are his views today. I greatly regret that because of illness he is unable to be present.

While dealing with this book, I might say that there has been some discussion to the effect that deflation of the dollar resulted in the increase in prices after the bank closing in March 1933. Apparently the biographers of the senior Senator from Virginia do not take that view. They take the view rather that the bank crisis was created by the threat of devaluation of the dollar—by the rumors that that devaluation was going to be brought about.

I read again from the biography:

Washington dispatch: "The whole question of inflation, which has been stalking the Capitol for weeks and so far has been held behind cloak-room doors, boiled out on the floor of the Senate today * * * to remonetize silver * * * to devalue the gold dollar. * * *"

Senator Huey P. Long: "Inflate * * * Roosevelt's 'controlled currency inflation.' * * *"

Henry A. Wallace: "The smart thing would be to go off the gold standard a little further than England has."

It is difficult to say precisely when GLASS began to have doubts concerning the monetary policies of the incoming administration. He was not one of the tight-lipped few who had been taken into Roosevelt's confidence about what he planned to do, if elected.

Certain it is, however, he had no doubts during the campaign. To him a party platform meant what it said, "a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power." Up to January he continued to brand the persistent rumors as "malicious and inspired gossip," but with each passing day of silence after the 1st of January, he began to wonder, and then to worry.

In a similar situation in 1885 and in 1893, another Democratic President-elect, Grover Cleveland, had publicly avowed his intentions, thus removing apprehension over the maintenance of gold payments. GLASS wished Roosevelt would do likewise—and because the President-elect did not the Senator made up his mind to find out, if he could, and at the first opportunity, what truth, if any, there was behind the now common talk.

The authors of the book at least attribute as one of the causes of the bank crisis the growing public belief that the Roosevelt administration, when in office, would devalue the dollar and go off the gold standard, and the failure of the President-elect publicly to disclaim these rumors. The fact now is, as we know, that he was discussing the question of devaluation with a good many persons prior to taking office in March 1933, and we know that those rumors got out. We know that—

Those who were skeptical of Roosevelt's good intentions were buying foreign securities and foreign currencies—in other words, exporting their capital. Others were buying gold bullion and leaving it on deposit abroad.

There was a run on gold, on the Federal Reserve bank itself, in order to get gold out, because, of course, it would be more valuable if the dollar were actually devalued.

These, of course, were people with money who stood to make handsome profits if the rumors turned out to be true; and who were in no danger of loss did they turn out to be untrue. Glass heard these rumors and placed no stock in them. Hadn't the Democratic platform specifically stated "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards"? Hadn't Roosevelt pledged himself "unqualifiedly" to that plank, and to every plank in the platform?

"You're impugning the honor and integrity of the next President of the United States," he rebuked his worried friends. "I will not listen to such malicious gossip. It is nothing but hang-over propaganda from a disgruntled group that has lost public confidence." The rumors persisted.

There was plenty of fire where there was smoke, and the dollar was devalued; and a considerable part of the fire which brought about the bank crisis of 1933 resulted from that known intention, that somebody might have power to devalue the dollar; and I say the power of devaluing the dollar today is just as dangerous, is just as likely to create speculation in currency of all kinds if we continue it, as it was at that time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. CONNALLY. Do I understand the Senator to have opposed, and now to oppose, the original devaluation of the dollar?

Mr. TAFT. I think we would be just as well off if we had never devalued the dollar. I opposed it at that time; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. And it was wrong, of course? The Senator from Ohio thought it was wrong to devalue it?

Mr. TAFT. I agreed with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] at that time, as I do today.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator now revalue it back to 100 cents?

Mr. TAFT. No. I think once devaluation occurs, it is an irrevocable step. I know of no case in history in which any nation has ever revalued its currency. That step would have certain effects that nobody wants to undertake. That step deliberately, at least temporarily, would reduce prices in a very considerable field in which we do not want to reduce prices.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. I thought the Senator said, a while ago, that devaluation did not raise prices.

Mr. TAFT. No; I said it did not raise prices permanently. Of course it raised prices temporarily. That is what the Senator from Virginia said here, that it would raise prices temporarily, as it did in England, but that the permanent effect is most remote; and see what has happened. We have devalued the dollar 40 percent. Prices today stand at 78 compared to 60 when the devaluation started. The actual increase in prices apparently is considerably less than half the percentage of devaluation brought about by the devaluation of the dollar; and, goodness knows, there have been plenty of other measures taken by this administration. We cannot attribute even that 18 percent to devaluation of the dollar. We have had every kind of control of farm products. We have had every effort to use this or that. What brought about that small increase I do not know, but certainly no material effect can be attributed to the devaluation of the dollar.

Mr. CONNALLY. If devaluation was wrong originally, as the Senator said it was, why should we not go back and restore it, undo the wrong, and put it back to 100 cents on the dollar?

Mr. TAFT. No; I do not think that is a logical conclusion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not necessarily assume that the Senator was acting on the basis of those considerations.

Mr. TAFT. The President has attacked this bill and attacked the Senate. I read from the New York Herald Tribune, from his interview at Hyde Park on June 27, in which he said this:

The failure to pass this bill, which has now occurred—

He said—

had done four things.

He charged—

That the Senate, in voting yesterday to strip him of his power to devalue the dollar, had seriously hindered national defense—

What on earth it has to do with national defense, I do not know. I have not the slightest idea what he means. The claim was made before the committee that the power to devalue would be used, and would only be used, in case of a tremendous devaluation of the British pound, in order to meet a competitive devaluation by England. Certainly if war occurs—and that is what this authority to devalue contemplates, apparently—nobody is going to devalue the dollar, because obviously the people who are at war are going to have to come to this country in order to get our goods; and the probability of making those goods cheaper to them by devaluing our dollar, and making other people's goods more expensive, is most remote.

We saw in the last war what happened. People rushed here to buy our goods. Nobody thought of devaluing the dollar then, and nobody will think of devaluing the dollar now in case of war. That is the one thing it has not anything to do with. The only case, according to the testimony of Secretary Morgenthau and other administration witnesses before the committee, in which they were going to use this power was in case of peace, when peace went on, and there was some devaluation of the British pound. That reason, I think, is something merely to attract attention to the attack upon the Senate.

The President said that our action—

Had thrown control of the Nation's currency back to Wall Street.

How on earth we threw control of the Nation's currency back to Wall Street, I do not know. We fix the price of gold. We say the dollar is a certain amount. The President himself has said that for the past 6 years he has not changed the dollar, and he says now he is not going to change it except in the most extraordinary emergency. That is the only time he is going to change it.

Well, if an emergency arises, Wall Street knows that we can change it just as well as he can change it. It seems to me the whole effect of this thing is to make it less possible to speculate, because we had testimony supporting that view before the committee. We had the testimony of T. Jefferson Coolidge, who was abroad last summer, that from time to time the rumor starts—somebody starts it on purpose, perhaps, or perhaps there is a conversation that gives rise to it—that the President is going to devalue the dollar. The moment that happens the speculators in foreign exchanges get busy, and they are able to make a considerable profit out of people who believe the rumors more than there is any reason to believe in them. So the present condition, with the power existing in the President to devalue the dollar overnight, is actually an encouragement to speculators, and permits speculators to go out and fool other people and to obtain their money.

Then he said:

It meant a return to a system which, before the passage of devaluation legislation in 1933, had cost Americans millions of dollars—

I do not know what he means. I do not know in what respect that system cost Americans millions of dollars. As long as we were on the gold standard we got full value for our goods. Our exports were excellent. Our exports and imports went practically together. We did not pay more for foreign goods, and we sold our own goods for the full price—

And left the Government little defense against raids on foreign exchange by other nations.

That certainly is, if nothing else, a ridiculous overstatement. The Government is perfectly able to prevent raids on foreign exchange by foreign nations. The Government is perfectly able to do so, whether it has a stabilization fund or not. Certainly if it has a stabilization fund it can prevent any raid on foreign exchange, or any raid on the dollar to force it up or force it down. I think, since this legislation has failed, we ought to introduce a joint resolution re-creating the stabilization fund, perhaps in a smaller amount, and giving the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, or I myself would prefer a board of three men, the power to use that fund to stabilize exchange and to prevent these raids on foreign exchange.

So I say that in those various statements there is no respect in which the President is correct. There is no respect in which his attack on the Congress of the United States is correct.

He goes on to say facetiously that—

He took it that the Senate would now vote for fixed prices by the Government for cotton, wheat, pigs, and cattle.

Well, if prices are to be fixed I should say Congress ought to fix them, and not the President. But the President himself has fixed the price of gold. We have already fixed the prices for gold and silver. That is not the question. The question whether we have fixed prices for currency is not at all the same question as whether we have fixed prices for commodities; and, in any event, the question here is not whether we have fixed prices, but who is going to fix them? Are we going to fix them under our constitutional power, or is the President going to fix them now under his power?

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] criticized what he considered an inconsistency on the part of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. On the question of inconsistency, I think, we can say that Mr. Roosevelt is probably as inconsistent as anyone can be, and inconsistent, I believe, under far more similar circumstances than the circumstances relating to the Senator from Michigan.

In 1932 President Roosevelt said:

The businessmen of the Nation, battling hard to maintain their financial solvency and integrity were told in blunt language in Des Moines, Iowa, how close an escape this country had some months ago from going off the gold standard. But that, my friends, as has been clearly shown since, was a libel on the credit of the United States. * * *

No adequate answer has been made to the magnificent philippic of Senator GLASS the other night, in which he showed how unsound this assertion was. And, I might add, Senator GLASS made a devastating challenge that no responsible government would have sold to the country securities payable in gold if it knew that the promise—yes, the covenant—embodied in these securities was as dubious as the President of the United States claims it was. Of course, the assertion was unsound.

And yet within a few months the President himself proceeded to devalue the dollar, and proceeded to sell people securities payable in gold, knowing that he was going to devalue the dollar.

One of the most commonly repeated misrepresentations by Republican speakers, including the President—

The President at that time was Mr. Hoover—has been the claim that the Democratic position with regard to money has not been made sufficiently clear. The President is seeing visions of rubber dollars. But that is only a part of his campaign of fear. I am not going to characterize these statements. I merely present the facts.

The Democratic platform specifically declares, "We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards. That * * * is plain English.

Senators, at that time England had devalued. The pound had been devalued. All the circumstances, as far as relative currency was concerned, that existed when the devaluation occurred were already present. During that campaign there was not any change of circumstances, except solely on the theory that devaluation in some method would raise domestic prices. That was the only reason why the power was used. So, if you want to look at inconsistency, I think you will find a more inconsistent record in Franklin Roosevelt than you will find in that of the Senator from Michigan.

Senators, I believe this conference report should be rejected. We are asked in this measure to give up a constitutional power—the constitutional power to regulate the currency of the United States. I believe the original measure was brought to us because of a great emergency, and it was an emergency. The banks of the United States were closed. We had a serious financial crisis but, whatever remedy anyone might wish to adopt, there was an emergency. Today there is no emergency so far as we can see. Foreign currencies are fluctuating and will fluctuate for a long time to come. If an emergency exists today it is only the same condition that will exist for the next 15 years. There is no emergency which justifies the continuation of this power, and it is our duty to resume, as we have resumed today, our constitutional right to regulate currency. I trust that the Senator from Kentucky will recognize the fact that the bill is dead, and see that it is laid on the table and quietly disposed of during the coming week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that he must evidently have been singing this new song, "Wishing Will Make It So." I have no such intention as that he has just hoped I might entertain.

Mr. TAFT. May I ask whether the Senator has changed his mind since yesterday?

Mr. BARKLEY. About what?

Mr. TAFT. On the subject of whether the bill has permanently died.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will express some views on that subject at the proper time.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I read his statement of yesterday. He said:

I will say frankly that consideration, naturally, has been given to the question of the effect of the automatic expiration of these various powers tomorrow night. The legislation we have been considering, of course, is based upon the continuation of an existing power, and so long as that power exists it may be continued. But when it has expired by operation of law, it is just as dead as if it had never been the law; and it is my view, in concurrence with the Senator, that it would take legislation ab initio to revise these expiring powers. We can revive them by new legislation just as we could create them in the beginning; but when they have once expired, we cannot, in my judgment, revive them simply by continuing what does not exist.

If the Senator is of that view, it seems to me we are wasting our time sitting here longer.

Mr. BARKLEY. That proves that frequently lawyers in expressing curbstone opinions may be mistaken. Upon further investigation of the law and the decisions I have reached the conclusion that the opinion I expressed on yesterday was a mistake, that it did not state the law, that the law is not dead, and that the adoption of the conference report would be as valid tonight or tomorrow as if it had been adopted yesterday.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is a member of the conference committee, and if the conference committee surrendered on this bill so quickly only because the bill had to be passed yesterday, I should think he would favor discontinuing the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Kentucky is not willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio on that subject. Furthermore, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio and to all other Senators that the insinuation that the committee was hastily called together in 10 minutes to dispose of this matter is in no sense the truth.

Mr. TAFT. I was only relying on what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] said.

Mr. BARKLEY. The conference met Thursday afternoon from 3 o'clock until 5 and discussed this proposition, and was in session Thursday night again upon it. At the same time the conferees were in session, or running back and forth from one session to another on the relief bill, and, considering the amount involved and the importance of the questions, I think I am within the truth when I say that in proportion to the respective importance of the two bills the conferees on the bill we are discussing devoted as much time to it as the conferees on the relief bill, which involved $1,800,000,000, devoted to that bill, some of the conferees being the same.

It was necessary, in order that the House might vote on the measure yesterday, that the conferees agree last night, in order that the conference report might be reported to the House at last night's session.

Mr. TAFT. Why should the House have had to act yesterday?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was desirable that it should act, and it has acted.

Mr. TAFT. I think I still have the floor, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). The Senator from Ohio still has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, since he has eaten his own words, if he knows whether the President also has eaten his. The report says that Mr. Roosevelt asserted that parliamentarians on Capitol Hill told him that the bill was drawn to extend existing law, and if the law was off the statute books because it had expired, he said it could not be extended, and new legislation would be needed. Can the Senator advise us whether the President has also eaten his words?

Mr. BARKLEY. I can speak only for myself, and if I have eaten my words, and even if the President has eaten his, neither finds them unpalatable. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may call a quorum, with the understanding that he will not lose the floor?

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator, but I have no desire to trouble Senators at this late hour—or early hour, as I am corrected.

I shall not cover all the domestic considerations involved in this issue, because they have been amply treated by the speakers who have preceded me. I shall confine myself to giving my views on the question before us as they affect the prospects for maintaining the United States at peace. I think the question of currency control and the question of the management of the stabilization fund have a very distinct bearing on the conduct of our foreign policy, and consequently relate intimately to the very pressing problem of maintaining the United States at peace.

I need not say that the preservation of peace is an indispensable element in all the domestic reforms we contemplate, and that this debate today would not be complete, and would not thoroughly cover the subject, if something were not put into the RECORD on this question.

Therefore, as a preliminary to the points I desire to make later, I should like to give my views on the present situation regarding American foreign policy, so that the question of currency control may be assessed with that as a background.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels obliged to ask the occupants of the galleries and those on the floor of the Senate to be in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I realize how late the hour is, and while I appreciate the courtesy of the Chair, I shall not feel in the least bit put out if all the Members of the Senate do not take the trouble to listen to me. What I say can be read in the RECORD, and I do not desire to trouble the Senate unduly at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may submit a unanimous consent request?

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to yielding that such a request be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to punish the Senate by keeping Senators here unduly long. Today is Saturday, Monday is sandwiched between Sunday and the 4th of July, and of course a number of Senators would like to be absent over the holiday. In order to accommodate the Senate in that respect, under the peculiar circumstances in which we find ourselves—and my request is based upon an adjournment until Wednesday, if this agreement shall be entered into, not a recess, in order that there may be no question as to a legislative or a calendar day—I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, if we adjourn until Wednesday, during the further consideration of the conference report, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the conference report and that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. the Senate shall proceed to vote on the report.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, after canvassing the minority and other Senators here who are interested in this question whom I felt I ought to consult, I wish to have it understood that if no objection should be interposed by us, and if the unanimous-consent agreement should be entered into, we who are opposed to the conference report do not by our silence admit anything; that we do not waive any claims or any rights; and that this agreement for adjournment until Wednesday leaves us in the position in which we are at this time, to which I will refer in just a moment, so that on Wednesday this matter can be resumed without any alteration to the disadvantage of those who are opposing the conference report.

Before I take my seat I wish to state that we do this in the conscious and firm belief that at the hour of midnight on June 30 the power of the President, expressed or indicated in the conference report, expired, and that it does not exist; that it is extinct; that it cannot be revived except by affirmative legislation of clear expression; that it cannot be revived by implication or by construction of the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, and I shall be glad to conclude my remarks by expressing the hope that the 4 days which elapse between now and the time when we shall vote will present conclusive proof that the world is not coming to an end merely because this power has not been extended.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall not object provided I can have 1 or 2 minutes of time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is obvious that eventually this matter will get into the courts, and in order that the attorneys of the country who may be interested will have the law at one point, I ask to have printed at this place in the RECORD the complete text of what is known as the Thomas amendment.

Second. I ask to have printed, following that amendment, two sections from Public, No. 87, Seventy-third Congress, known as the Gold Reserve Act of 1934. These two sections are the two sections which create, first, the stabilization fund, and, second, extend the power of the President under the first amendment.

Third. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD following the second exhibit a copy of Public, No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, which extends these two powers for a 2-year period ending June 30, 1939.

I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD following that the complete text of the conference report, together with the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

I next ask permission to extend my remarks by having printed a brief statement giving my opinion of the status in which we find ourselves tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Extract from Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.]

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BONDS AS SECURITY FOR ADVANCES BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

SEC. 28. The eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following "or by the deposit or pledge of bonds issued pursuant to the paragraph added to section 32 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended by section 21 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933."

TITLE III—FINANCING—AND EXERCISING POWER CONFERRED BY SECTION 8 OF ARTICLE I OF THE CONSTITUTION: TO COIN MONEY AND TO REGULATE THE VALUE THEREOF

SEC. 43. Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

(a) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will, and it is hereby authorized to, notwithstanding any provisions of law or rules and regulations to the contrary, permit such Reserve banks to agree that they will (1) conduct, pursuant to existing law, throughout specified periods, open-market operations in obligations of the United States Government or corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder, and (2) purchase directly and hold in portfolio for an agreed period or periods of time Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold, unless prior to the termination of such period or periods the Secretary shall consent to their sale. No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c). Nor shall it require any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank, as otherwise specified in that section. The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue credit expansion.

(b) If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized—

(1) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption of funding thereof and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, in the same size and of similar color to the Federal Reserve notes heretofore issued and in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000; but notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States: Provided, That when any such notes are used for such purpose the bond or other obligation so acquired or taken up shall be retired and canceled. Such notes shall be issued at such times and in such amounts as the President may approve but the aggregate amount of such notes outstanding at any time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel 4 percent annually of such outstanding notes, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to retire and cancel annually 4 percent of such outstanding notes. Such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts public and private.

(2) By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained to a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

SEC. 44. The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to make and promulgate rules and regulations covering any action taken or to be taken by the President under subsection (a) or (b) of section 43.

SEC. 45. (a) The President is authorized, for a period of 6 months from the date of the passage of this act, to accept silver in payment of the whole or any part of the principal or interest now due, or to become due within 6 months after such date, from any foreign government or governments on account of any indebtedness to the United States, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce in United States currency. The aggregate value of the silver accepted under this section shall not exceed $200,000,000.

(b) The silver bullion accepted and received under the provisions of this section shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law.

(c) The silver accepted and received under the provisions of this section shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be held, used, and disposed of as in this section provided.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause silver certificates to be issued in such denominations as he deems advisable to the total number of dollars for which such silver was accepted in payment of debts. Such silver certificates shall be used by the Treasurer of the United States in payment of any obligations of the United States.

(e) The silver so accepted and received under this section shall be coined into standard silver dollars and subsidiary coins sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to meet any demands for redemption of such silver certificates issued under the provisions of this section, and such coins shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of such certificates on demand. The silver so accepted and received under this section, except so much thereof as is coined under the provisions of this section, shall be held in the Treasury for the sole purpose of aiding in maintaining the parity of such certificates as provided in existing law. Any such certificates or reissued certificates, when presented at the Treasury, shall be redeemed in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary silver coin, at the option of the holder of the certificates: Provided, That, in the redemption of such silver certificates issued under this section, not to exceed one-third of the coin required for such redemption may in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury be made in subsidiary coins, the balance to be made in standard silver dollars.

(f) When any silver certificates issued under the provisions of this section are redeemed or received into the Treasury from any source whatsoever, and belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but nothing herein shall prevent the cancellation and destruction of mutilated certificates and the issue of other certificates of like denomination in their stead, as provided by law.

(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 46. Section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (c) thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Federal Reserve Board, upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members and with the approval of the President, may declare that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion, and may by regulation during such emergency increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either demand or time deposits."

Approved May 12, 1933.

[Public—No. 87—73d Congress]

[H. R. 6976]

An act to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be the "Gold Reserve Act of 1934."

SEC. 10. (a) For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, directly or through such agencies as he may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section. An annual audit of such fund shall be made and a report thereof submitted to the President.

(b) To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of the receipts which are directed to be covered into the Treasury under section 7 hereof, the sum of $2,000,000,000, which sum, when available, shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a stabilization fund (hereinafter called the "fund") under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States. The fund shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and in his discretion, for any purpose in connection with carrying out the provisions of this section, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States of any portions of the fund which the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may from time to time determine are not currently required for stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. The proceeds of all sales and investments and all earnings and interest accruing under the operations of this section shall be paid into the fund and shall be available for the purposes of the fund.

(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated; but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, with the approval of the President, such rules and regulations as the Secretary may deem necessary or proper to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. Paragraph (b) (2), of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), is amended by adding two new sentences at the end thereof, reading as follows:

"Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight. The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency."

[Public—No. 1—75th Congress]
[Chapter 5—1st Session]
[S. 416]

An act to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (c) of section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire June 30, 1939, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated."

Sec. 2. The second sentence added to paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the Act approved May 12, 1933, by section 12 of said Gold Reserve Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows: "The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire June 30, 1939, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended."

STABILIZATION FUND, DEVALUATION, AND SILVER PURCHASES

June 29, 1939.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SOMERS of New York, from the committee of conference, submitted the following

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. The second sentence added to paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933, by section 12 of said Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, is further amended to read as follows: 'The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire June 30, 1941, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended.'

"Sec. 4. (a) Each United States coinage mint shall receive for coinage into standard silver dollars any silver which such mint, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is satisfied has been mined subsequently to July 1, 1939, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

"(b) The Director of such mint with the consent of the owner shall deduct and retain of such silver so received 45 per centum as seigniorage for services performed by the Government of the United States relative to the coinage and delivery of silver dollars. The balance of such silver so received, that is 55 per centum, shall be coined into standard silver dollars and the same or any equal number of other standard silver dollars shall be delivered to the owner or depositor of such silver, and no provisions of law taxing transfers of silver shall extend or apply to any delivery of silver to a United States mint under this section. The 45 per centum of such silver so deducted shall be retained as bullion by the Treasury or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this section. Such regulations shall contain provisions substantially similar to the provisions contained in the regulations issued pursuant to the Act of Congress approved April 23, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 535), known as the Pittman Act, with such changes as he shall determine prescribing how silver tendered to such mints shall be identified as having been produced from natural deposits in the United States or any places subject to its jurisdiction subsequent to July 1, 1939."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed to in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

Amendment No. 1: The House bill continued the powers contained in section 43 (b) (2) of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 (relating to certain monetary powers of the President, including the power to fix the weight of the gold and silver dollar, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of gold and silver) until June 30, 1941. The Senate amendment provides that the powers of the President with respect to the alteration of the weight of the dollar and subsidiary coins should expire on June 30, 1939, and his powers relating to the issuance of silver certificates and the coinage of silver dollars and subsidiary coins should expire on January 15, 1941, unless the President declares the existing emergency ended before that date.

The Senate amendment also provides for the coinage of silver mined subsequent to July 1, 1939, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction. Upon delivery to any mint of such silver the Director of the Mint is to deduct 40 percent of the silver as seigniorage. Sixty percent of the silver so delivered is to be coined into standard silver dollars, and standard silver dollars equal to that amount are to be delivered to the owner. The 40 percent deducted is to be retained as bullion or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is given power to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of the provision. Such regulations are to be substantially similar to the regulations issued under the Pittman Act with such changes as the Secretary may prescribe relating to how silver tendered to the mints shall be identified as domestically produced silver produced after July 1, 1939.

The conference agreement restores the provision of the House bill extending until June 30, 1941, the powers of the President under section 43 (b) (2) of the act approved May 12, 1933, as amended. The conference agreement also retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to the delivery of domestically mined silver to the United States mints, and provides for a deduction by the Treasury of 45 percent of the silver delivered to the mints and for a payment of 55 percent of the silver so delivered to the owner or depositor of the silver. The provisions for regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury are the same as in the Senate amendment, and it is provided that the provisions of law relating to taxable transfers of silver shall not extend or apply in the case of the domestically mined silver delivered to the mints as provided in the bill.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment terminated the power and authority of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the acquisition of foreign silver under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. The Senate recedes.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA CALL FOR MONETARY CONFERENCE

The failure of the stabilization-devaluation bill to pass prior to July 1 seemingly makes necessary new monetary legislation. Immediately an effort will be made to reenact legislation giving President Roosevelt power to further devalue the gold dollar and to re-create a stabilization fund. Should the two provisions be reenacted no change or perceptible benefit will accrue to the people.

The power to further devalue the gold dollar is wanted to meet possible devaluation of monetary units by governments competing with the United States for world trade. The stabilization fund is wanted to insure the stability of the gold dollar in terms of gold and to assist in preventing major world currencies from being depreciated in terms of gold.

When any new monetary legislation comes up for consideration the status of silver must not be overlooked. The United States now owns a vast quantity of silver and some 10 Western States produce silver, so the value and stability of the value of silver is of major concern not only to the silver-producing States but also to our Government and to the other countries producing and using silver in their monetary systems. So, in addition to further gold devaluation and the recreation of a stabilization fund, the question of silver must be considered.

When the stabilization-devaluation bill was before the Senate a proposal was submitted in the form of a mandate to the money managers to raise the general price level and the discussion and vote on the proposal showed some 40 Senators in favor of issuing the mandate.

The agenda for any new monetary legislation must embrace a congressional mandate respecting the price level.

Inasmuch as the Constitution confers upon the Congress the exclusive responsibility "to coin money" and "to regulate the value thereof," and inasmuch as new monetary legislation must be enacted, I am taking the responsibility of calling a monetary conference to be held here in Washington commencing Thursday, July 6.

To this conference will be invited representatives of the silver States, the farm groups and organizations, as well as representatives of business and of labor. An informal committee will have charge of the arrangements for such conference. Those who believe that our economic troubles are largely monetary are invited to attend the conference and to cooperate in forming a program to be presented to the Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request, but I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], taking into consideration the statement of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], that I would object unless the same statement might be made in regard to those who favor the conference report the Senator from Vermont has made on behalf of those who are opposed to it. In other words, I do not want his statement to be the basis of a contention which I fear might follow—although I did not fully understand what he said—that is, that the unanimous-consent request is granted on the condition that at the present time the President has no authority, even though the law be enacted now or later, extending this authority.

In other words, I do not believe that a court passing on the matter would pay any attention to the difference of opinion which exists here—an honest difference—but I do not want to have the attorneys who may be called on to defend this action, if it ever gets into court, to be confronted with the contention that by reason of entering into the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate concedes absolutely the contention of the Senator from Vermont. I have no objection to the unanimous-consent request, with that exception.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that I do not regard any opinion expressed by any Senator here on the legality of this proposition as having any weight with any court that may be called to pass on it.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator; but if one side is going to contend that by the unanimous consent here everybody in the Senate believes that the law is dead, I object to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the Senator from Vermont made that suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps a proper construction of his statement will not bear that out, but I am not sure.

Mr. BARKLEY. He said he did not want the fact that he did not object to be interpreted in any way as waiving any rights or any opinions that they entertained upon that subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I do not want to deprive them of their right to assert that in court or any place else.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. The question as to whether Congress, by the adoption of the report, amends, continues, or revives the law under which power has been exercised, is a legal matter. It can only be determined in the courts. I think the Senator will agree to that. So that whatever our individual opinions here may be and whatever our expressions may be I do not regard them as having any real bearing upon what a court may decide, because courts frequently look to the intention of Congress in any enactment that it may bring about.

That intention, of course, is obtained from the law itself or from the debates pertaining to the law, if the debates shed any light on the subject. But the mere reservation of the right to entertain an opinion with respect to the legality of this action, it seems to me, would have no binding effect on the court.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it would. It ought not to; but if one opinion is to go in, I want the other opinion to go in also. In my judgment, all that has been said on that subject will have no weight whatever. There is a question of law involved, if we pass this measure now after 12 o'clock, the courts only can determine it, and it does not depend upon what I think or what the Senator from Kentucky thinks, or what the Senator from Vermont thinks, as I see it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is correct; and I do not understand the Senator from Vermont as in any way trying to create a legal status that would be binding upon any court merely by the expression of his opinion in this regard.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the Senator expressing his opinion. It is entitled to great weight; that is all right; but we must not get a unanimous-consent agreement here that is going to bind anyone else.

Mr. BARKLEY. No, no; I do not think so. I certainly would not agree to that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, often I think that when one tries to explain he confuses rather than clarifies his statement. The bill has not been passed, if ever it will be passed, and while it is still pending we want nothing done by us that will concede any of the ground that we have gained or waive any right we have to make still greater advances.

I do not know whether or not that explains my position.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator would permit me to inject a statement there, I wish to say that this is not a lawsuit where the failure to take an exception to some testimony or ruling of the court would have any weight with the court above. I think the Senator would agree to that.

I ask that my request be put, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for agreement will be stated again.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent, based on the proposal to adjourn now until Wednesday, which I shall move to do if the agreement is entered into, that when the Senate meets Wednesday, during the further consideration of the conference report, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on the report, and that at an hour not later than 5 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote on the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senate should reject the conference report, would it be in order to recommit the matter to the conference committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it would not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Prior to the vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House has discharged its conferees. There would have to be an entirely new conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly, but that would be a conference as well. But would it not be in order prior to the voting on the conference report to make a motion to recommit the matter to the conference with a request that the House appoint new conferees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So far as the House is concerned the matter is dead, and there is therefore no conference committee. The Senate cannot recommit the measure to the conference committee, because there is no conference committee, the House having acted and discharged its committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry: Could not the Senate request the House to appoint new conferees? Would not that be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; and to request a conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And to request a conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I am getting at. Prior to the final vote on the conference report, if the Senate so desires, it may request the House of Representatives to appoint new conferees, and may send the measure back to conference, and the conference committee could prepare a new conference report and bring it before the Senate. Is that not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that there is no action that the Senate may take in regard to the conference report except to adopt it, reject it, or indefinitely postpone it. If the Senate should reject the conference report, then the bill would not be dead, and on the bill itself the Senate could ask a new conference, but it would have to be after action was taken by the Senate on the conference report and only if it were rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. That brings up the point the Senator from Texas has in mind. His other inquiry was predicated on the statement made by the Chair, that action could be taken if the conference report were rejected. Based on that reply, I propounded the inquiry as to whether it could be done before the conference report was voted on. I now understand the Chair to say that if the report should be rejected the Senate might then request the House to appoint new conferees and recommit the conference report to the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the question of legality has been discussed here, and for the benefit of Senators who may be interested in it, I wish to state that the President of the United States requested a formal opinion from the Attorney General on this subject, and I ask that the clerk read the opinion in order that it may go into the RECORD for the consideration of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

The President,

The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to refer to your inquiry whether the provisions of H. R. 3325 will be sufficient to accomplish their purpose if enacted into law after midnight June 30, 1939. In particular, your question is whether under such circumstances the powers which are conferred upon you by the bill will be extended by it so that they will not expire until June 30, 1941, unless sooner terminated by declaration on your part in accordance with the terms of the bill.

It is my opinion that the bill, if enacted after midnight, June 30, 1939, will confer upon you the powers enumerated in it until June 30, 1941. As the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit said in City of Beatrice v. Massich:

"While there is some conflict of opinion on the subject, the decided weight of authority and the better opinion is that an amendatory statute is not invalid, though it purports to amend a statute which had previously * * * for any reason been held invalid. This question is quite fully considered, and all the authorities cited in the recent opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of Wire Co. v. Boyce (C. C. A.), 104 Fed. 172, to which we refer without citing the cases. Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed."

In the Columbia Wire case, the court for the Seventh Circuit said:

"In Jones v. Commissioner, Judge Cooley, writing the opinion, in response to the argument that an amendatory act which refers to a repealed or nonexistent act must be invalid, said:

"This reasoning seems to us too refined for practical value. Under our Constitution the mode of amending a section of a statute is by enacting that the section in question 'shall read as follows.' The position of the section in the original statute is not changed, and there is no reason why subsequent amendments of the same section should not be made by reference to its number in the original statutes."

H. R. 3325, insofar as it relates to your question, extends certain powers granted the President by specified sections of prior acts of Congress to which specific reference is made. As the Supreme Court of Arkansas, in dealing with a similar question, said in Fenolio v. Sebastian Bridge District (200 S. W. 501), "The law itself is not dead, though the power conferred could no longer be exercised without further legislative action."

While there are some inconsistent decisions of State courts, I find no Federal decision to conflict with the view above expressed, and the great weight of authority fully supports that view. In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 545); Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Van Ness (2 Fed. Cases 574); Patton v. The People (229 Ill. 512); Attorney General v. Stryker (141 Mich. 437); Lawton Spinning Co. v. Commonwealth (232 Mass. 28); Crocker v. Crane (21 Wend (N. Y.) 211); Anderson v. Douglas (Colo.) (186 Pac. 284); People v. Board of County Canvassers (N. Y.) (37 N. E. 649); State v. Bailey (42 Pac. 373; 59 C. J., p. 856); Sutherland Statutory Construction (vol. 1 (2d ed.), p. 435).

The Congress has accepted this view in the past. The Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, approved March 10, 1928, originally required that application for payment of awards under the act be made within a period of 2 years after its enactment. The act has been amended five times since 1928 by merely striking out "2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "4 years", "6 years", "8 years", "10 years", or "12 years". The last two times that this act has been amended in this respect (1936 and 1938) the extending act has in each case extended the expiring provision after it had terminated.

Respectfully,

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that a very brief memorandum which I have prepared on the same subject, referring to an act of Congress which seems to me to be on all fours with the present situation, be also read, in order that it may go into the RECORD following the opinion of the Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the memorandum will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

MEMORANDUM

The Rural Electrification Act of 1936, which was approved on May 20, 1936, contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 3. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to make loans to the Administrator, upon his request approved by the President, not exceeding in the aggregate amount $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. * * *

"(e) * * * And provided further, That no loans shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Administrator after June 30, 1937."

The Rural Electrification Act of 1938, approved June 21, 1938, contained the following section:

"Sec. 401. The act entitled 'An act to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes,' approved May 20, 1936 (49 Stat. 1363), is hereby amended as follows: (a) By inserting in subsection (a) of section 3 thereof immediately following the date 'June 30, 1937,' the phrase 'and $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939,' and (b) by striking out the date 'June 30, 1937' appearing at the end of subsection (e) of such section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof the date 'June 30, 1939.'"

It will be noted that in the amendatory provision of June 21, 1938, which became effective a year after the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under section 3 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 had expired, there is no mention of the revival of the powers of the corporation to make loans to the Administrator. It must have been intended that such a revival of powers would be brought about merely by furnishing additional funds and by changing the original expiration date.

There is no indication that such action, which is all that section 401 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1938 provided, has been construed to be invalid or ineffective.

It is believed that the foregoing is analogous to the situation which would arise if H. R. 3325 became operative after June 30, 1939, and that the powers to which H. R. 3325 relates could be exercised from whatever date the bill became law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I would not be so hasty as to undertake to express the impression that I received from the reading by the clerk of these opinions. They come from good authority, and deserve careful thought and consideration. Even then I have found in my experience that it is often difficult to say what a case does hold.

My colleagues who are interested in the legal question presented will not decide that question. Probably they will decide only the great questions of principle which are involved, and the question of policy which has been so ably argued. However, in fairness to them I think I ought to make this claim, without limiting any of our claims—that is, without limiting them to this claim—that such powers as the conference report referred to are within an exception. I suppose everybody has noticed that. The existing law says they are continuing powers, "but"—in other words, "except"—

That such powers shall expire June 30, 1939, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended.

So that by the law itself it became functus officio. It became dead at midnight yesterday.

I put in the RECORD, without undertaking to discuss it, a case, so that others may investigate it if they wish, which illuminates the word "expires," particularly as it bears upon our problem. I read from Bouvier's Law Dictionary, under the topic Expiration, at page 1161:

When a statute is limited as to time, it expires by mere lapse of time, and then it has no force whatever; and, if such a statute repealed or supplied a former statute, the first statute is, ipso facto, revived by the expiration of the repealing statute, Collins v. Smith (6 Whart. (Pa.) 294; 36 Am. Dec. 228); unless it appear that such was not the intention of the legislature (3 East 212; Bacon Abr. Statute (d)).

I leave the matter there.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to one other substantial difference, merely because I shall not have another opportunity to do so before next Wednesday.

In this case the section provided, as I read it, that the operation of the stabilization fund should be terminated. Therefore, as the Secretary of the Treasury stated, the $2,000,000,000 reverts to the general fund. Whether or not his powers may be continued, I do not see how the $2,000,000,000 can again get out of the Treasury and into any fund without affirmative legislation by this body. There is no question that the stabilization fund is now ended. At this moment it is not in existence; and it seems to me clear that that fact creates a situation which is very different from the situation referred to in the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to file a brief in rebuttal. We may have further opportunity on next Wednesday to discuss this matter. I am ready to move an adjournment at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was just about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will not have to do that.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate now adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes a. m., Saturday, July 1) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, July 5, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Behold the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear Him; upon them that hope in His mercy, to deliver their soul from death and to keep them alive in famine. Our soul waiteth for the Lord; He is our help and shield. Let Thy mercy be upon us according as we hope in Thee. In this trust make us more and more to rejoice in life and its high privileges. Help us to go on our way with peace and gladness in our hearts; to worship Thee by honest work, by faithful service, by helpful deeds, and to find life good by doing good. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6205. An act to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6970) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following Departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Commerce.
3. Department of the Interior.
4. Department of Labor.
5. Department of the Navy.
6. Post Office Department.
7. Department of State.
8. Department of the Treasury.
9. Farm Credit Administration.
10. United States District Court, Southern California.
11. Veterans' Administration.
12. The National Archives.

THE LATE HONORABLE GEORGE BURNHAM

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, it becomes my sad duty to announce to you the death yesterday in my city of San Diego of my predecessor in office, the Honorable George Burnham, Representative from the Twentieth District of California in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

Mr. Burnham was a very fine and distinguished gentleman and citizen of San Diego. Born in London, England, December 28, 1868, he came to America in 1881 and was educated in the public schools, and on coming of age became a naturalized citizen.

Mr. Burnham held many offices of distinction with great ability. He was past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of the Knights Templar of the State of California, past president of the San Diego Council, Boy Scouts of America; past president of the board of trustees of the San Diego Public Library; past president of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce; honorary commercial commissioner to China in 1910; and was one of the organizers and vice presidents of the Panama-California Exposition, and also of the California Pacific International Exposition held in San Diego in 1935 and 1936.

To those of you who served with him, I know the news of his untimely passing will cause deep sorrow. To all of us who knew him, the memory of George Burnham will ever be that of a kindly, Christian gentleman.

To his bereaved family and host of friends we offer our sincerest sympathy.

THE RELIEF BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the statement will be read in lieu of the report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 17, 25, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 129, 130, and 131, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "recreational, production, and service projects, including training for domestic service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: Provided, That the funds appropriated in this section shall not be used for the purchase of any construction equipment or machinery in any case in which such equipment or machinery can be rented at prices determined by the Commissioner to be reasonable, and his determinations, made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, shall be final and conclusive; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "In the aggregate the sum of $50,000,000 during the fiscal year 1940, of which sum the amounts so to be obligated for the following respective purposes shall not exceed these sums: Salaries, $42,500,000; communication service, $600,000; travel, $4,200,000; and printing and binding, $500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Commissioner shall transmit to Congress, on the first day of each regular session thereof, a statement showing for each State the names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all employees of the Work Projects Administration whose compensation is at the rate of $1,200 per annum or more. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'State' shall include the Territories, possessions and the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$143,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "On and after July 1, 1939, and until June 30, 1940, said Board shall be composed of three members to be appointed by the President from widely separated sections of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,755,600,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 15. (a) The Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1 which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration. After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living. The Commissioner shall require that the hours of work for all persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part by funds appropriated by section 1 shall (1) be one hundred and thirty hours per month except that the Commissioner, in his discretion, may require a lesser number of hours of work per month in the case of relief workers with no dependents and the earnings of such workers shall be correspondingly reduced, and (2) not exceed eight hours in any day and shall not exceed forty hours in any week.

"(b) The Commissioner may authorize exemptions from the above limitations of monthly earnings and hours of work to protect work already done on a project; to permit making up lost time; in the case of an emergency involving the public welfare and in the case of supervisory personnel employed on work projects."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "determined, as far as practicable, on the basis of relative needs and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"(b) There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers, excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed on such projects for more than eighteen months, and any relief worker so removed shall be ineligible to be restored to employment on such projects until after (a) the expiration of thirty days after the date of his removal, and (b) recertification of his eligibility for restoration to employment on such projects. In the case of relief workers whose period of eighteen months of continuous employment expires before September 1, 1939, this section shall apply to require their removal not later than August 31, 1939, rather than on such expiration date."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "any compensation after September 30, 1939, to"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 25. None of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be available—

"(a) After June 30, 1939, for the operation of any theater project, except that any person employed on any such project on June 30, 1939, may continue to be carried on the pay roll, with or without assignment of duty incidental to the closing down of such project, and paid his salary or wage (1) for the month of July 1939, if such person is an administrative, supervisory, or other non-certified worker, or (2) for a period ending not later than September 30, 1939, if such person is a certified relief worker; or

"(b) After August 31, 1939, for the operation of any project sponsored solely by the Work Projects Administration.

"This section shall not prohibit the payment of wages or salaries accrued, or of nonlabor obligations incurred, in connection with any such project if the wages or salaries accrued or the obligation was incurred prior to August 1, 1939, October 1, 1939, or September 1, 1939, as the case may be."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(other than those derived from the first processing of sweet potatoes)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "This section shall not apply to municipal electric plants in communities not now adequately served at reasonable rates."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 7 of the matter inserted by such amendment after the word "appropriations" insert the following: "(except persons now serving as such under other law)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment of the title: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the joint resolution, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, submit the following explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This Senate amendment strikes out the House short title of the bill "Work Relief and Public Works Appropriation Act of 1939" and substitutes "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939." The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 2, 22, 27, 32, 43, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 60, 63, 64, 67, 71, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 87, 88, 89, 93, 94, 97, 99, 102, 103, 106, 109, 110, 111, 114, 115, 116, 118, 122, 124, 125, 129, 130, and 131: These Senate amendments are clerical amendments made necessary by the Senate action in striking out title II, relating to the Public Works Administration and its action in combining titles I and III of the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This Senate amendment strikes out the transfer of $125,000,000 to the Public Works Administration. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This Senate amendment authorizes funds to be used for projects for the eradication of plant and fungus pests. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This Senate amendment confines projects for lime and marl production for fertilization to production in Wisconsin. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 6: This Senate amendment restores the provision of existing law relating to certain production and service projects. The House recedes with an amendment which carries out that intention.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment strikes out the House provision for apportionment of work projects on the basis of employment. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 8, 31, 62, 65, 69, 72, and 86: These amendments are clerical changes in section numbers and subsection letters. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 9, 15, 35, 37, 66, 91, and 92: These amendments eliminate the House provision for administration of the Work Projects Administration by a three-man board and provide for its administration by a single Commissioner of Work Projects. They also make the necessary clerical amendments to carry this out. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: This Senate amendment provides that funds appropriated for the Work Projects Administration shall not be used for the purchase of construction equipment or machinery in any case where it can be rented at reasonable prices. The House accepts the Senate amendment with a modification providing that the reasonableness of such prices should be determined by the Commissioner, and that his determinations made in conformity with rules and regulations prescribed by him, should be final and conclusive.

On amendment No. 11: This Senate amendment provides that on and after January 1, 1940, in administering Work Projects funds not to exceed three-fourths of the total cost of all non-Federal projects approved after that date to be undertaken within a State shall be borne by the United States and not less than one-fourth of such total cost shall be borne by the State and its political subdivisions. A similar rule applies to the District of Columbia, the Territories, and possessions. The facts for this purpose are to be determined by the Commissioner and his determination made in accordance with his rules and regulations are to be final and conclusive. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 12: Under the House bill obligations for administrative expenses of the W. P. A. could not exceed, for the fiscal year 1940, $45,000,000; salaries could not exceed $40,000,000; communication service could not exceed $600,000; travel could not exceed $4,200,000; and printing and binding could not exceed $500,000. The Senate amendment eliminates these provisions and provides that obligations for administrative expense cannot exceed 4 percent of the total amount made available to W. P. A. The conference agreement adopts the House provisions except for the total amount, which is fixed at $50,000,000, and the amount for salaries, which is fixed at $42,500,000.

On amendment No. 13: This Senate amendment requires that the name, address, position, and compensation of all W. P. A. employees whose compensation is at a rate of $1,000 per annum shall be public records, available to any citizen of the United States on his request, and reported to the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House on the 1st of each month. The House accepts the Senate amendment with modifications under which the Commissioner is to transmit a statement to Congress at the beginning of each session showing for each State the names, addresses, positions, and compensation of all such employees whose compensation is at the rate of $1,200 or more. A similar statement is to be submitted for the Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia.

On amendment No. 14: This is a technical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 16: The House bill authorized the President to detail a commissioned officer of the Engineer Corps on the active list to perform the functions of Commissioner of Works Projects and to be a member of the Board. Such officer was to receive his pay, allowances, and travel expenses as commissioned officer, but no compensation or travel expenses from the W. P. A. appropriations. The Senate amendment authorizes the detail of such an officer to perform the functions of Commissioner. He is to receive, in addition to pay and allowances as officer, an amount sufficient to make his total compensation $10,000 per annum while he is detailed as Commissioner. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This Senate amendment increases the N. Y. A. appropriation from $100,000,000 to $123,000,000. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 18: This Senate amendment makes the unobligated balances available to the N. Y. A. available to it for fiscal year 1940. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 19: This is a technical amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 20: This amendment increases the amount appropriated to the Department of Agriculture from $123,000,000 to $163,000,000. The conference agreement fixes this amount at $143,000,000.

On amendments Nos. 21 and 23: Under the House bill the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to accept from recipients of rural relief voluntary agreements for the performance of work.

These amendments provide that the Secretary shall require employable recipients of relief to perform work; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 24: This is a technical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment amends the Farm Tenant Act to permit refinancing of existing mortgages on farms owned and operated by the mortgagor if he cannot obtain Federal credit elsewhere. It also appropriates an additional $10,000,000 for carrying out the Farm Tenant Act; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment makes a necessary technical amendment to the appropriation for the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration to authorize projects described in the section which are other than projects for rural rehabilitation for needy persons in Puerto Rico. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: This Senate amendment increases the amount available for administrative expenses of the Public Health Service from $300,000 to $600,000. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 29: This Senate amendment provides that during the fiscal year 1940 the National Resources Planning Board shall consist of the Secretaries of Treasury, War, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, and the Federal Works Administrator, and three other members to be appointed by the President from widely separate sections of the United States. Senate confirmation is required of such appointed members. The President is to designate one of the appointed members of the Board as Chairman and another as Vice Chairman. The House accepts the Senate amendment with a modification under which the Board, for the fiscal year 1940, is to consist of three appointive members to be confirmed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 30: This Senate amendment increases the total of appropriations for relief from $1,735,600,000 to $1,808,900,000. The conference agreement results in a reduction of the amount to $1,755,600,000.

On amendment No. 33: This is a technical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This Senate amendment provides that the funds made available shall be used only for work relief or relief of persons in need, except as otherwise specifically provided. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 36: This Senate amendment increases the authorization of allocations by the W. P. A. to Federal agencies for projects from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 38, 39, 40, and 41: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 42: Under the House bill projects prosecuted under allocations to other Federal agencies were not permitted if the percentage of nonrelief persons employed exceeded 15 percent of the total. The Senate amendment reduces this percentage to 5 percent. The conference agreement fixes the percentage at 10 percent.

On amendment No. 44: This is a technical amendment which permits non-Federal nonsponsored projects in Puerto Rico; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 46: Under the House bill none of the funds expended on the construction of a non-Federal building if the Federal part of the cost exceeded $40,000. The Senate amendment increases this limitation to $75,000. The conference agreement fixes the amount at $52,000.

On amendments Nos. 47 and 48: The House bill excepted from the prohibition on use of funds for construction of buildings, buildings on which construction was in progress on June 14, 1939, or if the project has been approved by the President. The Senate amendment substitutes for the two exceptions a single exception of projects approved by the President on or before July 1, 1939; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 55: Under the House bill the Board was to fix a monthly earning schedule and fix the hours of required work. Exemptions were authorized in emergencies and of supervisory personnel. The Senate amendment provides for prevailing rates of pay and not less than minimum rates established under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Commissioner in fixing monthly earning schedules is to consider differentials according to the various classes of work only and is not to fix differentials between cities and counties on the basis of degree or urbanization or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less-urbanized areas. The provisions of the House bill are restored with modifications under which there are added to the exemptions from the limitations of monthly earnings and hours of work cases in which it was necessary to protect work already done on the project and to permit making up lost time. The conference agreement also provides that after August 31, 1939, the monthly earning schedule is not to be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified in cost of living.

On amendment No. 56: This is a clerical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 57: This Senate amendment eliminates the House provision under which preference in employment and retention was to be determined on the basis of relative need and other preferences were to apply only when relative needs were the same. The House provision is restored with a modification that such preferences are to be determined as far as practicable on the basis of relative need, and where the relative needs are found to be the same the preferences are to be given in the order prescribed in the House bill.

On amendment No. 58: This is a clerical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment strikes out the House provision which required that relief workers employed continuously for more than 18 months should be removed from the rolls and be eligible to restoration only after 60 days and recertification. It also substitutes therefor a provision under which employable persons who have been certified for 3 months or more and not been given employment shall have preference over those who have been in active employment status on projects for 18 months or more. The provision is not to apply where it would result in undue hardship. The conference agreement restores the House provision with a change in the period relating to restoration to the rolls from 60 days to 30 days. The provision of the House bill that the subsection should not apply to heads of families aged 45 years and over is also eliminated.

On amendment No. 61: This amendment strikes out the House provision under which, after April 1, 1940, persons eligible for Social Security Act benefits when funds were available to grant such benefits were not to be given employment or retained in employment. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 68: Under the House bill any person who took private employment and lost it through no fault of his own, and who is still in need, is entitled to resumption of his W. P. A. employment status. This Senate amendment adds a provision that he must, prior to restoration, have drawn all the benefits of employment compensation accruing to him during his term of employment and available to him. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 70: This is a clerical amendment. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 73 and 74: These are clerical amendments. The House recedes on amendment No. 73 and accepts amendment No. 74 with a modification which makes it operative only after September 30, 1939.

On amendment No. 80: This amendment strikes out the House limitation of $500 allowable to any agency for attendance at meetings. The House provision permitted such expense only when specifically authorized. Under the Senate amendment such expenses may be incurred when on official business. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 84: This amendment authorizes fixing of compensation of officers and employees without regard to the Classification Act of 1923. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 85: This amendment strikes out the House provision prohibiting certain increases in compensation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 90: This amendment strikes out the House provisions prohibiting theater projects and projects sponsored solely by the W. P. A., and substitutes therefor a limitation of three-fourths of 1 percent of the total funds available as the amount which might be available after October 31, 1939, for projects sponsored solely by the W. P. A.

The conference agreement restores the provisions of the House bill, with the modifications in the case of theater projects, under which none of the funds made available by the joint resolution shall be available after June 30, 1939, for the operation of any theater project. Exceptions are made, however, in the case of employees who may be carried on the pay rolls during the month of July in administrative or supervisory capacity, and for certified relief workers who may be paid up to October 1, 1939.

On amendments Nos. 95, 96, 100, 101, 107, 108, 112, and 113: These amendments are clerical amendments. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 98: This eliminates from the persons who may not solicit party contributions persons who may be entitled to employment under the joint resolution, but who have not yet received employment. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 104: This is a technical clarifying amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 105: This Senate amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill under which no recommendation of any person for employment given by any Senator or Representative (except as to the character or residence of the applicant) shall be received or considered in making appointments to be compensated out of funds appropriated under the resolution; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 117: This amendment strikes out the short title of title 1 of the House resolution. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, and 123: These amendments strike out the House provisions for $125,000,000 for Public Works Administration projects. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 126: This amendment prevents funds appropriated from being used for the relocation of mills, factories, etc., which would make for sale articles in competition with existing industries. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 127: The House bill contained a prohibition on the use of funds appropriated for the purchase, expansion, etc., of plants which would manufacture or produce for sale articles in competition with existing industries. This Senate amendment exempts the production of products derived from the first processing of agricultural products. The House accepts the Senate amendment with a limitation that it shall cover only the first processing of sweetpotatoes.

On amendment No. 128: This amendment exempts municipal electric plants from the provision of the House bill under which funds are not to be used for plants which would manufacture products for sale in competition with existing industries. The House accepts the Senate amendment with a modification that it shall not apply except in communities which are not adequately served at reasonable rates.

On amendment No. 132: The Senate amendment provides for the appointment by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of any administrator or other officer named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the work and program contemplated under the appropriations if the salary received under the appropriation is $5,000 or more per annum, and for the appointment of any State or regional administrator receiving such a salary. Section 1761 of the Revised Statutes is not to apply to such an appointee. His salary may not be increased within a period of 6 months after confirmation. The House accepts the Senate amendment but exempts persons who are serving as State or regional administrators under existing law.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment to the title.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important conference report and I think we should have a quorum. I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After a pause.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 111]

Andrews	Connery	Harrington	Rees, Kans.
Arnold	Curley	Jeffries	Smith, Conn.
Boehne	Dies	Kelly	Smith, Ill.
Burdick	Disney	Kerr	Smith, W. Va.
Byron	Eaton, Calif.	Lea	Summers, Tex.
Cannon, Fla.	Ellis	Luce	Vorys, Ohio
Cannon, Mo.	Engel	McGranery	Wheat
Cartwright	Fitzpatrick	McReynolds	Wood
Casey, Mass.	Folger	Mapes

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 395 Members have answered to their names, a quorum. Without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

THE RELIEF BILL, 1940

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is the conference report on House Joint Resolution 326, familiarly referred to as the relief bill.

We bring a complete report, signed by all of the conferees, which, if approved by the House, will be complete action on the joint resolution as far as the House is concerned, if concurred in by the Senate.

This bill is forty or fifty million dollars less than the amount of the bill as it passed the Senate. The Senate added $23,000,000 additional funds for the National Youth Administration, $40,000,000 additional funds for the Farm Security Administration, $10,000,000 additional funds for the farm tenancy, and some other smaller items. The conferees have reduced those amounts and, as I say, the bill is forty or fifty million dollars less than those amounts added by the Senate, and still well under the Budget estimates.

This bill provides every penny requested by the President for W. P. A. for the next fiscal year. No matter what our idea may be about relief, it is realized that certainly for a time the Federal Government will have to participate in a program for furnishing unemployment relief to needy American citizens. The W. P. A. program, as I have previously stated upon this floor, was a lifesaver in a great emergency. It afforded emergency employment and relief to millions of our fellow citizens scattered all over the United States who, without its aid, would probably have had great suffering, great sorrow, and great distress.

In bringing in this bill we have tried to preserve the good features of that program. On the other hand, we have sought to seek out and remedy its imperfections and its shortcomings. Every restriction written into this bill by the Congress when it shall shortly become the law, will be a restriction that has for its purpose trying to make this a more workable program; trying to preserve its humanitarian purposes; trying to make it defensible; trying to spread the benefits of this Federal generosity equitably and decently among all sections of the country and among all groups of unemployed people.

It carries out more nearly than any bill that Congress has ever passed the fundamental purposes for which the work-relief program was originally created. That is, to afford unemployment relief to needy citizens. Congress for the first time has vigorously moved into this picture and asserted its legislative prerogatives. I think the provisions in this bill may fairly be interpreted by the country as an indication that Congress, so long as the Federal Government shall have to appropriate for these purposes, will insist upon the elimination of waste and inefficiency; will insist upon a decent and equitable spread of these benefits among people who are entitled to them. I think it may fairly be interpreted as an indication that the Congress is going to insist that this program clean its own house.

This bill is not going to suit some people. You know we are not so optimistic as to hope that we can please everybody. If we can please a large number of the people we are fortunate. This bill is not going to please those citizens who feel that the Federal Government should throw open its treasury and bid all who have the notion, walk in and load their pockets.

It is not going to suit those who believe that the Federal Government should carry all of this load of unemployment relief. It is not going to suit those groups of citizens who would like to mobilize and organize and exploit politically the unfortunate unemployed people of this country. It is not going to suit the emotionally inclined element of our citizenship who believe that there is an obligation on the Federal Government to subsidize and rejuvenate and rebuild the theatrical industry in America. It is not going to suit those communities and those officials of communities and States who have been engaged in a rather high-class intellectual sort of chiseling on the Federal Treasury, of passing on to the Federal Treasury the burdens which they should bear themselves. It is not going to suit some of the administrative people involved in this program who perhaps will not get the large increases in salaries that they usually get every time we pass a relief bill, nor will they get unlimited traveling and administrative expenses that they have been used to.

But this bill will please and it will be heartening to millions of American citizens who are willing to have their Government stretch forth a helping hand to the needy and unfortunate portion of our citizenship, but who want to see it done in a decent and clean way, and, if I may speak to my own side of the aisle for a moment and be pardoned, I hope I may not be unduly partisan: This bill will please hundreds of thousands of Democrats who have taken great pride in the accomplishment of their party, which stepped into a great emergency and helped the unfortunate people of this country. They can in the future look forward to its program, hold up their heads, and not find things of which to be ashamed. [Applause.]

The committee of this House charged with investigating the W. P. A. will continue to be interested in this program. It will continue to function with the sole purpose of trying to assist in curing the defects wherever they may be found to exist and in helping to make this a more workable and more defensible program. With this approach I shall go through the bill very briefly and refer to the amendments and what was done with them in conference.

Senate amendment No. 3 struck out of the bill the $125,000,000 which had been earmarked for the Public Works Administration. The Secretary of the Interior, so we were informed, went before the Senate committee and approved of that Senate amendment returning this fund to W. P. A. There was, therefore, little left to be done but for the House conferees to agree to strike out that $125,000,000 earmarked for the Public Works Administration and permit it to go back into the funds of W. P. A., thereby giving to W. P. A. every penny which the President had asked for its operations.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendments striking out the formula for allocation of jobs. That formula, you will recall, was discussed in the House. It is Senate amendment No. 7. There was a great deal of doubt and a great deal of speculation as to just what it would mean. It provided an allocation of jobs to States on the basis of 45-percent population, 45-percent unemployment, which is an unknown quantity, and 10-percent discretion with the administration, thereby leaving 55 percent of the formula a speculative and unknown quantity. After much consultation the House conferees agreed to strike out the formula.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to complete the statement, if the gentleman will permit; then I shall be pleased to yield.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment which required a 25-percent local sponsorship of projects, known as the Byrnes amendment. Such an amendment would have been put in by the House committee except, as I stated in the House at the time, we hesitated to put in a 25-percent minimum for fear it would have the effect of making it a 25-percent maximum. This is pretty elastic, however, and it is believed that it will be a very great help in securing an adequate and proper participation by localities in this program.

The Senate conferees yielded on their amendments which struck out House limitations on administrative expenses. The House action stands except that we increased the total amount from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000. Administrative expenses of W. P. A. for the current fiscal year are $72,000,000. Under this bill, therefore, their administrative expenses have been reduced to $50,000,000. We did not take the money out of the bill, but we reduced the administrative expenses, thereby potentially increasing the amount that may be available for jobs for project workers by $22,000,000.

The House conferees yielded on the amendment calling for a three-man board for W. P. A. We had much discussion with the Senate conferees and, of course, met a very insistent demand on the part of the Senate that the board be eliminated. May I say in passing that the House conferees felt very keenly on this subject? We felt that an institution which had handled $1,500,000,000 of the taxpayers' money scattered in 48 States and the Territories, dealing with millions of citizens was a job just a little bit too big for one man; and the investigations and the facts coming before our committee showed that it was just humanly impossible for any one man to keep abreast of all of this, and we felt that if there should be additional assistants needed, that the assistants should come not in the form of some person selected by the Administrator to serve as his deputy, but some person selected by the President and approved by the Congress.

We have yielded on that, however, and we express the very high hope that under this new arrangement, a new Works Administrator coming over top of W. P. A., that there may be increased vigilance and increased attention to administrative details which will meet many of the objections which have been made heretofore to the program.

On the National Youth Administration, which was Senate amendment No. 17, the Senate receded, leaving the amount at $100,000,000, which was the amount agreed upon in the House, with the addition that we give them their unexpended balance, not exceeding $1,500,000.

On amendment No. 20, which was the Farm Security Administration, the Senate added $40,000,000 to the amount passed by the House, thereby increasing the Budget by $40,000,000.

The House conferees very reluctantly yielded to half of that amount, thereby raising the amount to $143,000,000. May I say that personally that was the hardest part of this report for me to yield on, so far as the House position was concerned.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The gentleman yielded on the farm features but in connection with the other projects involved in the cities, the gentleman stood pat and did not yield at all?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is not seeing very clearly.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Yes; I see all right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Nor is he listening intently.

Mr. McKEOUGH. I have listened intently. The gentleman yielded on the farm feature.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We very reluctantly yielded on that, but we put back into the W. P. A., in which the gentleman is interested, no doubt, as I previously stated, $125,000,000.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The gentleman added that the Secretary of the Interior at the hearing asked that that be done and indicated it was somewhat of a presumption on the part of your committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. With reference to the amount appropriated for farm security, the House figures are $100,000,000 less than actually expended for farm security last year.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not that much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There was $100,000,000 for relief, a total of $140,000,000 last year.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, it is only a difference of $35,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is only a difference of $35,000,000. We gave them the Budget estimate, and we should not forget that the Congress has given to agricultural relief nearly a half-billion dollars more than the Budget estimates already. I am one of those who believe there should be some way, somehow, a limit to things of this sort.

The Senate receded on amendment No. 25, which undertook to amend the Bankhead-Jones Act in certain particulars to include $10,000,000 for the purpose of farm tenancy. We retained the provision in the bill requiring these funds to be apportioned over a 12-month period. There was a definite commitment from the Works Progress Administration that the amount estimated by the President should carry the program along for the next fiscal-year period, of course, barring unforeseen calamities, tragedies, and emergencies.

We agreed to the Senate amendment increasing from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 the amount which may be allocated for Federal projects; that is, authorized improvements at an Army base, Navy base, or a Government institution; in other words, where the Federal Government is the sponsor.

We agreed on a compromise amendment on non-Federal building construction limitations. The House provision was $40,000 of Federal funds. The Senate figure was $75,000 and the conferees agreed on $52,000.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Were any other changes made except in the amount?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is the only change that was made. Under this provision, on non-Federal building construction projects, there may be received of Federal funds not to exceed $52,000. That is to say, if a community has a project, it can apply for a W. P. A. grant of not to exceed $52,000. Of course, the community can put in whatever it wishes to put in, but it cannot go above $52,000 of Federal funds.

Mr. RABAUT. Is that "project" or "building"?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Building construction.

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Does this strike out the provision that the House put in exempting those construction projects upon which bonds had previously been issued?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No.

Mr. POAGE. Those are taken care of?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It does not change anything else. We retained the House provision in this bill that receipts of any kind coming from any of these W. P. A. activities shall be covered into the Federal Treasury and not used as a revolving fund over which the Congress would have no control.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I am curious about this report, because we in New York City are very anxious about the theatrical projects.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am coming to that in a minute.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. Referring to amendment No. 29, the National Resources Board, it is stated that the House accepts the Senate amendment with the modification under which the Board is to consist of three appointive members. Is that three appointive members only or does that include secretaries?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Secretaries are not a part of the Board.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is to be a three-man board, the members to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. FERGUSON. How does that change the existing situation?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There are five members under the existing situation, but it goes under reorganization. This will give them a three-man board, the members of which will be appointed by the President.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I did not understand the gentleman's remarks relative to the amount for farm relief.

Did the gentleman state that over $500,000,000 in addition to the Budget estimate is provided in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If I said that I did not mean to say it, I may say to the gentleman. As I recall, it is something over $300,000,000 over and above the Budget estimates, which the Congress has approved.

Mr. SABATH. Three hundred million dollars, and that is the total of farm relief in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The total in this bill is $123,000,000 for the Farm Security Administration, plus $20,000,000 on which we agreed with the Senate. We split their increase half in two.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. How much has this bill been increased over the amount as the bill left the House?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. About $22,000,000.

Mr. TABER. But it is still $3,000,000 below the Budget.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is still $3,000,000 below the Budget, even with that increase.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY. What provision has been made to keep the Farm Security Administration from going into business in competition with other lines of business?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is a very adequate provision in here covering that.

Mr. MURRAY. You left that in there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it is in here.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. As I understand, grants can be made in the sum of $52,000 on non-Federal projects?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not to exceed $52,000.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. What percentage does the community have to put up?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Twenty-five percent, under the Byrnes amendment.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. I believe it was possibly not made clear by the gentleman, but that is on erection only.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It applies to all types of projects.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That applies only after January 1, 1940, does it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; there is no such date as that on that provision.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. No; I mean after the 25-percent contribution.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I believe that is right.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am not quite clear on the preference or nonpreference given workers who apply for employment under W. P. A.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I have not gotten to that yet, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER and Mr. FERGUSON rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield now to the two gentlemen who have just risen, but after that I shall decline to yield until I have completed my statement.

Mr. KELLER. I do not want the gentleman to yield. I wish the gentleman would finish his statement, because I am getting something out of it. When the gentleman makes a statement, if he will go clear through with it we will get something out of it. I hope the gentleman will finish his statement without any interruption.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. Since the National Resources Planning Board has been mentioned, does this provision for funds give the National Resources Planning Board legislative standing? Has Congress recognized it, or is it still an agency created by Executive order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is an agency created by Executive order, but recognized for 1 year because we appropriate for it for 1 year.

Mr. FERGUSON. This just gives it life for 1 year.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now I should like to go ahead with my statement, and later I shall try to answer any questions that may be asked.

The House provision relating to rates of pay and the hours of work have been retained in the bill. This was a formula recommended by the Works Progress Administration and the President in lieu of the prevailing rate of wage and hours of work. This provides for the security wage, and in addition to that the House conferees agreed to a Senate amendment which would seek to prevent differentials as between different sections, the rates of pay to be equalized as far as may be possible between different sections of the country.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. As I understand, the conference report incorporates in the bill substantially the same language as I offered by way of amendment in the House to prevent wage differentials on other bases than that of differences in cost of living.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TARVER. I wish to express my appreciation to the gentleman for that action.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Georgia has been very active and very persistent in trying to get such a provision into the law.

Amendment No. 57 related to preference for employment, and we retained the House provision requiring that in employing and in retaining for employment as far as practicable the relative need be considered, that veterans be given preference, and so forth. The difference between the amendment as it comes now in the report and as it passed the House is that under the amendment as it passed the House, if it were a question of employing a person on W. P. A. or dismissing a person, and on one hand you had a widow with five children and no means of support and on the other hand you had a single able-bodied veteran, the veteran got preference over the widow with five children. I do not believe any veteran or any veterans' organization would want that. We provide here that, all things being equal as to necessity and need, veterans be given a preference, and that is substantially, as I understand, the rule that has been carried in the law; and I believe such a rule would be approved by the veterans' organizations of the country.

We provide the usual section not permitting aliens to participate in the program.

We retain the House language which calls for a periodic investigation and purging of the rolls.

We retain the language in existing law which requires that a person must not refuse bona fide private employment.

We provide that all supervisory personnel, all people in administrative positions, be required to take the usual oath of office; that is, the oath of office that other employees of the Government take.

We retain the language inserted on the floor of the House which prohibits the payment of any compensation on and after September 30 to any person who advocates or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

We eliminated from the bill a provision inserted by the House against salary increases, and that was for this reason, and I wish to explain lest it be misunderstood. W. P. A. goes under reorganization tomorrow. The reorganization bill provides that there may be no increases in salaries during the next fiscal year. Therefore the language carried in this bill was unnecessary, but it was necessary to have some such language in the law because I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that from the period October 1, 1938, to May 15, 1939, a period, you will recall, in which W. P. A. project workers were being laid off by the wholesale because of insufficiency of funds, during that period in the administrative office in Washington, 113 employees, whose salaries each were $4,000 and over, received increases in wages aggregating $56,300. Of course, there were some demotions. There were 15 demotions aggregating $8,200, but the net result was an increase in administrative pay in the set-up in Washington. During that critical period, when Congress was being called inhumane because it was withholding funds, they received salaries, the net result of which was $48,000 over and above the pay roll of last October. Such a thing will be impossible under the present bill.

This bill retains the House language eliminating the Federal theaters with this exception. I hope I am not being unduly personal when I make the following statement, but notwithstanding the fact that the amendment coming from the committee eliminating the Federal theaters was from a unanimous committee, not a dissenting voice on the subcommittee or the whole committee, it seems that myself, the gentleman from Virginia, seems to be held up as the executioner of the Federal theater project. I am quite willing to take the blame or the credit, according to whatever your opinion of the subject may be, but I offered an amendment in conference, and I make it personal because of the fact that I have been referred to personally in it, which provides that the administrative personnel of the Federal theater project may be carried on the rolls for 30 days unless sooner assigned to other W. P. A. duties or engaged in private employment; that the actors and actresses and the technicians who have been certified from relief rolls may be carried for a period of 90 days unless sooner absorbed either in some sort of private employment or assigned to other projects by the Works Progress Administration.

Let me now make a statement. There has never been any thought in the minds of anyone that they were not willing for unemployed actors and actresses to participate in the Federal employment program. The objection has been, however, in the operation of the costly and questionable theatrical projects. Many of them have been splendid. In the States and in the small communities there have been many very fine plays and playlets and acts put on which were enjoyed by schools and colleges and C. C. C. camps, and what not. Some of the larger productions, because of unreasonable costs, and because of ridiculous length of time for rehearsals and because of the inexperience and amateurishness of the people involved in the productions, have been indefensible, to say nothing of the fact that many of them have been decidedly and emphatically subversive in their tendencies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I have an affectionate regard for the gentleman and a high regard for his ability in the discharge of his duties, nevertheless we may disagree with him, and I may say that I notice that among the managers on the part of the House and the Senate there is no one who comes from New York City. The thespians congregate in New York and we have most of the difficulties, and we will have most of the penury and want and distress that will result from what the gentleman and his colleagues on the part of the House and Senate will do with reference to this bill.

Remember you wipe out all the W. P. A. arts projects. You end employment in New York City alone of over 7,000 actors, artists, musicians, writers, and archivists. Heretofore our city was furnishing about 20 percent of the total outlay for W. P. A. "white collar" projects like the writers project, the music project, and so forth. Our city was doing more than its share to help create jobs. Now you force the city to forego even that cooperation. The rule of the day will be mass lay-offs—with springboard jumps back to home relief. It is for us in New York most disheartening. It should have been and could have been quite different had you been just a bit sympathetic to our plea, had you been willing to learn—if you did not know—and to appreciate the worthwhileness, the artistic advantage to the Nation of the arts projects. Remember this, the Federal theater has greatly helped American—native—dramatic art. It has produced over 100 new plays by American authors, many of whom were given their first opportunity by the project. The contrary statements constantly appearing, notwithstanding, especially by the ill-informed, less than 10 percent of the authors of this project were concerned primarily with social problems. It always sought to supplement rather than compete with the commercial theater. It emphasized such activities as the children's theater, dance theater, religious theater, marionette theater, and the celebration of civic, State, and national holidays.

You are now going to throw on home relief all those in these "white collar" projects, in the music, in the ballet, and in the theater and on the writers project. You are going to saddle New York City with a tremendous burden. We are trying to evolve all manner and kind of taxes in New York City to take care of those on home relief. We are finding it more and more difficult every day to supply the funds. I regretfully state that a grave mistake is being made by casting out particularly this theatrical project. I want to say this also, that several of the productions—I will say almost a dozen of the productions were not only self-supporting, but brought into W. P. A. over a million dollars, and you cannot disregard that. So you cannot say it was all loss.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now will the gentleman yield to me a little? [Laughter.] The Federal Government has spent on the theater project $41,000,000, and there has been a little over $1,000,000 in cash receipts. That is the financial picture. We are renting many theaters that would otherwise be dark; money pouring into the pockets of theater owners that ought to be going for relief projects.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just briefly.

Mr. SIROVICH. You said that they spent $41,000,000 on the theatrical projects of the W. P. A.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said that; yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. In how many years?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Since the beginning of the program.

Mr. SIROVICH. How many years is that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would say 3 or 4 years.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman realize that the American theater is the only institution in the world on which the United States makes the theater-going public pay taxes, while in every civilized nation of the world with the exception of China and India, and a few other small nations, they subsidize their theaters, and you collect $11,000,000 a year in taxes upon the theaters? In 4 years you collected $44,000,000 which you should give back to the theaters to help support the deserving and distinguished actors and actresses who are today unemployed, the victims of hunger, penury, and want, and that would pay for the maintenance of two Federal W. P. A. theaters in our country?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. All right. Does the gentleman approve of the manner in which the personnel has been employed on the Federal theater project in New York? Is it not true that they have not employed destitute actors, but they have put on garment workers, fish peddlers, and so forth, amateurs and people who would be actors? Does not the gentleman know that is the fact, because he knows the situation in New York?

Mr. SIROVICH. But let me ask the gentleman a very pertinent question that would solve the Federal theater project—

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But the gentleman does not answer.

Mr. SIROVICH. One minute. If the theatrical projects of the United States would be purged of the element that the gentleman talks of, would he be willing to support a bill to take care of the real unemployed actors and artists who have been entertaining the people of the United States, but who are now in penury, hunger, and want, and who could carry on the great traditions of our living spoken drama—

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is a different question.

Mr. SIROVICH. I want the gentleman's answer. Will you support a bill of mine now before a House committee creating a department of fine arts, including our American Federal theater project requiring us to provide work for the unemployed of the theatrical profession?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now, just a moment. I do not yield further.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will yield to the gentleman in a minute.

Now, what the gentleman says about what may be done if it is cleaned up—when this bill was here in January I stood in the Well of this House and protested against one of the productions just being brought in, Sing for Your Supper. I pointed out that it was costing $250,000 to produce it; that it was loaded with amateurs; that there was not anything in it commendable. Was that just the gentleman from Virginia, who is not, perhaps, as cultured and, perhaps, not as appreciative of the refining influences of the arts of sciences? Well, no; not altogether. Did you ever hear of Mr. Brooks Atkinson, one of the leading theatrical critics of America, the theatrical critic of the New York Times? He said:

Sing for Your Supper has officially concluded its rehearsal period. After a year and a half of preparation and a desperate drive within the last few weeks to get on some stage before the actors start drawing old-age pensions, it opened at the Adelphi last evening.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In just a moment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Except this—

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Well, I did not yield to the gentleman.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. He says further:

It would be pleasant to say that the quality of this Federal theater revue justified the long months that have gone into it. But Show Boat would seem morose if it stayed indoors as long as that. And excepting a few numbers, notably, Papa's Got a Job, the Federal theater's musical jinx box turns out to be a mediocre show.

Now my friend talks about reforming it. W. P. A. would not reform it. You could not get the people in charge of the Federal theater project to admit that there was anything wrong with it, or to show the slightest effort or the slightest desire to put out of it this indefensible stuff.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not a fact that in spite of that criticism, Mr. Brooks Atkinson sent you a telegram together with various others urging the continuance of the theater project?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, of course. Certainly. Some of the actors and actresses want the theater subsidized by the Federal Government in spite of this kind of rotten stuff. I want the Federal Government to get out of the theater business, but I am willing to help the actors and actresses who cannot support themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There are many other items to cover. I cannot yield further to the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the other arts projects are left on the basis of sponsorship. This is perhaps one of the blunders that the committee made. I hold in my hand a book, not written on the Federal writers project but written by members who are writers on the writers project on off time, and bearing in the front of it a foreword of approval by the Director, Mr. Henry G. Alsberg, National Director of the Federal writers project. I will not give you the name of the book because I do not wish to advertise it. On the flyleaf of the cover are advertised other books. One of them is Moscow in 1937; another is Changing Man, the Soviet Education System; another is the Spirit and Struc- ture of the German Fascism; another is the Revolution in Mexico. Those are the books advertised, very properly, on the flyleaf of this book. If you had this book in your house you would hide it in your library lest one of your children read it. The leading article in it is by a Negro W. P. A. writer, who depicts his experiences as bellboy in a low hotel habituated by men and women of questionable character where he waited upon them in their rooms when they were unclad, and so forth. I might be expelled from this House if I read into the RECORD some of the trash and rot in that book. And it is approved by W. P. A.

Now, as to the arts project. Something has been said in the papers about pictures. Those books are locked in the vaults of the committee, and I hope they will never again see the light of day. They are not the nude pictures of artists' models; they are the nude pictures of relief workers in New York, people applying for relief in the city of New York who were sent to some photographer to have their bodies undraped and their pictures taken in order that they might be exhibited to artists.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not now.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I want to answer the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Those pictures were the pictures of relief workers, not artists' models. That book was brought out in headquarters of W. P. A. art project so that the so-called artists, working in their studios, or their homes, might, whenever they should desire an artist's model, if you please, come in and thumb the pages of those books containing the undraped pictures of destitute people and select the so-called model. The so-called model was then sent to the artist's studio or workshop. I do not like to drag that stuff out and talk about it—it is not pleasant to me—but I want to say to you that your committee is determined, as well as the Congress, that that kind of stuff is going to be cleaned up. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to ask the gentleman a question about the provision that people shall be dismissed after 18 months. As I understand it, the bill as it now stands requires absolutely and emphatically the dismissal of all people who have been on the rolls 18 months or more, no matter what their age, and that the exception the House put in the bill which would have excepted heads of families 45 years of age or over is now taken out of the bill, so that it applies also to them. Am I correct on that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As I recollect, the 45-year age limitation did not apply to the 18 months' provision. I think that was in another part of the bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am corrected; my colleague on the committee tells me that the bill as it now stands requires that everyone who has been on the rolls for 18 months shall step down, but that after 30 days, if the certification agency finds they are still in need of relief, they are eligible for reemployment. This is for the purpose of permitting other people who have not had an opportunity to get the benefit of this program to be considered. In some of the communities of this country 44 percent of the people on W. P. A. have been there for 3 or 4 years. Why not give the other eligible people a chance?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am worried about the people who are being dropped. It seems to me the Senate provision is administratively impossible.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. An exemption to the automatic 60-day lay-off for heads of families—men and women—45 years and over with dependents was my amendment passed in the House by a teller vote; and now to realize that that humanitarian provision has been eliminated by the conferees comes as a distinct surprise to the membership of this body.

In my opinion, the W. P. A., by the very nature of its set-up, should be a secure place for those in need of its humanitarian provisions, especially those of the age referred to and heads of families. Everyone knows a man or woman with dependents can save nothing on W. P. A. wages. The dread of the automatic lay-off period will prove a continuous worry throughout the period of employment. Perhaps legislation to correct this injustice is the answer.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will go off whether need is shown or not, but they may be reconsidered by the certifying agency in the community which certifies them and may be reemployed at the end of 30 days if eligibility is shown.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield briefly?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman's report is, of course, rather extensive and there are many amendments. I am just wondering if it would interfere with the statement he desires to make if I should call his attention to amendment No. 128, relating to competition with private industry.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I know what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MAY. I think there must be an error in the amendment as printed on page 5 of the report.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The amendment provides that you cannot compete with private industry. The gentleman is thinking of amendment 128, which provides that you cannot build electric plants in communities where there is now adequate service.

Mr. MAY. The amendment says where there is not now service.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The language is right, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia a question? The gentleman referred to Rockwell Kent as being the spokesman for the artists of America. Did not Mr. Kent state that the photographs were taken by the committee investigator out of the files of the W. P. A. and that they were in fact professional models of the W. P. A. that were used by the artists?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will look at the pictures, he will see they are not professional artists' models, because I am sure his eye is keen enough to discern that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill, while it is not truly a relief bill, represents the first step taken by the Congress toward promoting efficiency in relief administration. Most of the provisions adopted by the House designed to get rid of malingerers who were not entitled to relief, who have been drawing pay from the W. P. A., and most of the provisions designed to promote efficiency in the operation of the W. P. A. which the House adopted to start with, are retained. There are many more that ought to be adopted before it can be a real efficient program.

To bring about an efficient relief administration there must be these changes:

First. We must get rid of the incompetence and inefficiency of W. P. A. management and install someone in responsible position who has the character, integrity, and ability to give good administration.

Second. We must decentralize; we must get rid of so much overhead and incompetence in Washington, have less Federal discretion, and put more responsibility on the local community for the administration.

Third. By giving competent administration we must take better care of those in real need and still save money for the taxpayer.

Fourth. We must stop the costly printing of large picture books which are printed in violation of the law, and right now are being distributed by the W. P. A. in violation of the postal laws.

Fifth. We must stop the employment of 35,000 administrative employees and 35,000 supervisory employees of W. P. A.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TABER. Not for a parliamentary inquiry; no.

Mr. Speaker, when the bill came back from the Senate it carried increases of $73,000,000, none of which, in my opinion, were justified, and in the case of only one item of increase in dollars did the House yield. That was in connection with the Farm Security Administration, where we yielded $20,000,000.

This bill goes to the administration with the adoption of the pending conference report. They have been given all the money asked for on behalf of the W. P. A. It is up to them to try and comply with the regulations that have been set up by law to bring about proper administration.

It is a good thing that the House has provided sufficient funds to permit the committee of Congress to follow them up and see that they do the right thing. This investigation should also give the Congress information upon which it can go further and provide other methods which will help solve this relief problem and get rid of the expenditure of money for other things than for relief purposes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does the gentleman, representing the Republican side, and the chairman of the committee on the Democratic side, think it is fair that only one viewpoint on this question may be presented today and that those who represent the other viewpoint cannot have a minute to discuss the question?

Mr. TABER. I decline to yield further.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee has yielded fully to those who had questions to ask and he has answered them completely and without equivocation. There are no questions remaining, in my opinion, which require discussion.

In view of the fact that the conference has resulted in retaining most of the good provisions that were placed in the bill by the House, the conference report should be agreed to.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to ask the gentleman about amendment No. 21, concerning farm security. On page 11, line 10, I notice the House yielded to the Senate in changing language where it requires a farmer who secures a grant to work for the money he receives.

Mr. TABER. That provision we felt was right. The Farm Security Administration should have the power to require anybody who receives a grant to work for it rather than to have it given to him, if there was anything the administration could give him to do.

Mr. STEFAN. I think my farmers would be willing to work for what they get. So far as my farmers are concerned, I repeat, they are willing to work for these grants, but I would like to know definitely whether this is going to be a uniform rule that all of them will be required to work where they receive a farm-security grant.

Mr. TABER. I can only say to the gentleman I hope so.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I notice that the $125,000,000 P. W. A. item is taken out of the bill. Would the gentleman be willing to state how it is proposed to handle that matter?

Mr. TABER. The P. W. A. will cease to function on the 1st of July, tomorrow. There is no provision whatever in any legislation adopted by this Congress for the continuance of the P. W. A. For my own part, I believe it is a good thing, because the activities of that agency tended to get many communities in debt to a point where they could never work out. I do not believe it should be continued.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the previous question is voted down, Mr. Speaker, would the conference report then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would not be open to amendment.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 321, noes 23.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$294,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment after the sum "$35,000" insert the following: "payable from funds of the Work Projects Administration"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Makes available to the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1940, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for such Bureau for the fiscal year 1939, and increases from $5,000 to $50,000 the amount which may be expended for temporary employment without reference to the customary statutes concerning such employment.

On amendment No. 2: Fixes the limitation for administrative expenses of the Electric Home and Farm Authority for the fiscal year 1940 at $500,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $400,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 3: Makes a technical correction.

On amendment No. 4: Restores the provision of the House bill, stricken out by the Senate, increasing the amount which may be used for administrative expenses of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from $9,250,000 to $9,500,000.

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6: Appropriate $390,000, instead of $300,000 as proposed by the House and $480,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the Temporary National Economic Committee, and makes available for allocation to other Federal agencies the sum of $294,000, instead of $204,000 as proposed by the House and $384,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 7: Inserts the amendment, proposed by the Senate, making $35,000 available under the Work Projects Administration for direct relief to citizens of the counties of Anoka and Hennepin, Minn., rendered destitute by a recent tornado, with a modification in the Senate language to require that the $35,000 be taken from funds of the Work Projects Administration instead of a new direct appropriation to that agency.

On amendment No. 8: Inserts the language proposed by the Senate transferring $216,560 of the funds of the Public Works Administration to the appropriation for the Office of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year 1940.

On amendment No. 9: Inserts the appropriation of $340,000, proposed by the Senate, to enable the Division of Territories and Island Possessions of the Department of the Interior to conduct an investigation and survey of the natural resources of the land and sea areas of the Antarctic regions.

On amendment No. 10: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, reappropriating and making available for the fiscal year 1940 the unexpended balances of certain appropriations under the Department of Justice for fees and expenses of conciliation commissioners of United States courts.

On amendment No. 11: Makes $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,600,000, as proposed by the House, available to the Post Office Department for pay of clerks at first- and second-class post offices.

On amendment No. 12: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, appropriating $20,000, plus the unexpended balance, for the International Committee on Political Refugees under the Department of State.

On amendment No. 13: Inserts section 2, as proposed by the Senate, amending section 6 of the Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1940. This act regulates the transmission through the mails free of postage of official mail matter. The Senate amendment clarifies and relaxes certain of the restrictions of section 6, generally and specifically exempts publications and reports offered for sale by the Federal Power Commission.

On amendment No. 14: Corrects a section number.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6970) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the opposition will have at least 30 seconds to present their case if we grant this request?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If they want any time to speak on the conference report.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am making this request in all seriousness. On a bill of the magnitude of the W. P. A. bill the gentleman denied the opposition an opportunity to have even 1 minute to speak. I believe that is a pretty strong gag rule.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not ask any time at all on the last conference report, so he has no kick coming.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I did not ask for time, but I know that other Members who wanted to talk on the question could not get 30 seconds. Unless those in the opposition are going to have a few minutes to speak, I am going to object.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If there is any opposition to this conference report, I do not know about it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then the gentleman will yield some time to the opposition?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If there is any opposition to it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. All right; then I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, these items are urgent deficiencies that must be taken care of during the day. I do not know of anything controversial in them. I am perfectly willing to explain them, but it would just consume unnecessary time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 336

Resolved, That LEWIS K. ROCKEFELLER, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

STABILIZATION FUND AND ALTERATION OF THE WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the dollar may be exercised and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 3. The second sentence added to paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the Act approved May 12, 1933, by section 12 of said Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, is further amended to read as follows: 'The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require; except that such powers shall expire June 30, 1941, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended.'

"Sec. 4. (a) Each United States coinage mint shall receive for coinage into standard silver dollars any silver which such mint, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is satisfied has been mined subsequently to July 1, 1939, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

"(b) The Director of such mint with the consent of the owner shall deduct and retain of such silver so received 45 per centum as seigniorage for services performed by the Government of the United States relative to the coinage and delivery of silver dollars. The balance of such silver so received, that is 55 per centum, shall be coined into standard silver dollars and the same or any equal number of other standard silver dollars shall be delivered to the owner or depositor of such silver, and no provisions of law taxing transfers of silver shall extend or apply to any delivery of silver to a United States mint under this section. The 45 per centum of such silver so deducted shall be retained as bullion by the Treasury or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this section. Such regulations shall contain provisions substantially similar to the provisions contained in the regulations issued pursuant to the Act of Congress approved April 23, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 535), known as the Pittman Act, with such changes as he shall determine prescribing how silver tendered to such mints shall be identified as having been produced from natural deposits in the United States or any places subject to its jurisdiction subsequent to July 1, 1939."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3325) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed to in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

On amendment No. 1: The House bill continued the powers contained in section 43 (b) (2) of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 (relating to certain monetary powers of the President, including the power to fix the weight of the gold and silver dollar, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of gold and silver) until June 30, 1941. The Senate amendment provides that the powers of the President with respect to the alteration of the weight of the dollar and subsidiary coins should expire on June 30, 1939, and his powers relating to the issuance of silver certificates and the coinage of silver dollars and subsidiary coins should expire on January 15, 1941, unless the President declares the existing emergency ended before that date.

The Senate amendment also provides for the coinage of silver mined subsequent to July 1, 1939, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction. Upon delivery to any mint of such silver the Director of the Mint is to deduct 40 percent of the silver as seigniorage. Sixty percent of the silver so delivered is to be coined into standard silver dollars, and standard silver dollars equal to that amount are to be delivered to the owner. The 40 percent deducted is to be retained as bullion or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is given power to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of the provision. Such regulations are to be substantially similar to the regulations issued under the Pittman Act, with such changes as the Secretary may prescribe relating to how silver tendered to the mints shall be identified as domestically produced silver produced after July 1, 1939.

The conference agreement restores the provision of the House bill extending until June 30, 1941, the powers of the President under section 43 (b) (2) of the act approved May 12, 1933, as amended. The conference agreement also retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to the delivery of domestically mined silver to the United States mints, and provides for a deduction by the Treasury of 45 percent of the silver delivered to the mints and for a payment of 55 percent of the silver so delivered to the owner or depositor of the silver. The provisions for regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury are the same as in the Senate amendment, and it is provided that the provisions of law relating to taxable transfers of silver shall not extend or apply in the case of the domestically mined silver delivered to the mints as provided in the bill.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment terminated the power and authority of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the acquisition of foreign silver under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934. The Senate recedes.

Cooley	Jenks, N. H.	Robson, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and ninety-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this conference report, of course, is a compromise. Where there is disagreement between the two bodies, it is always necessary to compromise. I would not be honest if I did not say there were some parts in this conference report which do not entirely please me, but we had a delicate situation confronting us where it was necessary to yield to get an agreement.

This House, by a very substantial majority, passed this bill. When it went to the Senate the Senate eliminated that provision giving the President the power to devalue the dollar. At the same time the Senate added a provision with reference to the purchase of domestic silver, as well as repealed the act having to do with the purchase of foreign silver.

We met yesterday afternoon and for over 1 hour discussed the proposition and came to no agreement. Then in the evening, in order for us to get back the House bill—and a majority of your conferees felt it was our duty to get back the provisions of the House bill—we were forced to yield with reference to the purchase of domestic silver. The Senate, however, had provided a price of approximately 77 cents, which is an increase over the price of today. We did succeed in lowering that price to 70 cents. There were reasons why the Senate refused to yield upon that paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a moment. The necessity for this legislation is understood by all. Even though we were forced to yield on the provision added by the Senate, still under the circumstances, I feel that we were justified in doing so. Had we not done so, we could not have brought back a report.

Those who represent States that are affected by the Silver Purchase Act cannot under any consideration, either in this body or in another body, decline to vote for this conference report, because if they do, at midnight tonight silver will be worth just about one-half of what they are getting right now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a few moments.

Reading between the lines, you can see why it was necessary for your conferees to do something in regard to the new language added by the Senate. In my opinion we will agree to this report. We could do it without any provision affecting silver in the bill, but can that be done in another body? No. There were roll calls on this bill in the other body. Some of the Senators will be required to change their votes on this conference report, and they will change their votes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Referring to the gentleman's statement that he did not see how any Member from any silver-producing State could vote against this conference report, I want to assure him that there will not be a single Democratic Member, west of the Missouri River, whether he has silver in his district or not, who will vote against this conference report. If any western Member, Democrat or Republican, votes against this report, he does not represent his State or its interests.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that because, as I said, the necessity for the provisions of the original House bill are such that this conference report must be agreed to. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, as has been so ably stated by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, we will this afternoon have the opportunity to vote up or down this report of your conference committee. At the outset I wish to call to your attention the fact that this conference report is signed and comes to you as the result of an agreement of three out of five of the House conferees and three out of five of the Senate conferees. As the bill originally passed the House, it contained two provisions, one for the continuance of the stabilization fund and one for the continuance of the power of the President to devalue the dollar. That was the manner in which the bill passed the House and went to the Senate. The Senate adopted the provision continuing the stabilization fund and struck out the provision which related to the devaluation of the dollar by the President. It then added the silver sections, one raising the price of domestic silver and the other providing for the discontinuance of purchases of foreign silver.

As the law now exists, the producers of silver bring their product to the United States mint, where it is weighed and 50 percent thereof retained by the Government and the other 50 percent turned over to the producers in the form of silver coin. The Senate amendment would have changed the ratio from a 50-50 proposition to a 40-60 one; 40 percent for the Government and 60 percent for the producers. The conference committee changed this ratio to 45-55, under which the Government would retain 45 percent and the producers would receive 55 percent. The conferees then restored the devaluation clause and eliminated the provision which would have discontinued the purchases of foreign silver. If you vote for this conference report, you will be doing so with your eyes open and knowing that when you do so you are making a present to the producers of silver of 5 percent of the product brought by them to the mint for coinage. During the past year the output of domestic silver was 60,000,000 ounces. A vote for the conference report by my system of mathematics means that you desire to present to the producers of silver 3,000,000 additional ounces of silver per year.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Would the gentleman be in favor of seeing that the gold producers got an advantage over the silver producers?

Mr. REED of Illinois. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. When a man brings in his gold he gets value received for it, does he not?

Mr. REED of Illinois. He does not if he lives in the United States at the present time.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is bought at $35 an ounce, and that is the value of gold, is it not?

Mr. REED of Illinois. That is the price of newly mined gold.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is right. Now, take the case of the man who brings in silver. The Government takes 45 percent of the silver brought in and makes a profit of almost 100 percent. Is not the Government the winner by that much?

Mr. REED of Illinois. However, if the gentleman recalls, the present market price of silver is around 38 cents. The Government is paying something like 68 cents an ounce for it, and under the operation of this bill will pay 71 cents.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But money is issued against that silver and is legal-tender money, is it not?

Mr. REED of Illinois. Yes; and the Government retains the bullion.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But the Government gets the lion's share of the money that it creates out of the silver.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Yes. But the money coined out of the silver is at a fictitious price, a price that is not consistent with the actual price of the silver on the open market. [Here the gavel fell.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. One hundred and eighty-six Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 113]

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, can Members answer "present" from the Well?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ZIMMERMAN). No business can be transacted until a quorum is established.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Are Members to be allowed to vote from the Well in preference to those who stand in their places according to the rule and ask to be recorded?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the parliamentary inquiry is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. Three hundred and seventy-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I intend to put this House on notice that if, in my opinion, there is any further attempt to filibuster, I am going to find it necessary to move the previous question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is that a threat?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. That is a definite statement of my intentions if there is a filibuster.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman going to do anything else to us?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Anything I can under the circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman had better start right away then.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before us yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] charged in answer to my remarks that unless this were adopted substantially as it passed the House we would be turning the United States over to the Wall Street bankers. There has come to my attention since then certain information which I think the House should have with respect to the operation of the stabilization fund as it now exists. Of course, I assume you will draw your own conclusions as to whether the Wall Street bankers do or do not have anything to do with the operation of the exchange stabilization fund. I want to make three points; then, if I have the time, I shall attempt to prove the points by sworn testimony.

The first point is that the operations of the stabilization fund are handled by and through private banks and foreign-exchange brokers, who, by the very nature of the operation, are given valuable advantage in dealing with foreign exchanges.

The second point is that the gold price is not set in the Treasury Department at Washington but is set officially at London. It is communicated through these private banks and foreign-exchange brokers to the Treasury, which files its purchases and sales orders with these private bankers and brokers.

The third point is that the private banks deal in British pound sterling on the basis of the releases from the Treasury Department for the purchase of gold at London, England.

If there is any question about these points, may I read from the sworn testimony of a man whom I consider one of the outstanding authorities on foreign exchange in this country. I refer to Mr. Samuel D. Post, who is second vice president of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York. Before 1929 he was with the National Bank of Commerce. He is in charge of the foreign exchange trading division of the foreign department of the Guaranty Trust Co.

He was asked this question:

Q. Do you handle operations for the stabilization fund?—A. I do.

Q. Do you personally supervise them?—A. I do.

Q. The information that you are receiving constantly, is it passed on to the United States Government?—A. Every change in the market is passed to them.

Q. And by what means?—A. Telephone; a direct tie line from my desk to them.

He went on further and testified with reference to an exhibit:

Yes; I think it does represent pretty accurately what actually takes place in a round-robin operation of the United States stabilization fund.

At 11 o'clock every morning in London the price of gold is officially fixed. On the basis of the official price for gold it can be readily determined what price in terms of dollars a buyer in the United States can pay for gold in order to ship it to this side.

Q. What time does that mean that you get that information?—A. Well, when the market is really active we get it immediately, at 6 o'clock in the morning.

Q. And if it is anything important, how does it get to you?—A. By cable to our cable department which operates 24 hours a day; or if it is more important, I get it by telephone from London.

Q. Is it communicated to you personally?—A. To me personally.

Q. Will you proceed with the account?—A. After we have determined a price that can be paid for sterling in order to buy that gold we would go into the market and purchase sterling, obtain the gold, pack it, and ship it to the United States where we would deliver it to the assay office.

Q. Now, that is on the assumption that gold is purchased?—
A. That is the ordinary gold operation. Now, obviously, after the London market has closed there is no further gold available over there, and in that case the American stabilization fund would probably receive from the British equalization fund a firm price at which they could obtain gold the next morning. This, of course, is all based on my assumption, and is not actually what they do inside, because nobody knows the exact details.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Continuing the quotation:

Then on the basis of that gold price the United States Stabilization Fund decides what price they could pay for sterling in order to keep the market on a stable level. When they want to buy sterling as the market is declining they might call me or call some other banks who presently operate for them, and say for us to buy up to a certain amount of sterling, a quarter of a million pounds, at such-and-such a price. We go through foreign exchange brokers because interbank dealings are not done direct. The foreign exchange broker communicates with various banks who might be a seller, and that sterling is taken by me, and I in turn report to the Federal Reserve bank that I have bought so much sterling. That same night I will first instruct the bank who has sold the sterling to me to pay it to my London office for my account. The same night I will send a cable to my London office to pay tomorrow morning so many pounds to the Bank of England by order of the Federal Reserve bank, and simultaneously with the payment of sterling abroad I receive a dollar payment from the Federal Reserve to reimburse me for the dollars expended.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether it is in order for me to speak?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I cannot say whether the gentleman is in order to speak or not. I am sure I do not know what is coursing through his mind. Were I to express any opinion whatever, it would be after the receptability of his speech.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we are about to perpetrate one of the most shameful deeds that any legislative body ever foisted upon any people. After this House had failed to take away the powers of the President over the stabilization fund and to further debase our currency, the Senate did curtail his powers largely by refusing to extend the time limit for still further reducing the content of the gold dollar. The Senate did make some concessions to the domestic silver producers by allowing them 77.40 cents per ounce for silver instead of the price of 64.64 cents being paid now. The Senate bill also provided for the discontinuance of the purchase by the Treasury of foreign silver.

Now comes the conference report telling us the Senate has receded and agreed to leave to the President the powers he now has over our money for another 2 years and that the price of domestic silver is to be 70.95 cents per ounce.

One of the House conferees who signed this report and is urging its passage tells us it is a compromise and involves a great sacrifice by the House.

The Senate bill provided for an increase in the subsidy for domestic silver producers. It provided the price of 77.40 cents per ounce. Mr. Speaker, I want all of the Members to listen to me carefully because the Congress or somebody is about to make a great sacrifice. The Senate wanted a price of 77.40 cents but the conferees agreed upon a price of 70.95 cents. At the present world price of silver, 38 cents an ounce, the price fixed by the Senate would have provided a subsidy to silver producers of 39.40 cents an ounce, or more than 100 percent. The conferees agreed upon a subsidy of 32.98 cents, or 86 percent. If the Senate bill had prevailed the silver producers in this country would have received 12.76 cents more per ounce for their silver than they are now receiving, whereas if this report prevails they will receive 6.31 cents per ounce. Do you get that? 12.76—6.31—not quite 50-50. This is a difference of about 7/100 of a cent per ounce in the amount of subsidy the Government will pay the domestic silver producers if the conference report is accepted. This is the great sacrifice. We are about to sacrifice 7/100 of a cent profit for the silver producers. [Applause.]

Mind you, the bill the House passed did not provide for any increase in subsidy to the domestic silver producers.

This goes into the RECORD. You may vote for this sort of proposal but when the Congress barter away the economy and welfare of our people as is being done here to satisfy the selfish interests of a few silver producers, we are doing something this country will long remember. Make no mistake about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Not now. We do not have the time, of course, to go into the other phases of this problem. This should be enough. I simply ask this candid and fair question: What is there that should cause the American Congress to pass a law requiring the Treasury to buy all domestic silver produced and pay the producers the enormous subsidy of 86 percent? I ask, what justifies a deed of that kind?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post on June 28, in an Associated Press report, states that President Roosevelt made the following statement:

President Roosevelt told Congress today it would undermine the national defense and return control of money to Wall Street and international bankers if it refused to continue his power to devalue the dollar.

That is a rather remarkable statement.

I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of page 31 of the New York Times of September 14, 1922, in which appears an advertisement of a new issue of 600,000,000 German marks, floated by United European Investors, Ltd., Franklin D. Roosevelt, president.

I have here a photostatic copy of page 1480 of Poor's Register of Directors, 1929, wherein Franklin Delano Roosevelt is shown as a director of the International Germanic Trust Co.

I have here a photostatic copy of a page from the Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory, January 1933, volume 1, page 754, showing a legal advertisement of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, an investment banker.

I have here a copy of the prospectus and photostats of other records of the Federal International Banking Corporation, indicating that Franklin D. Roosevelt wrote the foreword of the prospectus for this international banking outfit and was hooked up in it with Robert Rowland Appleby, president of the British Empire Chamber of Commerce in the United States. This international banking corporation, according to its prospectus, was organized for the selling of foreign securities and bonds to the American people.

Mr. Speaker, in view of President Roosevelt's international banking record, it is rather astounding for him to tell the Congress that it would "return control of money to Wall Street and international bankers if it refused to continue his power to devalue the dollar."

Our New Deal President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, is an ex-international banker of wide experience and a former attorney for international bankers. Under his gold and silver policies the international bankers, foreign owners of, and speculators in gold, waxed fat when Mr. Roosevelt forced Americans to turn in their gold for $20.67 an ounce or go to jail for 5 years and then imported more than $10,000,000,000 worth of foreign gold at $35 an ounce. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt did not drive the money changers from the temple of our Government. He drove them into the temple, with the help of his Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, the son of Morgenthau, the international banker, who married the favorite niece of Lehman

Brothers, who are among the most powerful international bankers in America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, confining myself entirely to the President's power to devalue the dollar, I have read a great many statements as to the reason why depression continues. I can recall none of these statements that does not include as one of the obstacles in the way of recovery the President's power to devalue further the dollar. In his own circle this is contested, but outside of that circle everybody everywhere says this is one of the obstacles in the way of recovery. Why under the sun he demands the continuance of that power when he himself is quoted as saying that he does not think there is 1 chance in 10 of using it, I cannot understand.

The only explanation given, the only tangible explanation, the only time he gets down to brass tacks, is in the matter of competition between currencies in different countries. One gathers his belief is that, if another country, Patagonia or any other place on the globe, depreciates its money, we shall lose by the fall of exchange. Exchange is too complicated a subject to discuss here and now, but, let it be understood, he wants this power, apparently, only in case some other country depreciates its currency. In that event there will be temporarily a brief loss on the part of those who are caught with money owed to them for foreign transactions, but there will be speedy readjustment of prices when the cables can send out the word. Trouble lasts only a few hours. After those few hours exchange rates very quickly are adjusted to the new situation. Why he should say, "Give me this power to protect us against some depreciation of currency elsewhere," and not balance against that the suffering of the whole American people while he delays recovery, again I say I cannot understand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] seems to overlook the fact that the reduction of the gold content of the dollar is not involved in this conference report. Gentlemen who have preceded me and argued against this conference report simply seem to have a banker's complex. Not one of them has reached down and attempted to discuss the effect this measure will have upon the prosperity of the masses of the American people.

This proposition of the purchase of domestic silver is one that was adjusted by compromise. We are not all interested directly in the purchase of domestic silver, but by this silver policy involved in this conference report there is opened up the brightest ray of hope the farmers of this country have seen for a long time.

If this policy goes into effect and is fully carried out, it means not fiat money, as some gentlemen have contended, with reference to our demand for currency expansion; it does not mean printing-press money; it means silver dollars, silver money, the first money that was ever used on this earth, so far as recorded history shows. It will permit that gradual expansion necessary to raise the prices of farm commodities, stimulate business throughout the country, and restore prosperity to the American people, and not to a few bankers or a few manipulators of foreign currency or a few Wall Street financiers, as some men in the House seem to think. It will affect the prosperity of all the American people.

There are two things necessary to ever produce reasonable commodity prices. One of them is a sufficient volume of a nation's currency, and the other is a sufficient velocity of its circulation. As the velocity slows down, the volume must be increased. Whenever you do that you stimulate the prices of farm commodities. You men from the Wheat Belt, you men from the Corn Belt, you men from the Cattle Belt, you men from the Cotton Belt who vote against this conference report, just remember this is the one thing that has been done in this Congress that will help to raise farm prices.

You men from the industrial sections, remember that the reason your people are on relief, the reason your bread lines were stretched down the streets of your cities was because the farmers of this Nation were without buying power.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. What good did we do for the people on relief today? What good have we done to those people today if more and more of them are going to be on the streets?

Mr. RANKIN. This will help to take them off relief by restoring prosperity and providing profitable employment.

I hope this conference report will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of following my good friend from Mississippi, who always makes an intelligent speech to the membership of this House. I thoroughly concur in what he has said with reference to domestic silver. I am for the domestic silver miners, as I am for the American farmers, American laboring man, and American businessman. [Applause.]

I am opposed to foreign manipulations by international bankers with respect to our monetary system or our economic structure.

Speaking about reaching a compromise on the price of silver, there was no compromise. The conferees met for 3 minutes and took their orders as to what they could pay you men from the silver-mining States, and the order was that no more than six pieces of silver in addition to what you now receive. That figure of 70.95 cents was included in the bill. Six pieces of silver, not 30 pieces of silver, have been offered to you. It is up to you whether or not you are going to take those six pieces of silver in order to sell one-eighth of the total silver purchases of the United States Treasury and give the other seven-eighths to foreign silver speculators in other parts of the world.

Many crimes have been committed in the name of the farmer and the laboring man in order to secure passage of legislation through Congress, and this is one time when the farmers and laboring men are again being used to get through a policy which is absolutely detrimental to them.

This policy has been in effect for the last 4 years and the results have been continued unemployment. More than 12,000,000 people are unemployed and another 22,500,000 are on public relief with the relief load growing daily and the economic condition becoming much more distressed. I think it is time for us to do something for the American people, rather than to provide additional means out of our Public Treasury for people engaged in speculation in other countries of the world. That is what this bill does, because devaluation can only benefit the foreign gold and silver speculators and miners in other countries of the world, not in the United States, except newly-mined gold.

If you have a $20 gold piece which contains about 1 ounce of gold and you take it to your local bank, your banker will pay you $20 in currency for it. If you take that same $20 gold piece over to Canada and have it come into the United States through Canada, you will get $34.50 for it. You must be a foreigner in order to get the bounty from the United States Treasury, because you, as an American citizen, if you are not an operator of a gold mine, cannot get 1 penny more than you got under the old price. The subsidy goes to foreign speculators, both for silver and for gold.

We are agreeing in this conference report to pay the domestic silver miners about 71 cents an ounce for silver. I am thoroughly in accord with that because they are American citizens and I want to keep the miners employed in the mines. But what is the sense of continuing a program that has brought to us in the last 4 years nearly 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver from the foreign silver speculators and the foreign silver miners, which has piled up here a mountain of silver that is without value to the American people. It will soon destroy and bury this country at a tune of more than $1,000,000,000 paid by the American people.

That is the policy which is being advocated in this conference report, and the American people are called upon to pay the bill. We sell our bonds and we print money to pay these foreigners for this foreign silver that is being purchased by the United States Treasury.

There was great rejoicing this morning in the foreign silver markets. I called up the Treasury to find out how the situation was in London with reference to silver, and to my amazement, but not so much to my surprise, they told me that the market for silver in London had strengthened because of the 3-minute action taken on the part of our conferees last night to continue the buying of foreign silver. So the market strengthened.

What has been the effect of this silver program upon the world in general? Yes; we have purchased silver from Mexico. In fact, we are purchasing 5,000,000 ounces every month. What are they doing because of the bounty they are receiving at the hands of the American people, through the United States Treasury? They sell us silver and they steal our American property, our oil wells, our mines, everything that the American people have invested in down there. That is the good-neighbor policy which we are now being asked to continue in this conference report. If we are going to benefit anybody, let us benefit the American workingman, the American miner, the American farmer, rather than giving away our money to people who are only interested in getting what they can out of the United States Treasury and other help from our people. [Applause.]

This foreign-silver purchasing is the biggest fiasco that has ever been put over on the American people. What will happen when we stop buying foreign silver? Well, it will be just too bad. The other day when the Senate passed the amendment discontinuing the purchase of foreign silver the Treasury reduced the price of foreign silver from 43 cents an ounce to 38 cents an ounce, and the bottom fell out of silver in Mexico and some of the other countries, which means that their monetary system is dependent upon the United States fixing and maintaining the price for silver and gold. There is about as much sense for us to fix the price of silver—well, there is just no sense to it. We would be far better off if we would fix the price of wheat, corn, and some of the other commodities that the American people and the people of the world could eat, because they cannot eat silver, which must lie here useless from now until eternity.

What will happen when we get most of the world's silver and gold? We now have practically 75 percent of the world's supply of gold, the amount being more than $16,000,000,000 worth.

They talk about helping the American farmer to get rid of his farm commodities. No; it does not help him to get rid of his farm commodities. We have made an outright gift to the foreign gold speculators during the past 4½ years of $3,600,000,000. That was an outright gift from America.

Those people, instead of using their silver and gold money from the United States Treasury, to buy wheat from Oregon, cotton from the South, they put their money in our banks here in the Federal Reserve System, and have bank deposits and American securities to the tune of more than $7,000,000,000. They can bring about a complete collapse of our economic system in the United States any day they want to. They talk about piling up huge reserves. The huge reserves that are being piled up, are causing a serious inflation threat to the people of this country.

I know that the Secretary of the Treasury has no desire to purchase any more foreign silver. He did not say so directly, but when asked in our committee whether or not that policy should be continued, he said, "I am just the agent of Congress, carrying out the mandate of Congress"; but when it came to devaluation, he maintained that that power should be continued in the President.

Now, I have tried to point out just who is to be the beneficiary of these continued powers. The American people cannot benefit in any way by a continuation of the devaluation power of the President. These powers have not benefited American citizens during the past 4½ years or since this policy became effective, and they cannot benefit them in the future, because the foreigners refuse to buy American farm and manufactured products with the premium and the money with which we pay them for their gold and silver.

Oh, you will say, we have sold them some manufactured products. We have sold Japan $500,000,000 worth of war machinery and supplies. We have paid Japan a premium during the last 2 years on the gold it sent into this country of $200,000,000. The administration's monetary policy is responsible for helping to finance Japan, to provide them with war materials in order to destroy our friends in China. That is the policy which is now in effect, benefiting only foreign citizens and not doing anything for the American people, except leaving us to pay the bill.

OBJECTIVES OF DEVALUATION

In 1934 when New Deal monetary experts secured the passage of the present monetary policy, they urged that if this country would pay a premium to foreigners for their gold and silver, the prices on farm commodities and manufactured goods would materially increase and prosperity would be restored in the United States. After 4 years of experimentation with this theory, we find that it has worked in the opposite direction from the original idea. Instead of higher prices and increased demand for farm and manufactured products, this country has lost its world market and prices are generally depressed.

Cotton farmers were to be the big beneficiaries of the new monetary policy, and what is the situation today as compared with 1933? In 1933, this country exported 8,400,000 bales of cotton. In 1939, the exports from this country will be a little more than 3,000,000 bales.

Despite the fact that the American people have made an outright gift to foreign gold speculators of $3,600,000,000 and an additional gift to silver speculators of more than $500,000,000, these speculators have refused to buy our cotton and other farm commodities. Continued stagnation of business in the United States, increased unemployment, the piling up of huge agricultural surpluses, plainly indicate that the New Deal's monetary program has been a complete failure as far as American citizens are concerned.

THE ANDRESEN AMENDMENT TO MAKE THE MONETARY POLICY WORK FOR AMERICANS

When this bill was up for consideration in the House in April I offered an amendment to make the gold and silver policy of the New Deal work out in actual practice for the citizens of the United States. My amendment was rejected by New Deal leaders. I proposed that we should earmark the premium paid to foreign sellers of gold and silver purchased by the Treasury, so that they would be required to spend at least a part of the money received from this country in the purchase of farm and manufactured products produced in the United States. If they did not do so, they would not receive the premium of $14.33 an ounce on gold. As heretofore stated, we have paid foreign gold and silver speculators a premium, gift, or bounty of more than $4,000,000,000 during the past 4½ years. Had this policy been in effect from the beginning of the New Deal's experiment with money, we would have sold all of our surplus cotton, wheat, corn, pork, and other farm products at decent prices, and our domestic production would have continued in a normal manner. I am sad to report that the New Deal bitterly rejected my proposal to help American agriculture, labor, and industry.

Are we blind in this country to what is being done to us? The New Deal's monetary and foreign-trade policy provides work for foreign citizens and a market in this country for cheaply produced foreign gold, silver, farm, and manufactured products. Our foreign market is being destroyed, domestic price levels depressed, and it will not be long before we will be driven out of the markets of the world by New Deal stupidity. It is high time for us to take stock of what is going on, and I am therefore urging my colleagues in the House to defeat this conference report and right a wrong against our own people.

WHAT IT MEANS TO CONTINUE PRESIDENTIAL POWERS

If this conference report is approved and existing monetary powers are continued in the President, I predict the following disastrous results for the American people:

First. Continued domination of our economic structure by foreign speculators and international bankers, at the expense of the people of the United States.

Second. That we will be providing work for millions of foreign citizens when we now have more than 12,000,000 people unemployed and twenty-two and one-half millions of our citizens on public relief.

Third. The piling up of huge foreign bank deposits in this country, which may bring inflation or a total collapse of our financial and economic structure.

Fourth. Additional losses of our foreign markets for American products to cheap foreign producers.

Fifth. New Deal price-fixing and maintenance for foreign gold and silver, which program is now being denied to our American farmers.

Sixth. World-wide collapse and panic when the United States Treasury stops buying gold and silver at a fixed price. This will take place when the Treasury can no longer sell the American people its bonds so as to raise money to pay the gift to foreign speculators. I predict that when we stop buying gold and silver the world price on silver will be 15 cents an ounce, and gold will drop below the old price of $20.67.

Seventh. The seriousness of the situation confronting the American people with reference to the monetary program is of such magnitude that we should here and now seek to undo the wrong that has been done to our people, and to prevent future disaster. The whole program is a fallacy, and its continuance will rob the American people to pay for the New Deal's role of Santa Claus to foreign speculators and international bankers.

Shall the House of Representatives sell out for six pieces of silver, or will a majority of our Members forget orders and vote for American citizens by discontinuing these detrimental policies, and restoring to our people the things that belong to them? Your vote today should be for American citizens, and I therefore urge all of you to do your duty as real representatives of the American people by voting against this conference report. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, there is no subject that comes before the House for consideration about which so many facts are unknown, or overlooked, than the money question; there is no issue more important to the American people and the welfare of our Nation than the money issue; there is no function of Government about which there is so much misrepresentation and false propaganda as the money function.

The fundamental principle of money is simple, controlling, and absolute. A nation to have a monetary unit stable in value must provide a currency system that increases in volume evenly with the growth of population and the expansion of business. By using the precious metal, gold and silver, for money, which is produced in increasing volume on the average of 3 percent annually, by admitting both of these metals to the mint as fast as produced at the ratio quantity of their production; our Government automatically secures the increased volume of currency required to meet the demand for money, and provide a stable monetary unit—the dollar.

By discarding silver, and basing the Nation's currency system on gold alone, the rate of increase in the volume of new money was reduced with the result that the demand for money increased the value of monetary unit—the dollar—causing a corresponding decline in price levels which resulted in the depression of business. The financial history of this country since silver was demonetized in 1873 verifies this fact. In an endeavor to remedy this situation and relieve business of reoccurring depressions, one legislative expedient after another has been devised and tried in an effort to find a substitute for the remonetization of silver which would have restored the volume of new money flowing into circulation to keep pace with the growth of population and the expansion of business, and automatically stabilize the value of our monetary unit—the dollar.

In 1878 we substituted the purchase of silver under the Bland-Allison Act for remonetization, and later increased the amount of silver purchased from 4,000,000 ounces to 4,500,000 ounces per month by the Sherman Act of 1890 which was repealed in 1893. For a short period between 1896 and 1906, the increased production of gold as a result of the invention of the cyanide process and the discovery of gold in the Klondike and South Africa, doubled the world gold supply from five and a half billion dollars to twelve billion dollars which met the demand for new money and stabilized the value of our currency.

When the demand for money again out-ran the supply, a new substitute for the remonetization of silver was devised and put into use; Federal Reserve bank currency, which was the beginning of the shift from the automatically controlled currency system based on the coinage of the precious metals, to a managed currency composed of interest-yielding bank notes secured by a gold reserve.

When this substitute failed to meet the Nation's money requirements another substitute for the remonetization of silver was devised and put into operation, the lendings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and when this failed another expedient was tried, devaluing the dollar by reducing the quantity of gold in our monetary unit, when it could so easily be seen that the remonetization of silver would have provided the necessary increase in the volume of money to relieve the strain on gold and automatically devalued the dollar and stabilized prices.

The shortage of gold, due to the extra demands placed on the metal for use as money as the result of the World War, has upset the monetary equilibrium of the nations and stability of world currencies with disastrous results to business and the depreciation of property and securities.

The need for additional monetary metal was recognized in 1930 by France's Finance Minister Caillaux, when he said:

There is only one remedy. It is not that there should be any redistribution of gold, as is being childishly suggested. Gold has its own law which it obeys. What must be done is that another monetary metal should be joined to it. Platinum has been suggested. I would prefer that silver, which was stupidly demonetized, should be rehabilitated.

But the several governments dominated by the influence of the bankers and financiers were deaf to the advice that a broader metallic base was absolutely necessary to support national credit and currency. The men in control of governments tenaciously clung to their system of interest-yielding currency, and tried every conceivable scheme to bolster an inadequate, unworkable money system that has resulted in bringing business and financial conditions in this country; that has resulted in plunging our Government $40,000,000,000 in debt; and that has resulted in saddling the American people with an interest load of over a billion dollars a year. Can anyone compute the loss that has been sustained throughout the world by the failure to take the advice of Finance Minister Caillaux to remonetize silver and carry out the declared policy of the United States as to bimetallicism set out in section 311 of the United States Code:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallicism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts.

From the flood of publicity in opposition to the administration's silver-purchase program it is apparent that there is something wrong with the use of silver as money in the eyes of our brokers and financiers—and there is. In the first place it replaces interest-yielding bank notes. There is in circulation today, according to the Treasury statement, $1,697,860,434 in silver certificates supported by and redeemable in silver, purchased and stored in the Treasury; these notes have been issued into circulation by the Treasury in paying Government expense, and circulate interest free by replacing the equivalent in Federal Reserve bank notes supported by interest-bearing eligible paper (business obligations).

The banks are losing in interest alone $50,935,812.93 calculated at 3 percent—$50,000,000 lost to bank in interest on the $1,700,000,000 in silver certificates that have replaced Federal Reserve notes; it is easy to understand the banks' opposition to the silver-purchase program, but let our opponents be fair and tell the truth about this useless (?) silver that is a burden on the Treasury which has been taken in exchange for our securities and surplus commodities. What is wrong about that kind of trading? Do not we want to sell our securities and find a market for our surplus products, and do not our people eagerly accept every dollar of this silver money put in circulation in the form of silver certificates which is providing the currency to finance our business?

Let us agree to the conference report, and continue the stabilization fund to protect our international exchange—and continue the authority of the President to devalue the dollar as a means of protecting our foreign trade from the money machinations of our competitors. Let us continue the Treasury's silver-purchase program which will stabilize the price of silver and commodity price level by the purchase and use of silver in our monetary system.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 114]

Andrews	Culkin	Kelly	Sabath
Ashbrook	Curley	Kerr	Smith, Maine
Barton	Dies	McLeod	Smith, Va.

Casey, Mass.	Hennings	Osmer	Wood
Connery	Keller	Plumley

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 391 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I rise to a point of personal privilege because of certain remarks contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and ask to be allowed to state my question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has been recognized. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman from Michigan for that purpose unless the gentleman from New York yields.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will at the proper time under the rules recognize the gentleman. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York has moved the previous question on the conference report.

The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nays 158, not voting 30, as follows:

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield, without yielding the floor, for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I may do so.

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION COMMISSION

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 345.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does that cause me to lose the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's rights will be preserved. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia to explain this resolution a little bit so that the House will know about it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the President signed an act of Congress extending the life of the Petroleum Conservation Commission, otherwise known as the Hot Oil Commission. Under the existing law, that Commission would have expired at midnight tonight. Of course, it had no appropriation. Congress passed a law extending the life of that Commission for a year, which act was signed by the President yesterday. This resolution would give them $20,000, 1 month's appropriation, until the deficiency subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee can go into the matter.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did I understand the gentleman to say the bill was signed yesterday?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was it signed here or at Hyde Park?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Wherever the President was at the time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The time the gentleman has used is not being taken out of my time, is it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, on the 27th day of March 1939, when the matter of confirmation of the former Governor of Michigan was before the Senate for consideration, I made a few remarks on the floor of the House in which I attempted to indicate that the former Governor, Mr. Murphy, would not make a good Attorney General. A reason I mentioned, among others, being that while he was Governor of Michigan, after he had taken an oath of office to support the Constitution and enforce the laws of the State, he not only failed to do that but he used some 3,700 State troops—

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not stating a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will allow the gentleman some latitude in stating his question, but the gentleman must state a question of privilege.

Mr. DINGELL. I insist that the gentleman be allowed only a small amount of latitude.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair is interested in hearing the gentleman state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the right of free speech, and when the gentleman interrupts to make a remark I am entitled to hear it.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be not interrupted further by Members who have not properly secured the floor.

At the time the interruption occurred I was referring to the fact that in this talk which was made before the 27th day of March 1939 I attempted to show that the former Governor of Michigan, the former High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands, was not a man properly qualified either by training or natural ability to hold that office. During the course of those remarks I stated, in addition to what I said before, that the Governor had deliberately failed to enforce the laws of the State. In addition to that, he had used the troops of the State—

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is not stating a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not yield for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. NICHOLS. In order to state a question of privilege the gentleman must state something that somebody said about him. The gentleman is quoting statements he himself made.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor or not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor, but unless the gentleman proceeds to state his point of privilege he will not occupy the floor very much longer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am endeavoring to state the point as concisely as I may, and I trust that the Speaker will bear with me in my ignorance and my inexperience and let me state it.

What I was attempting to show on the floor was that Governor Murphy was not a fit man to be Attorney General of these great United States. In the Senate on the 17th day of January 1939, as reported at page 417 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator from Missouri among other things said this, and I quote from that page, the fifth paragraph in the left-hand column:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, Representative HOFFMAN has the undoubted right to be heard in the House of Representatives, the body of which he is a Member. He was heard in that body at very great length the other day, and his observations were published in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the extent of several pages. It does not seem to me to be proper again to inflict upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks of Representative HOFFMAN made in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, may I be free from such interruptions as occurred then when a Member of the House [Mr. Hook] said, "I agree"? Otherwise, I will have to demand that the words be taken down.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not yield for a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the statement that the gentleman from Michigan is making does not in any way constitute a question of high constitutional privilege. In the first place, the gentleman is stating something that is supposed to have happened in the Senate in January before he made his speech in the House 2 months later; but even at the very best the statement made in the Senate was months and months ago. It has been in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD all this time, and the gentleman from Michigan knew it. Now he is guilty of what is called laches in our courts. He is not entitled to rise to a question of high constitutional privilege at this time in order to use it to filibuster against the bill before the House. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to rise to a question of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is a strange situation when I cannot state a question of personal privilege without interruption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi had a perfect right to make the point of order. The Chair is entitled to hear the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

The Chair is of the opinion that although the gentleman from Michigan may have been guilty of very great delay in undertaking to present this matter to the floor, inasmuch as it occurred last January, the Chair does not know of any statute of limitations, so to speak, which would apply to this situation.

The gentleman will proceed to state the precise language of which he complains and upon which he bases his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi to state that on page 3364 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he will find that at the request of the Speaker I withheld the point of order, and in my judgment, now is the proper time to present it; It would seem, the relief bill not having been sent to the Senate, a most opportune time.

Now, continuing to read:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, certainly I have no disposition to insist on any course which would seem in any degree to preclude the printing of the whole record in this case. My motion was based upon the fact that the House of Representatives is the sole judge of its own record and the Senate of the United States is the sole judge of its own record. But an intemperate, vituperative, libelous attack having been printed once in the RECORD of the proceedings of the House of Representatives seems to me to be no justification for repeating that same sort of an intemperate libelous attack in the RECORD of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have not stated it all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman on his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to impose, in a way, upon the membership of the House, and I shall try to be as brief as possible.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I may—for what purpose?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield, but it will be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will only take a minute, and the gentleman will have 55 minutes left.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I can yield without being taken off the floor, and the time is not more than 5 minutes, I yield.

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345), providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939, for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior. The gentleman who raised an objection before has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will we be able to discuss the joint resolution under the 5-minute rule if the request is granted?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; because there is no controversy about it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under the rules, if a bill comes before the House, it must be open to amendment and discussion.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will try to yield to my friend a lot of time the next time I have up a bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Washington has withdrawn his objection.

I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in permitting public business to proceed.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I thought it also our duty to protect the rights of the gentleman from Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 345

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for the month of July 1939 for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act approved February 22, 1935 (49 Stat. 30), entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes," as amended, and to include necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations, traveling expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, rent, stationery, and office supplies, not to exceed $500 for necessary expenses of attendance at meetings and conferences concerned with the work of petroleum conservation when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding, not to exceed $100 for books and periodicals, and for the hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6970) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide appropriations required immediately for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

STABILIZATION FUND AND ALTERATION OF THE WEIGHT OF THE DOLLAR

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), there were—ayes 145, noes 91.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 160, not voting 41, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the conference report just agreed to by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I regret the filibustering tactics today of the opposition in leaving this House every few minutes to break a quorum. After having consumed practically all and more than their full fair share of time in debate against the stabilization fund and against an extension of the President's authority to devalue 9 percent the gold content of the dollar, the RECORD shows roll call after roll call was demanded and other tactics employed in an effort to defeat necessary approval of the conference report before the time expires at midnight this date. The parliamentary situation demanded that the previous question be ordered to counteract those dilatory tactics, hence my remarks will have to appear at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican National Committee and certain Members of the Congress recently celebrated what they were pleased to call National Debt Week. A coalition of certain Members of both parties in the Congress have been engaged in an effort to destroy some of the most constructive acts of this administration, and by their acts increase the national debt, unemployment, relief problem, and the national burden by restoring to private interests monetary functions and powers now in part recovered and possessed by the people and so essential to their welfare.

During the so-called National Debt Week not one single constructive suggestion, plan, proposal, or worthy contribution of any kind to remedy the condition which brought about the debt was suggested. They did suggest withdrawal of the limited power granted the President to devalue as much as 9 percent the dollar and restore the value existing at the time this administration came into office and repeal authority for the stabilization fund.

For 3 or 4 days now there has been ringing in the Halls of this Capitol and in the committee rooms denunciation of the existent power of the President to devalue the dollar 9 percent of its value as of March 4, 1933. In staccato tones they have filled the air with platitudes and generalities about hard and soft money, inflation and deflation, cheap, make-believe money, making the welkin ring with unjustified criticism of the President as an agent of Congress to regulate in part the value of the dollar. They have become, as usual, hypercritical, being obsessed with the fault-finding attitude of one of Shakespeare's characters, who said:

Oh, gentle lady, do not put me to it,
For I am nothing if not critical.

Mr. Speaker, the President on yesterday, in reference to the action of another body said that the Senate action Tuesday in voting to repeal and not extend the President's power to devalue the dollar, heretofore authorized and limited by Congress, "in effect would be an open invitation to international foreign exchange speculators to manipulate the dollar with resultant injury to United States foreign trade," and that "the national defense and national economy would be weakened." There never was a more opportune or truthful saying but it will not impress the opposition very favorably.

The chaotic economic condition and utter financial collapse of the country prior to March 4, 1933, and the excessive value of the dollar at that time, were and are the direct cause of the present debt, financial and unemployment troubles of this Nation. This was brought about by the failures, futile acts, fallacies, and policies in great part, of those who now declaim against the President, our debt and dollar. The power to devalue the dollar has not been abused. In fact, the devaluation of the dollar, in view of the former excessive gold value of the dollar, was not only appropriate but necessary. The only real criticism that can be offered to the act or power of devaluation, if any, may be that the full power at the beginning should have been exercised. The dollar and its value has something to do with the national debt and its creation, and, as the President says, has something to do very materially with our national economy and defense.

The present debt has not been incurred willingly or willfully, but of necessity. We know that in the creation of the present debt, previous Republican policies, and later their votes during this administration, have contributed their full share. The labored efforts now at criticism of the debt and devaluation of the dollar would be more appreciated by the public if first an humble admission should be made of their original responsibility for it.

In connection with the present proposal to extend the powers of the President to further devalue slightly the dollar, I shall remark on the debt and the relation of that debt and power to present value of the dollar. Any further devaluation is strictly limited by Congress to 9 percent and is in pursuance of section 8, article 1, of the Constitution to regulate the value of our dollar and of foreign coin.

The Republican National Committee, Republican Members of the Congress, and some members of my own party, are not more concerned about our national debt, the value stability of our dollar, and the prerogatives and constitutional powers of Congress than are leaders of this administration. Not for a moment would I minimize the seriousness and importance of the stability of the dollar nor of what the Nation owes, but these critics, by the logic of their argument, do minimize the debt and justify the limited power heretofore granted to the President. The opposition denounces the size of our debt. It criticizes the present American dollar as being a cheap and dishonest dollar with which to pay the debt. They seek a dearer dollar. They draw unjust conclusions of the effect of the devaluation of the dollar on the American people. They flirt back and forth on all horns of the dilemma.

The American people believe in a sound and honest dollar. They demand such a dollar, but really never have had one until now. We have today one of the soundest and most universally desired dollars in existence. The opposition, however, rants and raves that this administration, through the present dollar, due to devaluation of former dollar, has robbed the widow of her insurance, the citizen of his home and property, the laborer of his wage, the bondholder of his bond and interest, the thrifty of their savings, and has been engaged in the confiscation of property in general. Therefore, they argue that present power to the President to further devalue the dollar 9 percent should not be extended, although the President has had the power for the last 5 years.

To summarize the opinion of the opposition I quote from a statement appearing in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2334, which easily expresses the sentiments of those now opposing the powers granted to the President and this administration, as follows:

Never before in all history has there been such a savage, persistent, and hypocritical attack on property as in this country over recent years. Nothing that Hitler has done, or that Hitler can do, equals in sheer audacity and future catastrophe this camouflaged and sugar-coated confiscation that the New Deal has engineered under the guise of humanitarianism.

Accordingly, internal banditry merely parallels an internal banditry, and the dishonesty of one nation differs from the dishonesty of another nation only in method.

It is believed the above language expresses as clearly and strongly the opinion of these confirmed critics as the most vicious would care to employ. The statement, as usual, avoids details of the dishonesty, confiscation, or banditry. No specifications are ever given. The charges are general, but in this regard true to form. These generous critics base their argument on what they are pleased to call debasement of an honest dollar, the dollar of the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker, when an ounce of gold in 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933 was worth $35 on the markets of the world these critics insisted, and still insist, it was and should remain at $20.67 an ounce in the United States. The amount of actual money in circulation has not been increased. The amount necessarily would have to be increased to bring inflation and some can see no difference in injury caused by inflation or deflation. There has been no issuance of more dollars either in coin or currency by reason of devaluation. No capitalization of the seigniorage or profits has been made. Yet they call our present dollar a 59-cent dollar. The truth is it is a 130-cent dollar, according to the commodity price index, and too valuable almost to loan or use at that value. If our dollar be worth only 59 cents, then our real debt, reduced to what the opposition would designate as an honest dollar, amounts to only 59 percent of $40,000,000,000, or $23,600,000,000. The national debt inherited by this administration and admitted by Republican leaders was $22,000,000,000. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 2, 1939, p. 6542.

Mr. Speaker, we have today over $12,000,000,000 more gold than we had in March 1933. That money is ours, and if credited on our national debt will reduce the present debt in burdensomeness to less than the debt due March 4, 1933. We have $3,000,000,000 more silver than we had March 4, 1933, and an additional credit should be made. The bonus, a debt due the veterans of $2,000,000,000, has been paid by this administration. If that debt had not been paid, the interest charged the veteran on the money due him would have destroyed the debt, and the veteran would have received practically nothing. The opposition, with few exceptions, opposed the payment of that debt and favored the continued payment by the veterans of interest on what was owed them by the Government.

We have 11,500,000 bales of cotton on hand, many million bushels of corn, many million bushels of wheat, many million pounds of butter, which also should be credited on the present debt.

We have thousands upon thousands of new public buildings such as auditoriums, stadiums, dormitories, recreation halls, school buildings, college buildings, courthouses, decent prisons, and post-office buildings. We have thousands upon thousands of new lakes, swimming pools, parks, parkways, railroad overpasses and underpasses, bridges, levees, reservoirs for flood control, and other beneficial projects. Then again, many millions are due from banks for money borrowed to replace shrunken capital stock, which shrinkage took place during the prior Republican regime.

This administration has cared for over 2,000,000 young men in C. C. C. camps, and for hundreds of thousands of boys and girls in school through National Youth Administration, and has kept them from the alleys, highways, criminal resorts, and prisons. It has created a belt in the West of many millions of trees to combat and prevent sand and wind storms and destruction of American homes and valuable lands. Our soil, water, and forests have been given extra attention and protection. Farmers, heretofore neglected at all times, have been given substantial benefit payments. Rural electric service has been and is being brought to the homes of rural people.

The interest on Federal land bank and other loans has been reduced and this administration took care of the difference. Many millions of dollars have been used in slum clearance and in the housing of our people, and in large loans to business.

Then, again, Mr. Speaker, we have spent a few billion dollars extra in creation of one of the finest navies in the world in defense of our homeland. Likewise, we have enlarged our Army, Air Corps, and further manned and perfected our coast defense, and today have this country adequately defended from all possible enemies.

For the first time in American history, the present administration established the principle of, and is paying old-age pensions, giving help to the crippled, the blind, and unemployed. The people will not forget that $6,600,000,000 of the present debt has been used to feed, clothe, and house millions of fine Americans, destitute and unemployed as a result of the policies of rugged individualism of the previous administration.

The income of the American people today is at the rate of $68,000,000,000 per year. This is thirty billions annually more than the national income during any of the 3 years preceding this administration. In fact, the increase of the national income in 2 years under this administration would liquidate the present national debt and leave a surplus of twenty billions to the people. The critics of our dollar and of our debt, while denouncing same, shrewdly and wisely elect to remain significantly silent about their dollar, the dollar of 1930, 1931, and 1932.

March 4, 1933, and for 3 years prior thereto, based on the commodity-price index, a fair basis, it took 167 cents' worth and even more of corn, wheat, cotton, meat, other property, or labor to get a dollar. The opposition must think that the people have forgotten. Their anathemas and jeremiahs now on dishonesty, confiscation, and "internal banditry," are clearly misdirected, but echo and reecho to us the cries of many in the gethsemane of those dreadful days, weeks, months, and years, and previous money panics prior to this administration.

It cannot be denied, and is admitted, that the dollar in those days was worth 167 cents or more of labor, farm products, or other property. Let us measure the debt of March 4, 1933, as we are justified, in those 167-cent dollars. We readily compute that the real debt March 4, 1933, in those 167-cent dollars, in reality, was 167 percent of $22,000,000,000, or thirty-six billion, seven hundred forty million good, sound, honest, present-day dollars. The regret is that at that time there was nothing but a financially wrecked country to be credited on that debt.

A little common sense and arithmetic show that the burden of the debt upon the American people March 4, 1933, was much more severe and heavy than the present debt. The interest rate on the debt March 4, 1933, was a third to one-half higher than the interest on the present debt; and this minimizes, much, the debt today. In fact, our Government can borrow, and is borrowing, money today at the lowest rate in its history. This is not pleasant, apparently, to the opposition. They prefer higher interest rates.

No sophistry, no ridicule, no denunciation, no oratorical flourishes, no blind partisan charges, no manipulation of figures, no political motives, no subversion of facts or conditions can change the glaring difference in the burdensome values on the American people of the two debts.

March 4, 1933, Mr. Speaker, and for some years prior thereto, a grower of corn, to obtain just $1, such as some desire to be restored and put in circulation today by the opposition to this administration, would be compelled, as he was then, to turn over 5 bushels of good, sound, honest corn. At the present time that same corn grower can obtain a sound and honest dollar, acceptable and desirable everywhere in the world, for only 2 bushels. This would leave him 3 bushels in the crib for his pigs, cows, and family. The good, sound, hard dollar in 1930, 1931, and 1932, and until March 4, 1933, so loved and worshipped now by the opposition, took all the farmer's 5 bushels of corn and left nothing in the crib for the pigs, cows, or family.

The problem immediately presented to this administration was whether or not the pigs and cows should be permitted to starve, suffer slow starvation, or be mercifully put away in the soil, a genuine sacrifice upon the altar of the excessive value and ruthlessness of the dollar at that time. That 167-cent dollar, that mighty and powerful Republican dollar, caused more misery, more losses, havoc, and confiscation of everything of value than any one thing in human history. That dollar put banditry to shame. It unmercifully wrecked the savings, homes, and families not only of this Nation but of other nations. Shylock, in his balmy days, was never so cruel, nor have the bandits and pirates of history caused so much human misery and suffering as did that dishonest dollar which the President has brought down from its unholy throne of destruction. The opposition want that dollar reenthroned.

Mr. Speaker, the American wheat grower in order to obtain a dollar March 4, 1933, and prior thereto, had to deliver four bushels of his wheat. In the parlance of crime, that probably would be called highjacking. Today he can obtain a good, sound, honest dollar for one and a half bushels. The owners of cattle, growers of cotton, and other commodities were likewise gypped and highjacked, and required to deliver two to three times as much of their products as an honest dollar should have required. If the dollar that exacts five bushels of corn or four bushels of wheat be an honest dollar, then honesty has lost all its virtue and significance to honest men, and the opposition should have its way.

If we could pay the national debt today in corn, wheat, rye, cotton, tobacco, meat, stocks, cattle, lands, or other property, we could wipe it out for less than half required March 4, 1933. It would take less than half the amount of corn or wheat to liquidate the national debt today than it would have taken March 4, 1933; and, mind you, there has been no inflation of the American dollar.

If the corn, cotton, wheat, or meat grower, or property owner, owed a debt incurred prior to 1930, then that grower or owner under law was wrongfully compelled to pay in 1930, and until March 4, 1933, and even later, from two to five times the amount of the debt as measured in the value of the corn, cotton, wheat, or property received by the debtor when he created the debt. Is that a stable or honest dollar? Likewise, the interest on his debt was dishonestly increased from two to five times, measured in the corn, cotton, wheat, or labor necessary to pay it. This unjust and cruel operation and fluctuation of the dollar at that time, which was so easily susceptible to manipulation in value, appeals powerfully to our stand-pat Republican and a few Democratic gold hard money worshipping friends. They denounce the present dollar in the interest of a selfish few and for political purposes, and to vent their spleen on the President, and they feel the people have short memories, and are now ready, fit, and gullible subjects for another victimization.

The opposition speaks loudly and scornfully of coin clipping. Did you ever hear one of these lovers of humanity, these honest-money fellows, sympathize or say anything about how heretofore their dollar clipped the laborer's wage, farmer's corn, wheat, cotton, and income? No; all are as silent as the tomb when it comes to clipping 3 bushels of corn from the corn grower,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  bushels of wheat from the wheat grower, 4 pounds of meat from the meat grower, 10 pounds of cotton from the cotton grower, doubling the debt and interest rate on the debtor, forcing the laborer to give 167 cents of services, when he needs, seeks, and has to have one of their precious dollars.

I am unable to fathom the mentality of men who criticize the action of the President, and desire a return to a dollar so fluctuating in value as to force the laboring man to give 167 cents or more of his labor to obtain a dollar; force a corn grower to give 5 bushels of his corn rather than 2; a wheat grower to give 4 bushels of wheat rather than  $1\frac{1}{2}$ . The opposition seeks a speculative dollar, a dollar capable of value manipulation in the market place, one that may double in burden every debt and the interest rate on every debtor in America, and one that will destroy half the value of all the property in America at the will of financial racketeers. Does the opposition tell us they will prevent, in any way, those certain recurring evils of their dollar? Not at all. Do they ever even refer to them? No, they evade them most discreetly.

I appreciate that the so-called nonconfiscatory, honest, humane, free-from-banditry dollar of March 4, 1933, was a great boon to bondholders. The purchasing value of every hundred-dollar bond in America on and for 3 years prior to March 4, 1933, called for $167 of labor, farm products, or other property. Think of that unearned increment and dishonest enhancement in value. Yet we are told that kind of a dollar is an honest dollar. The interest on all bonds, notes, and mortgages was almost doubled in purchasing power by the 167-cent so-called honest dollar. The bondholders, gold and money hoarders, money speculators, financial racketeers, and international exchange dealers were in their glory, but were unjustly and greatly enriched at the expense of the many. Only a few benefited, and then only at the great sacrifice, misery, and suffering of millions.

The opposition dollar was so unstable and fluctuating in value that it could be easily manipulated and controlled by the money powers in such a way that banditry, as I see it, could be and was perpetrated upon the American people under the then unregulated dollar and sanction of law.

The opposition to this administration, in discussing the national debt and the welfare of the people, proclaim the urgent necessity of returning to their so-called dollar or standard in order for us to have an honest dollar and consequent prosperity. If we have ever been on the gold standard in the United States, we are on the gold standard now. The only difference is our Government has the gold now and control it, while gamblers in gold and currency, national and international racketeers and banking buccaneers, are no longer able to control it so as to manipulate, increase or decrease its value, and obtain thereby 167 or more cents' worth of labor, farm products, property, interest, or debt, when entitled to only 100 cents' worth. They are not able so easily to increase the value of bonds nor interest on bonds. They are not able so easily to cheapen or enhance the value of currencies of other nations to our injury, nor manipulate money exchange necessary in our business with other nations. I am sure the American people have a better, longer memory, and more intelligence today than some care to give them credit.

The opposition desire really an unstable dollar, a dollar fluctuating in value, not only for national but for international purposes. Speculation in the dollar and on the exchange by insiders is now in part at least under control by this administration. This is a crime, and dishonest, according to the opposition. Some of the men responsible for that speculation even now are languishing in durance vile for their practices. Because of a correction and further prevention of those evils the opposition howls dishonesty, confiscation, and internal banditry, and the exercise of too much power for evil in the President.

Mr. Speaker, the President and a majority of the Congress ruined the lucrative business of gold and currency gamblers, and did a little internal banditry work by putting some bandits out of business. I presume the prevention of some of these vicious practices in some of our large financial institutions and in some of our exchanges, and the curbing of unscrupulous international parasites, in the opinion of the opposition, is dishonest, a confiscation of rights, and internal banditry. Mere charges, generalities, and platitudes, are not going to deceive the American people any longer.

I am amazed at the desperate and determined efforts of the opposition. I am disturbed at the political coalition of certain elements to destroy the present dollar, the currency stabilization fund established by the Congress, and upset the equilibrium of world currencies, but this is in line with the argument and efforts of the opposition to obtain what they call an honest dollar.

That stabilization fund has been denounced vigorously and vociferously. That fund was authorized by Congress after the best thought and opinion possible was given to the subject. It has been used by Secretary of the Treasury and his advisers under the safe guidance of the President and his advisers to control, as much as possible the stability of our dollar, speculation in our currency, and foreign currencies, and exchange needed by legitimate business in this country. That fund last year earned a profit for the people, for the United States Treasury, of $14,000,000. If the opposition have their way, such profits will go hereafter, as formerly, into the private pockets of international exchange and money dealers.

They contend that this fund of $2,000,000,000 should have been applied to our national debt so as to save interest. I wonder at the possible innocence of such a suggestion. The truth is the money speculators, and dealers in exchange and currency of the nations, have been deprived of that $14,000,000 profit. They have been deprived and prevented from further preying upon and exploiting the American people to the extent probably of hundreds of millions of dollars because of their inability to manipulate the value of money. Formerly, they used gold as a weapon, but they cannot any more. They formerly sold and beat down currency values of one nation through the use of gold, and then enhanced the value of currency in another nation, in terms of the dollar and gold, played one currency against another, the people being helpless, and thereby wrongfully earned millions and billions in the deals. They fixed prices really upon the farmers' products. They manipulated the French franc, English pound, Italian lira, Dutch guilder, Spanish peseta, Chinese and Mexican peso, and American dollar, and made them cheap or dear, as suited their selfish purposes. They continuously reaped large and bountiful harvests at the expense of the American people.

The wresting of this immense source of revenue and financial power from these dollar humanitarians and pretended lovers of an honest dollar, and prevention of that kind of business by the stabilization fund, is part and parcel of the matters denounced as dishonest, confiscatory, and banditry by the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, we have today a little more than $16,000,000,000 of gold safely placed and guarded by American soldiers in the hills of Kentucky and elsewhere. Every dollar of it is under the control of the American people. That power and control was formerly in other hands. That gold is perfectly safe, and, to be sure, is as safe as if in the vaults of international money changers. It certainly is as safe as it would be if in the vaults of Wall Street, Threadneedle Street in London, or buried in the ground under the streets of Paris, France.

Our great President, in one of his inaugural speeches, in effect said he was going to purge the money changers, clean the Augean stables of finance, and bring the Government back to Washington. He has been doing a very good job of it, judging from the anger aroused in the opposition. We know that those who control the money of the nation control the prosperity and destiny of that people and nation.

This administration is not afraid of any foreign country with its navy or army coming over and getting that gold. It is afraid of the opposition. No weeping, wailing, hostile criticism, bitter denunciation, or ingenious device of those seeking the release of that gold, restoration of the former dollar value, and destruction of stabilization fund will ever induce the American people freely or willingly to surrender their power and grip to those who formerly manipulated and used it to crucify about every 7 years not only the people of this country but the people of other nations.

We know that on March 4, 1933, there was not enough gold in the United States Treasury by several billions to redeem the currency and obligations then outstanding payable in gold. People at that time were rushing wildly to the United States Treasury, its subsidiaries, the mints, Reserve and other banks by the thousands seeking redemption in gold. The gold dollars and gold bars were being drawn out, trucked away, and there was almost an empty Treasury. Economic chaos was rampant.

Thousands upon thousands of banks were failing, and savings of millions of our people were being destroyed. A terrible economic disaster, almost a revolution, if not worse conditions were in the offing. At that time there were less than $4,000,000,000 in gold with which to redeem over $5,000,000,000 in currency, twenty-two billions of United States bonds, not to mention billions of private bonds and obligations payable in gold. Thousands upon thousands of our citizens were lined up before more than 10,000 banks of our country demanding cash for their deposits when there was insufficient cash.

There was a demand upon those banks for withdrawal of more than ten billions of the $40,000,000,000 and more on deposit in those banks when only $5,000,000,000 in coin and currency were in existence. The banks were not able to pay in gold or anything else. The dollar was so valuable and increasing in value owing to demand, it could not be borrowed. It was in a heyday of glory at the time. It was almighty and in power to command and destroy, and really did wreck this Nation financially from turret to foundation stone, and as was never before experienced. It caused a total loss to American people of over $100,000,000,000, not to mention the destruction of the morale and confidence of the people, and the last is more difficult to restore than the money lost.

Today there are over $51,000,000,000 on deposit in all of our banks. This is more money in the banks than ever before in the history of the Nation. Every dollar of it is sound, safe, and honest as was ever placed in a bank. A depositor can get his money when he desires. Reserves in our banks for loans today are the largest in history. In my opinion, we have a stable dollar today, no fear justified, and the foundation for permanent happiness, progress, and the continued prosperity of the American people is being safely and soundly constructed. It has been no easy task to lift this great country upon its feet, rehabilitate the people, restore morale, confidence in our money, banks, Government, and institutions. However, this has been done despite the bitter, hostile political antagonism and fusillades of the opposition.

We know that March 4, 1933, an ounce of gold on the world market was worth $34.50. We know that the farmer's cotton, corn, and wheat, and laborer's wage, then measured by an ounce of gold, the money unit or standard of measure, brought him $20.67. This tape measure, gold standard, yardstick, or unit of value, as it is called, was applied to the farmer's corn, cotton, wheat, other commodities, as well as services, debts, and property. The cotton, corn, or wheat farmer, by that yardstick, was receiving only $20.67, when he should have received the actual world market price of $34.50. As it was, the difference of about $14 was unjustly taken from the farmers and others. That right by a few to use a short, dishonest weight or measure so as to exploit and cheat farmers, laborers, and others has been greatly curtailed by this administration; hence the opposition charge of dishonesty, confiscation, and internal banditry. Is it dishonesty, confiscation, or banditry to deprive money gamblers and others of the right to give 100 cents and take 167 cents? Is it honest to use a 3-foot yardstick for one and a 5-foot yardstick for another? Is it banditry to oppose bandits and prevent banditry? If so, then this administration is guilty of the charges—yea; thrice guilty.

It took $4 of the East Indian or Chinaman's silver money to get an American dollar prior to March 4, 1933. Two ordinarily were sufficient to obtain one. It took four Mexican dollars to obtain one in those days, and the same thing applied to many of the other currencies of the world. Our exports and foreign trade were greatly curtailed necessarily. We saw the English pound driven down to where it would bring only $3.48 of American money. Then we saw the English pound driven up so as to bring over $5 of our money. Such world instability of value of gold, the measuring rod, such instability of value of our dollar and of other currencies, deliberately, willfully, and selfishly brought about is injurious to the best interest of the people. This is being corrected, and the opposition objects.

Mr. Speaker, this country, prior to March 4, 1933, suffered a financial depression every 7 years. They came with the same regularity as did the devastating visits of locusts and plagues of ancient Egypt. Revert no further than to 1866, when there was a money panic. Then in 1873, 1880, 1886 to 1887, 1892 to 1893, 1900, 1907, 1914, 1920 to 1921, and 1929.

Everyone of those panics was due to gold manipulation, money contraction, and destruction of credit money by those having control of gold. They were brought about by manipulation of money, control of gold, resulting in a contraction of currency, stoppage of credit, and the raising and lowering of discount and interest rates at opportune times. The people were powerless. This administration seeks to protect the people against similar monetary catastrophes. It has taken unexampled vision, great political courage and wisdom, to cope with the powers so long accustomed to control our gold and money system, so ably assisted by shrewd men; but today we are on the way in the process of correction. There is every reason to believe panics will be a thing of the past unless the opposition succeeds.

Referring again to the stabilization fund, Hon. Henry Morgenthau recently said that with that fund and gold in our control we have "a weapon in reserve which is needed for protection of American interests. In the monetary field it is as important as a powerful navy in the field of defense against armed attack." Today he warned in an interview that the American people will have cause to worry about their dollar if they surrender their present money powers.

Yet the opposition is determined and willing, regardless of all consequences, to take from Congress and the President and turn back to unholy hands the power over our dollar and the stability of our currency, so that our people may again be subject to panics, depressions, and money manipulation as experienced in the past. The President under our Constitution is Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy; why not curtail his authority and turn over our Army and Navy to the same powers? For my part, if we surrender our money power, we might as well turn over the Army and Navy.

The Constitution says the Congress shall coin and regulate the value of money and of foreign coin. We are honestly trying to do this with the help of the President. But the opposition, step by step, bitterly and doggedly oppose and are determined to even nullify all that has been done by this administration to correct so many serious evils. They would turn back and surrender to private interests invaluable powers whereby to regulate the value of our money, a function of the Congress under our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the House conferees succeeded in the conference with the committee of the Senate in bringing back to us the stabilization fund and preserving the right of Congress to regulate the value of the dollar and foreign coin, through the President or otherwise.

SUPPLEMENTARY MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SNYDER submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Appropriates $64,862,500 for construction at military posts, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $63,662,500, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 2: Strikes out the provision inserted by the Senate making $5,000,000 of the appropriations contained in the bill available for topographic surveys and mapping.

On amendments Nos. 3 and 4: Strikes out the legislation inserted by the Senate relating to the provision of facilities and equipment at the expense of the Government in the plants of contractors for supplying military or naval equipment, etc.

J. BUELL SNYDER,
DAVID D. TERRY,
D. LANE POWERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6791) making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EVELYN GURLEY-KANE

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on War Claims, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 5722) for the relief of Evelyn Gurley-Kane, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 10, after "War", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL MALIN CRAIG

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, despite the many matters which we must dispose of today, it seems fitting that we should pause sufficiently long to pay a word of tribute to the head of our Army, the Chief of Staff, Gen. Malin Craig, who, today, is relinquishing that high office preliminary to going on the retired list a few weeks hence.

General Craig's long service is replete with accomplishments matching the best traditions of the service. His superior qualities have been repeatedly manifested during his incumbency of the office he is today vacating.

The Army, under his regime, has been molded into a state of efficiency and preparedness never before approached in time of peace. He has done a really great job in a really great way, and the Nation owes him a debt of gratitude.

I know I am joined by every Member of this body in extending to this great man the earnest wish that he may enjoy many years of health and happiness, which he has so richly earned. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after line 4, and pages 2 to 97, inclusive, and insert:

"TITLE I—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

"SECTION 1. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for each fiscal year thereafter, there shall be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as the annual payment by the United States toward defraying the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, an amount which bears the same ratio of the total general fund appropriations for defraying the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for such fiscal year as the land owned by the United States in the District of Columbia on the 1st day of August of the preceding fiscal year bears to the entire land area of the District of Columbia; but in calculating such land ratio for any fiscal year, a fraction of 1 percent shall be disregarded, except that a fraction of more than one-half of 1 percent shall be counted as 1 percent.

"SEC. 2. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'entire land area of the District of Columbia' means the total number of acres of land within said District (44,317 acres), less the amount of such land which is permanently covered by water (5,044 acres), or 39,273 acres in all.

"(b) Except as provided in section 3 of this title, the term 'land owned by the United States in the District of Columbia' means the total number of acres of land owned by the United States within said District as of the 1st day of August of each year, beginning with the calendar year 1939, exclusive of the following: (1) Any of such land embraced within the boundaries of streets, avenues, roads, and alleys; (2) 56 percent of any of such land which is embraced within the park areas of said District; and (3) any of such land used exclusively by the government of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. It is hereby declared that for the purposes of this title the land owned by the United States in the District of Columbia as of the 1st day of August 1938 consists of 7,840 acres, determined as follows: By deducting from the 11,441 acres of land owned by the United States (exclusive of such land devoted to highway purposes), the 3,353 acres comprising 56 percent of such land embraced within park areas, and the 248 acres of such land used exclusively by the government of the District of Columbia.

"TITLE II—ADVANCEMENT OF MONEY BY TREASURY

"Until and including June 30, 1940, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time during said fiscal year to meet the general expenses of said District as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia.

"TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO PRIOR ACTS

"TAXABLE STATUS OF MOTOR VEHICLES AS TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY

"SECTION 1. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the tangible personal-property tax on motor vehicles, except when consisting of stock in trade of merchants, shall be prorated according to the number of months such property has a situs within the District; and all such motor vehicles shall be assessed at their value as of April 1 each year: Provided, however, That where a motor vehicle shall be registered in the District of Columbia for the first time on a date between April 1 of one year and April 1 of the succeeding year, such motor vehicle shall be assessed, for taxation for the period ending with the succeeding April 1, at its value as of date of application for such first registration.

"TAX APPEALS

"SEC. 2. (a) The first sentence of the second paragraph of section 2 of title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by the act approved May 16, 1938, is amended to read as follows: "The salary of such person so appointed shall be $8,000 per annum." This amendment shall be effective on and after July 1, 1939.

"(b) Section (3) of the title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, is amended as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any person aggrieved by any assessment by the District against him of any personal-property, inheritance, estate, business-privilege, gross-receipts, gross-earnings, insurance-premiums, or motor-vehicle-fuel tax or taxes, or penalties thereon, may, within 90 days after notice of such assessment, appeal from such assessment to the Board, provided such person shall first pay such tax, together with penalties and interest due thereon, to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia under protest in writing. The mailing to the taxpayer of a statement of taxes due shall be considered notice of assessment with respect of such taxes. The Board shall hear and determine all questions arising on said appeal and shall make separate findings of fact and conclusions of law, and shall render its decision thereon in writing. The Board may affirm, cancel, reduce, or increase such assessment."

"(b) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 5 of title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The assessor and deputy assessor of the District and the board of all of the assistant assessors, with the assessor as chairman, shall compose a Board of Equalization and Review, and as such Board of Equalization and Review they shall convene in a room to be provided for them by the Commissioners, on the first Monday of January of each year, and shall remain in session until the first Monday in April of each year, after which date no complaint as to valuation as herein provided shall be received or considered by such Board of Equalization and Review. Public notice of the time and place of such session shall be given by publication for 2 successive days in two daily newspapers in the District not more than 2 weeks or less than 10 days before the beginning of said session. It shall be the duty of said Board of Equalization and Review to fairly and impartially equalize the value of real property made by the board of assistant assessors as the basis for assessment. Any five of said Board of Equalization and Review shall constitute a quorum for business, and, in the absence of the assessor, a temporary chairman may be selected. They shall immediately proceed to equalize the valuations made by the board of assistant assessors so that each lot and tract and improvements thereon shall be entered upon the tax list at their value in money; and for this purpose they shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments, and in determining them they may raise the valuation of such tracts or lots as in their opinion may have been returned below their value and reduce the valuation of such as they may believe to have been returned above their value to such sum as in their opinion may be the value thereof. The valuation of the real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall be completed not later than the first Monday of May annually. The valuation of said real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall be approved by the Commissioners not later than July 1 annually, and when approved by the Commissioners shall constitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding year and until another valuation is made according to law, except as hereinafter provided. Any person aggrieved by any assessment, equalization, or valuation made, may, within 90 days after October 1 of the year in which such assessment, equalization, or valuation is made, appeal from such assessment, equalization, or valuation in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided.

"(b) Annually, on or prior to July 1 of each year, the board of assistant assessors shall make a list of all real estate which shall have become subject to taxation and which is not then on the tax list, and affix a value thereon, according to the rules prescribed by law for assessing real estate; shall make return of all new structures erected or roofed, and additions to or improvements of old structures which shall not have been theretofore assessed, specifying the tract or lot of land on which each of such structures has been erected, and the value of such structure, and they shall add such valuation to the assessment made on such tract or lot. When the improvements on any lot or tract of land shall become damaged or be destroyed from any cause, the said board of assistant assessors shall reduce the assessment on said property to the extent of such damage: Provided, That the Board of Equalization and Review shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments between September 1 and September 30 and determine the same not later than October 15 of the same year. Any person aggrieved by any assessment or valuation made in pursuance of this paragraph may, within 90 days after October 15 of the year in which said valuation or assessment is made, appeal from such assessment or valuation in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided.

"(c) In addition to the annual assessment of all real estate made on or prior to July 1 of each year there shall be added a list of all new buildings erected or under roof prior to January 1 of each year, in the same manner as provided by law for all annual additions; and the amounts thereof shall be added as assessment for the second half of the then current year payable in the month of March. When the improvements on any lot or tract of land shall become damaged or be destroyed from any cause prior to January 1 of each year the said board of assistant assessors shall reduce the assessment on said property to the extent of said damage for the second half of the then current year payable in the month of March. The Board of Equalization and Review shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments for the second half of said year between March 1 and March 31 and determine said complaints not later than April 15 of the same year. Any person aggrieved by any assessment made in pursuance of this paragraph may, within 90 days after April 15 of the year in which such assessment is made, appeal from such assessment in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in sections 3 and 4 of this title: Provided, however, That such person shall have first made his complaint to the Board of Equalization and Review respecting such assessment as herein provided."

"(d) Title IX of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by adding thereto a new section reading as follows:

"SEC. 13. In any matter affecting taxation, the determination of which is by law left to the discretion of the Commissioners, the Commissioners may, if they so elect, refer such matter to the Board to make findings of fact and submit recommendations, such findings of fact and recommendations, if any, to be advisory only and not binding on the Commissioners, and shall be without prejudice to the Commissioners to make such further and other inquiry and investigation concerning such matter as they in their discretion shall consider necessary or advisable."

"TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY STORED IN TRANSIT

"SEC. 3. Nothing in this act contained, nor shall any prior act of Congress relating to the District of Columbia be deemed to impose upon any person, firm, association, company, or corporation a tax based upon tangible personal property owned and stored by such person in a public warehouse in the District of Columbia for a period of time no longer than is necessary for the convenience or exigencies of reshipment and transportation to its destination without the District of Columbia.

"TITLE IV—TAX ON CERTAIN UTILITIES

"SECTION 1. Paragraph 5 of section 6 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"PAR. 5. Each national bank as the trustee for its stockholders, through its president or cashier, and all other incorporated banks and trust companies in the District of Columbia, through their presidents or cashiers, and all gas, electric lighting, and telephone companies, through their proper officers, shall make affidavit to the board of personal-tax appraisers on or before the 1st day of August each year as to the amount of its or their gross earnings or gross receipts, as the case may be, for the preceding year ending the 30th day of June, and each national bank and all other incorporated banks and trust companies respectively shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum 6 percent on such gross earnings and each gas company, electric-lighting company, and telephone company shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum 4 percent on such gross receipts, except from the sale of equipment and appliances and parts thereof in the ordinary course of business, as to which the tax on the privilege of doing business imposed by title VI of this act shall be applicable. And in addition thereto the real estate owned by each national or other incorporated bank, and each trust, gas, electric-lighting, and telephone company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate in said District: Provided, That street-railroad companies shall pay 3 percent per annum on their gross receipts and other taxes as provided by existing law, and insurance companies shall continue to pay the 2 percent on premium receipts as provided by existing law. That so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia" as is inconsistent with the provisions of this section is hereby repealed."

"Sec. 2. This title shall not apply to gross earnings or gross receipts for any fiscal year ending the 30th day of June prior to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. Taxes shall be levied and collected for the fiscal years preceding the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, under said paragraph 5 of section 6 of said act of July 1, 1902, as if this title had not been enacted."

"TITLE V—INHERITANCE AND ESTATE TAXES

"Title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by an act entitled 'An act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes,' approved May 16, 1938, is amended to read as follows:

"Taxes shall be imposed in relation to estates of decedents, the shares of beneficiaries of such estates, and gifts as hereinafter provided:

"ARTICLE I—INHERITANCE TAX

"SECTION 1. (a) All real property and tangible and intangible personal property, or any interest therein, having its taxable situs in the District of Columbia, transferred from any person who may die seized or possessed thereof, either by will or by law, or by right of survivorship, and all such property, or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, gift, or sale (except in cases of a bona fide purchase for full consideration in money or money's worth), made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the decedent, or made in contemplation of death, to or for the use of, in trust or otherwise (including property of which the decedent has retained for his life or for any period not ascertainable without reference to his death or for any period which does not in fact end before his death (1) the possession or enjoyment of, or the right to the income from such property, or (2) the right, either alone or in conjunction with any person, to designate the persons who shall possess or enjoy the property or the income therefrom), to the father, mother, husband, wife, children by blood or legally adopted children, or any other lineal descendants or lineal ancestors of the decedent, shall be subject to a tax as follows: 1 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 2 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000; 3 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 4 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000; 5 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $1,000,000.

"(b) So much of said property so transferred to each of the brothers and sisters of the whole or half blood of the decedent shall be subject to a tax as follows: 3 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $25,000; 4 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $25,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 6 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000; 8 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 10 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000.

"(c) So much of said property so transferred to any person other than those included in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section and all firms, institutions, associations, and corporations shall be subject to a tax as follows: 5 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $1,000 and not in excess of $25,000; 7 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $25,000 and not in excess of $50,000; 9 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $100,000; 12 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $500,000; 15 percent of so much of said property as is in excess of $500,000.

"(d) Executors, administrators, trustees, and other persons making distribution shall only be discharged from liability for the amount of such tax, with the payment of which they are charged, by paying the same as hereinafter described.

"(e) Property transferred exclusively for public or municipal purposes, to the United States or the District of Columbia, or exclusively for charitable, educational, or religious purposes within the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxation under the provisions of this section.

"(f) Where any beneficiary has died or may hereafter die within 6 months after the death of the decedent and before coming into the possession and enjoyment of any property passing to him, and before selling, assigning, transferring, or in any manner contracting with respect to his interest in such property, such property shall be taxed only once, and if the tax on the property so passing to said beneficiary has not been paid, then the tax shall be assessed on the property received from such share by each beneficiary thereof, finally entitled to the possession and enjoyment thereof, as if he had been the original beneficiary, and the exemptions and rates of taxation shall be governed by the respective relationship of each of the ultimate beneficiaries to the first decedent.

"(g) The provisions of article I of this title shall apply to property in the estate of every person who shall die after this title becomes effective.

"(h) The transfer of any property, or interest therein, within 2 years prior to death, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death.

"(i) All property and interest therein which shall pass from a decedent to the same beneficiary by one or more of the methods specified in this section, and all beneficial interests which shall accrue in the manner herein provided to such beneficiary on account of the death of such decedent, shall be united and treated as a single interest for the purpose of determining the tax hereunder.

"(j) Whenever any person shall exercise a general power of appointment derived from any disposition of property, made either before or after the passage of this title, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable, under the provisions of this title, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power; and whenever any person possessing such power of appointment so derived shall omit or fail to exercise the same, within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a transfer taxable under the provisions of this title shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omissions or failure in the same manner as though the person or persons thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by the will of the donee of the power failing to exercise such power, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure.

"(k) The doctrine of equitable conversion shall not be invoked in the assessment of taxes under this article.

"Sec. 2. The tax provided in section 1 shall be paid on the market value of the property or interest therein at the time of the death of the decedent as appraised by the assessor, or, in the discretion of the assessor, upon the value as appraised by the probate court of the District. The taxable portion of real or personal property held jointly or by the entireties shall be determined by dividing the value of the entire property by the number of persons in whose joint names it was held.

"Sec. 3. The appraisal thus made shall be deemed and taken to be the true value of the said property or interest therein upon which the said tax shall be paid, and the amount of said tax and the tax imposed by article II of this title shall be a lien on said property or interest therein for the period of 10 years from the date of death of the decedent: Provided, however, That such lien shall not attach to any personal property sold or disposed of for value by an administrator, executor, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or by a trustee appointed under a will filed with the register of wills for the District or by order of said court, or his successor approved by said court, but a lien for said taxes shall attach on all property acquired in substitution therefor for a period of 10 years after the acquisition of such substituted property: And provided further, That such lien upon such substituted property shall, upon sale by such personal representatives, be extinguished and shall reattach in the manner as provided with respect of such original property.

"Sec. 4. The personal representative of every decedent, the gross value of whose estate is in excess of $1,000, shall, within 15 months after the death of the decedent, report under oath to the assessor, on forms provided for that purpose, an itemized schedule of all the property (real, personal, and mixed) of the decedent, the market value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent, the name or names of the persons to receive the same, and the actual value of the property that each will receive, the relationship of such persons to the decedent, and the age of any persons who receive a life interest in the property, and any other information which the assessor may require. Said personal representative shall, within 18 months of the date of the death of the decedent and before distribution of the estate, pay to the collector of taxes the taxes imposed by section 1 upon the distributive shares and legacies in his hands and the tax imposed by section 1 hereof against each distributive share or legacy shall be charged against such distributive share or legacy unless the will shall otherwise direct.

"Sec. 5. The personal representative of the decedent shall collect from each beneficiary entitled to a distributive share or legacy the tax imposed upon such distributive share or legacy in section 1 hereof, and if the said beneficiary shall neglect or fail to pay the same within 15 months after the date of the death of the decedent such personal representative shall, upon the order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, sell for cash so much of said distributive share or legacy as may be necessary to pay said tax and all the expenses of said sale.

"Sec. 6. Every person entitled to receive property taxable under section 1 hereof, which property is not under the control of a personal representative, and is over $1,000 in value, shall, within 6 months after the death of the decedent, report under oath to the assessor, on forms provided for that purpose, an itemized schedule of all property (real, personal, and mixed) received or to be received by such person; the market value of the same at the time of the death of the decedent and the relationship of such person to the decedent; and any other information which the assessor may require. The tax on the transfer of any such property shall be paid by such person to the collector of taxes within 9 months after the date of the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That with respect to real estate passing by will or inheritance such report shall be made within 15 months after the death of the decedent, and the tax on the transfer thereof shall be paid within 18 months after the date of the death of the decedent.

"SEC. 7. In the case of any grant, deed, devise, descent, or bequest of a life interest or term of years, the donee for life or years shall pay a tax only on the value of his interest, determined in a manner as the Commissioners by regulation may prescribe, and the donee of the future interest shall pay a tax only on his interest as based upon the value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent creating such interest. The value of any future interest shall be determined by deducting from the market value of such property at the time of the death of such decedent the value of the precedent life interest or term of years. Where the future interest is vested the donee thereof shall pay the tax within the time in which the tax upon the precedent life interest or term of years is required to be paid under the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of this article, as the case may be. Where the future interest is contingent the personal representative of such decedent or the persons interested in such contingent future estate shall have the option of (1) paying, within the time herein provided for the payment of taxes due upon vested future interests, a tax equal to the mean between the highest possible tax and the lowest possible tax which could be imposed under any contingency or condition whereby such contingent future interest might be wholly or in part created, defeated, extended, or abridged; or (2) paying the tax upon such transfer at the time when such future interest shall become vested at rates and with exemptions in force at the time of the death of the decedent: Provided, That the personal representative or trustee of the estate of the decedent or the persons interested in the future contingent interest shall deposit with the assessor a bond in the penal sum of an amount equal to twice the tax payable under option (1) hereof. Such bonds shall be payable to the District and shall be conditioned for the payment of such tax when and as the same shall become due and payable. The tax upon the transfer of future interests or remainders shall be a lien upon the property or interest transferred from the date of the death of the decedent creating the interests and shall remain in force and effect until 10 years after the date when such remainder or future interest shall become vested in the donee thereof. If the tax upon the transfer of a contingent future interest is paid before the same shall become vested, such tax shall be paid by the personal representative out of the corpus of the estate of the decedent, otherwise by the person or persons entitled to receive the same."

"ARTICLE II—ESTATE TAXES

"SECTION 1. In addition to the taxes imposed by article I, there is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the estate of every decedent who, after this title becomes effective, shall die a resident of the District, a tax equal to 80 percent of the Federal estate tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted.

"SEC. 2. There shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession tax lawfully imposed by any State or Territory of the United States, in respect of any property included in the gross estate for Federal estate-tax purposes as prescribed in title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted: Provided, however, That only such taxes as are actually paid and credit therefor claimed and allowed against the Federal estate tax may be applied as a credit against and in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1.

"SEC. 3. In no event shall the tax imposed by section 1 of this article exceed the difference between the maximum credit which might be allowed against the Federal estate tax imposed by title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, and the aggregate amount of the taxes described in section 2 of this article (but not including the tax imposed by sec. 1) allowable as a credit against the Federal estate tax.

"SEC. 4. The purpose of section 1 of this article is to secure for the District the benefit of the credit allowed under the provisions of section 301 (c) of title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, to the extent that the District may be entitled by the provisions of said revenue act, by imposing additional taxes, and the same shall be liberally construed to effect such purpose: Provided, That the amount of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article shall not be decreased by any failure to secure the allowance of credit against the Federal estate tax.

"SEC. 5. A tax is hereby imposed upon the transfer of real property or tangible personal property in the District of every person who at the time of death was a resident of the United States but not a resident of the District, and upon the transfer of all property, both real and personal, within the District of every person who at the time of death was not a resident of the United States, the amount of which shall be a sum equal to such proportion of the amount by which the credit allowable under the applicable Federal revenue act for estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes actually paid to the several States exceeds the amount actually so paid for such taxes, exclusive of estate taxes based upon the difference between such credit and other estate taxes and inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes, as the value of the property in the District bears to the value of the entire estate, subject to estate tax under the applicable Federal revenue act.

"SEC. 6. Every executor or administrator of the estate of a decedent dying a resident of the District or of a nonresident decedent owning real estate or tangible personal property situated in the District, or of an alien decedent owning any real estate, tangible or intangible personal property situated in the District, or, if there is no executor or administrator appointed, qualified, and acting, then any person in actual or constructive possession of any property forming a part of an estate subject to estate tax under this title shall, within 16 months after the death of the decedent file with the assessor a copy of the return required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926, verified by the affidavit of the person filing said return with the assessor, and shall, within 30 days after the date of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, confirming, increasing, or diminishing the tax shown to be due, file a copy of such communication with the assessor. With the copy of the Federal estate-tax return there shall be filed an affidavit as to the several amounts paid or expected to be paid as taxes within the purview of section 2 of this article: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the filing of such return as required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926 is extended without penalty by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the copy thereof verified as aforesaid may be filed with the assessor within 30 days after the expiration of said extended period.

"SEC. 7. The assessor shall, upon receipt of the return and accompanying affidavit, assess such amount as he may determine, from the basis of the return, to be due the District. Upon receipt of a copy of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, herein required to be filed, the assessor shall make such additional assessment or shall make such abatement of the assessment as may appear proper.

"SEC. 8. The estate taxes imposed by this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within 17 months after the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the payment of taxes imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, is extended by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the tax imposed by this article shall be paid within 60 days after the expiration of such extended period, together with interest as provided in section 4 of article IV of this title: Provided further, That any additional assessment found to be due under section 7 of this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within 30 days after the determination of such additional assessment by the assessor.

"ARTICLE III—GENERAL

"SECTION 1. The bond of the personal representative of the decedent shall be liable for all taxes and penalties assessed under this title, except inheritance taxes and penalties imposed in relation to the transfer of property not under the control of such personal representative: Provided, That in no case shall the bond of the personal representative be liable for a greater sum than is actually received by him.

"SEC. 2. The register of wills of the District shall report to the assessor on forms provided for the purpose every qualification in the District upon the estate of a decedent. Such report shall be filed with the assessor at least once every month, and shall contain the name of the decedent, the date of his death, the name and address of the personal representative, and the value of the estate, as shown by the petition for administration or probate.

"SEC. 3. The Commissioners shall have supervision of the enforcement of this title and shall have the power to make such rules and regulations, consistent with its provisions, as may be necessary for its enforcement and efficient administration and to provide for the granting of extension of time within which to perform the duties imposed by this title. The assessor shall determine all taxes assessable under this title and immediately upon the determination of same, shall forward a statement of the taxes determined to the person or persons chargeable with the payment thereof and shall give advice thereof to the collector of taxes. The assessor is hereby authorized and empowered to summon any person before him to give testimony on oath or affirmation or to produce all books, records, papers, documents, or other legal evidence as to any matter relating to this title, and the assessor is authorized to administer oaths and to take testimony for the purposes of the administration of this title. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then and in that event the assessor may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to said summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpoenas of that court.

"SEC. 4. If the taxes imposed by this title are not paid when due, 1 percent interest for each month or portion of a month from the date when the same were due until paid shall be added to the amount of said taxes and collected as a part of the same, and said taxes shall be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection: Provided, however, That where the time for payment of the tax imposed by this title is extended by the assessor or where the payment of the tax is lawfully suspended under the regulations for the administration of this title, interest shall be paid at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date on which the tax would otherwise be payable.

"SEC. 5. If any person shall fail to perform any duty imposed upon him by the provisions of this title or the regulations made hereunder the Commissioners may proceed by petition for mandamus to compel performance and upon the granting of such writ the court shall adjudge all costs of such proceeding against the delinquent.

"Sec. 6. Any person required by this title to file a return who fails to file such return within the time prescribed by this title, or within such additional time as may be granted under regulations promulgated by the Commissioners, shall become liable in his own person and estate to the District in an amount equal to 10 percent of the tax found to be due. In case any person required by this title to file a return knowingly files a false or fraudulent return, he shall become liable in his own person and estate to the said District in an amount equal to 50 percent of the tax found to be due. Such amounts shall be collected in the same manner as is herein provided for the collection of the taxes levied under this title.

"Sec. 7. Any person required by this title to pay a tax or required by law or regulation made under authority thereof to make a return or keep any records or supply any information for the purposes of computation, assessment, or collection of any tax imposed by this title, who willfully fails to pay such tax, make any such return, or supply any such information at the time or times required by law or regulation shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"Sec. 8. When the assessor is satisfied that the tax liability imposed by this title has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, issue his certificate, releasing any or all property from the lien herein imposed.

"Sec. 9. No person holding, within the District, tangible or intangible assets of any resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, shall deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, unless notice of the date and place of such intended transfer be served upon the assessor of the District of Columbia at least 10 days prior to such delivery or transfer, nor shall any person holding, within the District of Columbia, any assets of a resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by said district court without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any tax which may be assessed on account of the transfer of such assets under the provisions of articles I and II without an order from the assessor of the District of Columbia authorizing such transfer. It shall be lawful for the assessor of the District, personally, or by his representatives, to examine said assets at any time before such delivery or transfer. Failure to serve such notice or to allow such examination or to retain as herein required a sufficient portion or amount to pay the taxes imposed by this title shall render such person liable to the payment of such taxes. The assessor of the District may issue a certificate authorizing the transfer of any such assets whenever it appears to the satisfaction of said assessor that no tax is due thereon: Provided, however, That any corporation, foreign or domestic to the District, having outstanding stock or other securities registered in the sole name of a decedent whose estate or any part thereof is taxable under this title, may transfer the same, without notice to the assessor and without liability for any tax imposed thereon under this title, upon the order of an administrator, executor, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or by a trustee appointed under a will filed with the register of wills of the District, or appointed by said court, or his successor approved by said court: Provided further, That the lessor of a safe-deposit box standing in the joint names of a decedent and a survivor or survivors may deliver the entire contents of such safe-deposit box to the survivor or survivors, after examination of such contents by the assessor or his representative, without any liability on the part of the said lessor for the payment of such tax.

"Sec. 10. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title or relative to any person whose estate is subject to the provisions of this title.

"Sec. 11. If any return required by this title is not filed with the assessor when due, the assessor shall have the right to determine and assess the tax or taxes from such information as he may possess or obtain.

"Sec. 12. The assessor is authorized to enter into an agreement with any person liable for a tax on a transfer under article I of this title, in which remainders or expectant estates are of such nature or so disposed and circumscribed that the value of the interest is not ascertainable under the provisions of this title, and to compound and settle such tax upon such terms as the assessor may deem equitable and expedient.

"Sec. 13. In the interpretation of this title, unless the context indicates a different meaning, the term "tax" means the tax or taxes mentioned in this title.

"(a) The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

"(b) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(c) The term "assessor" means the assessor of the District of Columbia or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(d) The term "collector of taxes" means the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(e) The term "Metropolitan Police Department" means the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia.

"(f) The term "include" when used in a definition contained in this title, shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

"(g) The term "resident" means domiciled and the term "residence" means domicile.

"Sec. 14. The provisions of this title shall become effective at 12:01 a. m., the day immediately following its approval."

"TITLE VI—TAX ON PRIVILEGE OF DOING BUSINESS

"SECTION 1. Title VI of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by an act entitled 'An act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes', approved May 16, 1938, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 1. Where used in this title—

"(a) The term "person" includes any individual, firm, partnership, joint adventure, association, corporation (domestic or foreign), trust, estate, receiver, or any other group or combination, acting as a unit; and all bus lines, truck lines, radio-communication lines or networks, telegraph lines, telephone lines, or any instrumentality of commerce, but shall not include railroads, railroad-express companies, steamship companies, and air-transportation lines.

"(b) The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

"(c) The term "taxpayer" means any person liable for any tax hereunder.

"(d) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(e) The term "business" shall include the carrying on or exercising for gain or economic benefit, either direct or indirect, any trade, business, profession, vocation, or commercial activity, including the renting or leasing of real or personal property, in any commerce whatsoever in the District, in or on privately owned property and in or on property owned by the United States Government, or by the District, not including, however, labor or services rendered by any individual as an employee for wages, salary, or commission.

"The term "business" shall not include the usual activities of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, trade associations or unions, or other associations performing the services usually performed by trade associations and unions, community chest funds or foundations, corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or club or fraternal organizations operated exclusively for social, literary, educational, or fraternal purposes, where no part of the net earnings or income or receipts from such units, groups, or associations inure to any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carried on for propaganda or attempt to influence legislation: Provided, however, That if any such units, groups, or associations shall engage in activities other than the activities in which such units, groups, or associations usually engage, such activities shall be included in the term "business": Provided further, That activities conducted for gain or profit by any educational institution, hospital, or any other institution mentioned in this subparagraph, are included in the term "business." Nor shall the term "business" include the usual activities of farmers' cooperative associations, as that term is defined in the Farm Credit Act of 1933, nor the members of such associations.

"(f) The term "gross receipts" means the gross receipts received from any business in the District, including cash, credits, and property of any kind or nature, without any deduction therefrom on account of the cost of the property sold, the cost of materials, labor, or services, or other costs, interest or discount paid, or any expense whatsoever: Provided, however, That any credits included by a taxpayer in a prior return of gross receipts which shall not have been collected during the period since the filing of the return in which the credit was included may be deducted from the gross receipts covered by the subsequent return: Provided further, That if such credit shall be collected during a succeeding taxable period, such items shall be included in the return of gross receipts for such succeeding taxable period: Provided further, That the term "gross receipts" when used in connection with or in respect to financial transactions involving the sale of notes, stocks, bonds, and other securities, or the loan, collection, or advance of money, or the discounting of notes, bills, or other evidences of debt, shall be deemed to mean the gross interest, discount, or commission, or other gross income earned by means of or resulting from said financial transactions: Provided further, That in connection with commission merchants, attorneys, or other agents, the term "gross receipts" shall be deemed to mean the gross amount of such commissions or gross fees received by them, and as to stock and bond brokers, the term "gross receipts" shall be deemed to mean gross amount of commissions or gross fees received, the gross trading profit on securities bought and sold, and the gross interest income on marginal accounts from business done or arising in the District: Provided further, That with respect to contractors the term "gross receipts" shall mean their total receipts, less money paid by them to subcontractors for work and labor performed, and material furnished by such subcontractors in connection with such work and labor.

"(g) The term "fiscal year" means the year beginning on the 1st day of July and ending on the 30th day of June following.

"(h) The term "original license" shall mean the first license issued to any person for any single place of business and the term "renewal license" shall mean any subsequent license issued to the same person for the same place of business.

"(i) The terms "include" and "including" when used in this title in connection with a class or group, or in a definition contained in this title, shall not be deemed to exclude other persons or things otherwise within such class or group, or within the meaning of the term defined, as the case may be.

"Sec. 2. (a) No person shall engage in or carry on any business in the District without having a license required by this title so to do from the Commissioners, except that no license shall be required of any person selling newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, whose sales are not made from a fixed location and which sales do not exceed the annual sum of $2,000, nor of any person conducting a display or exhibit of merchandise as a part of or in connection with any convention of merchants or manufacturers held within the District and negotiating or procuring orders for merchandise displayed thereat: Provided, however, That such person shall not be relieved from the requirement of reporting and paying the tax computed on the gross receipts derived from business carried on by such person within the District.

"(b) All licenses issued under this title shall be in effect for the duration of the fiscal year in which issued, unless revoked as herein provided, and shall expire at midnight of the 30th day of June of each year. No license may be transferred to any other person.

"(c) All licenses granted under this title must be conspicuously posted on the premises of the licensee and said license shall be accessible at all times for inspection by the police or other officers duly authorized to make such inspection. Licensees having no located place of business shall exhibit their licenses when requested to do so by any of the officers above named.

"(d) Licenses shall be good only for the location designated thereon; except in the case of licenses issued hereunder for businesses which in their nature are carried on at large and not at a fixed place of business. No license shall be issued for more than one place of business without a payment of a separate fee for each except where a taxpayer is engaged in the business of renting real estate.

"(e) Any person not having an office or place of business in the District but who does or transacts business in the District by or through an employee or agent, shall procure the license provided by this title. Said license shall be carried and exhibited by said employee or agent: Provided, however, That where said person does or transacts business in the District by or through two or more employees or agents, each such employee or agent shall carry either the license or a certificate from the Commissioners that the license has been obtained. Such certificates shall be in such form as the Commissioners shall determine and shall be furnished without charge by the Commissioners upon request. No employee or agent of a person not having an office or place of business within the District shall engage in or carry on any business in the District for or on behalf of such person unless such person shall have first obtained a license as provided by this title.

"(f) The Commissioners may, after hearing, revoke any license issued hereunder for failure of the licensee to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title as originally enacted or amended or to pay any installment of tax when due thereunder.

"(g) Licenses shall be renewed for the ensuing fiscal year upon application as provided in section 3 of this title: Provided, however, That no license shall be issued if the taxpayer has failed or refused to pay any tax or installment thereof or penalties thereon imposed by this title as originally enacted or as amended: Provided further, That the Commissioners in their discretion for cause shown may, on such terms and conditions as they may determine or prescribe, waive the provisions of this paragraph.

"Sec. 3. (a) Applications for license shall be upon a form prescribed and furnished by the Commissioners, and each application shall be accompanied by a fee of $10: Provided, however, That no fee for the renewal of any license previously issued shall be required of any person if he shall certify under oath (1) that his gross receipts during the year immediately preceding his application, if he was engaged in business during all of such period of time, or (2) that his gross receipts as computed in section 5 of this title, if he was engaged in business for less than 1 year immediately preceding his application, were not more than $2,000. Application for an original license may be made at any time. Application for a renewal of license shall be made during the month of May immediately preceding the fiscal year for which it is desired that the license be renewed: Provided further, That where an original license is issued to any person after the 1st day of May of any year, application for a renewal of such license for the ensuing fiscal year may be made at any time prior to the expiration of the fiscal year in which such original license was issued.

"(b) In the event of the failure of a licensee to apply for renewal of a license or licenses within the time prescribed herein, such licensee shall be required to pay for the renewal of each license the sum of $5 in addition to the fees prescribed herein, and the license fee in no event shall be less than $5 for each such renewal license.

"Sec. 4. (a) Every person subject to the provisions of this title, whose annual gross receipts during the preceding calendar year exceed $2,000, shall, during the month of July of each year, furnish to the assessor, on a form prescribed by the Commissioners, a statement under oath showing the gross receipts of the taxpayer during the preceding calendar year, which return shall contain such other information as the Commissioners may deem necessary for the proper administration of this title. The burden of proof shall be upon the person claiming exemption from the requirement of filing a return to show that his gross annual receipts are not in excess of $2,000.

"(b) The Commissioners, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, are authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda of any person bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the Commissioners shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the Commissioners may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpoenas of that court.

"(c) The Commissioners are authorized and empowered to extend for cause shown the time for filing a return for a period not exceeding 30 days.

"Sec. 5. (a) For the privilege of engaging in business in the District during any fiscal year after June 30, 1939, each person so engaged shall pay to the collector of taxes a tax measured upon gross receipts in excess of $2,000 derived from such business for the calendar year immediately preceding, as follows:

"1. Dealers in goods, wares, and merchandise, the owners of rental, real, and personal property, persons who supply transportation for hire, and all other persons engaged in a business in which capital is the primary material factor in the production of gross receipts shall pay a tax equal to four-tenths of 1 percent of such excess gross receipts derived by them respectively from such businesses: Provided, however, That with respect to dealers in goods, wares, and merchandise, where the spread or difference between the cost of goods sold and the sale price does not exceed 5 percent of the cost of the goods sold, one-tenth of 1 percent of such dealers' excess gross receipts; where such spread or difference exceeds 5 but does not exceed 10 percent, two-tenths of 1 percent of such dealers' excess gross receipts; and where such spread or difference exceeds 10 percent but does not exceed 15 percent, three-tenths of 1 percent of such dealers' excess gross receipts; and where such spread or difference exceeds 15 percent, four-tenths of 1 percent of such dealers' excess gross receipts. The cost of such goods, wares, and merchandise sold shall be determined after considering the inventories both at the beginning and at the end of the period covered by the return and purchases made during such period, and such inventories shall be valued at cost or market, whichever is lower, and shall be in agreement with the inventories as reflected by the books of such dealers. The cost of goods, wares, and merchandise shall be the actual purchase price, including the prevailing freight rate to the dealer's place of business in the District. The burden of proving under which classification the taxpayer shall be taxed shall be upon the taxpayer, and, unless the taxpayer shall by proof satisfactory to the assessor show to the contrary, the spread or difference between the cost of goods, wares, and merchandise sold by the taxpayer and the selling price of such goods, wares, and merchandise shall be presumed to be in excess of 15 percent of the cost of the goods, wares, and merchandise sold, and the taxpayer shall be taxed accordingly.

"2. Attorneys at law, physicians, surgeons, dentists, oculists, nurses, accountants, commission merchants, factors, musicians, artists, brokers, agents, engineers, architects, interior decorators, osteopathic physicians, surveyors, Christian Science practitioners, clairvoyants, phrenologists, and all other persons engaged in a business in which personal services are the primary material factor in the production of gross receipts shall pay a tax equal to 1 percent of such excess gross receipts derived by them respectively from such businesses. With respect to any corporation which shall conduct, carry on, or transact any business described in this subparagraph, such corporation shall be subject to the provisions of this subparagraph to the same extent as if such business had been conducted, transacted, or carried on by an individual or individuals.

"3. All persons other than those mentioned in subparagraphs (1) and (2) of this paragraph shall pay a tax equal to 1 percent of the gross receipts derived by such persons from such business. The burden of proving that the taxpayer should be classified under subparagraph (1) of this paragraph shall be upon the taxpayer, and, unless the taxpayer shall by proof satisfactory to the assessor show to the contrary, the taxpayer shall be classified under subparagraph (2) of this paragraph.

"(b) If a taxpayer shall not have been engaged in business during the entire calendar year upon the gross receipts of which the tax imposed by this title is measured, he shall pay the tax imposed by this title measured by his gross receipts during the period of 1 year from the date when he became so engaged; and if such taxpayer shall not have been so engaged for an entire year prior to the beginning of the fiscal year for which the tax is imposed, then the tax imposed shall be measured by his gross receipts during the period in which he was so engaged, multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which shall be 365 and the denominator of which shall be the number of days in which he was so engaged.

"(c) If a person liable for the tax during any year or portion of a year for which the tax is computed acquires the assets or franchises of or merges or consolidates his business with the business of any other person or persons, such person liable for the tax shall report, as his gross receipts by which the tax is to be measured, the gross receipts for such year of such other person or persons, together with his own gross receipts during such year.

"Sec. 6. National banks and all other incorporated banks and trust companies, street railroad, gas, electric lighting, and telephone companies, companies incorporated or otherwise, which guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, companies which furnish abstracts of title, savings banks, and building and loan associations which pay taxes under existing laws of the District upon gross receipts or gross earnings and insurance companies which pay a tax upon premiums shall be exempt from the provisions of this title.

"Sec. 7. (a) The taxes imposed hereby shall be due on the 1st day of July of the fiscal year for which such taxes are assessed and may be paid, without penalty, to the collector of taxes of the District in equal semiannual installments in the months of October and April following. If either of said installments shall not be paid within the month when the same is due, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent and there shall be added, and collected, to said tax a penalty of 1 percent per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and said installment with the penalties thereon shall constitute a delinquent tax.

"(b) Any tax on tangible personal property (other than motor vehicle) levied against and paid by the taxpayer to the District, shall be allowed as a credit against the tax due by such taxpayer under this title for the taxable year for which such tax on tangible personal property is assessed.

"Sec. 8. If a return required by this title is not filed, or if a return when filed is incorrect or insufficient and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return within 20 days after the same is required by notice from the assessor, the assessor shall determine the amount of tax due from such information as he may be able to obtain, and if necessary, may estimate the tax on the basis of external indices, such as number of employees of the person concerned, rentals paid by him, stock on hand, and other factors. The assessor shall give notice of such determination to the person liable for the tax. Such determination shall fix the tax, subject, however, to appeal as provided in sections 3 and 4 of title IX of this act.

"Sec. 9. Any person failing to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title shall be subject to a penalty of 10 percent of the tax imposed by this title for the first month of delay plus 1 percent of such tax for each additional month of delay or fraction thereof: Provided, however, That if such failure shall be due to willful neglect or disregard of the provisions of this title or regulations prescribed for its enforcement such penalty shall be 10 percent of the tax imposed by this title for the first month of delay plus 5 percent of such tax for each additional month of delay or fraction thereof. Such penalty shall be computed upon and added to the tax imposed by this title before any allowance or credit for tangible personal property tax paid by the taxpayer is allowed, as provided in section 7 (b) hereof.

"Sec. 10. Any notice authorized or required under the provisions of this title may be given by mailing the same to the person for whom it is intended, addressed to such person at the address given in the return filed by him pursuant to the provisions of this title, or if no return has been filed, then to his last-known address. The mailing of such notice shall be presumptive evidence of the receipt of the same by the person to whom addressed. Any period of time which must be determined under the provisions of this title by the giving of notice shall commence to run from the date of mailing such notice.

"Sec. 11. The taxes levied hereunder and penalties may be assessed by the assessor and collected by the collector of taxes of the District in the manner provided by law for the assessment and collection of taxes due to the District on personal property in force at the time of such assessment and collection.

"Sec. 12. Any person engaging in or carrying on business without having a license so to do, or failing or refusing to file a sworn report as required herein, or to comply with any rule or regulation of the Commissioners for the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $300 for each and every failure, refusal, or violation, and each and every day that such failure, refusal, or violation continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. All prosecutions under this title shall be brought in the police court of the District on information by the corporation counsel or his assistant in the name of the District.

"Sec. 13. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title.

"Sec. 14. Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the Commissioners or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or make known in any manner the receipts or any other information relating to the business of a taxpayer contained in any return required under this title. The persons charged with the custody of such returns shall not be required to produce any of them or evidence of anything contained in them in any action or proceeding in any court, except on behalf of the United States or the District, or on behalf of any party to any action or proceeding under the provisions of this title, when the returns or facts shown thereby are directly involved in such action or proceeding, in either of which events the court may require the production of, and may admit in evidence so much of such returns or of the facts shown thereby as are pertinent to the action or proceeding and no more. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the delivery to a taxpayer, or his duly authorized representative, of a certified copy of any return filed in connection with his tax, nor to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular returns and the items thereof, or the inspection by the corporation counsel of the District or any of his assistants of the return of any taxpayer who shall bring action to set aside or review the tax based thereon or against whom an action or proceeding has been instituted for the collection of a tax or penalty. Returns shall be preserved for 3 years and thereafter until the Commissioners order them to be destroyed. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be subject to the punishment provided by section 12 of this title.

"Sec. 15. This title shall not be deemed to repeal or in any way affect any existing act or regulation under which taxes are now levied or any license or license fees are now required.

"Sec. 16. Appropriations are hereby authorized for such additional personnel and expenses as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 17. The proper apportionment and allocation of gross receipts with respect to sources within and without the District may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners."

"Sec. 2. The amendments made by this title shall not affect the taxes imposed and the licenses required by the provisions of title VI of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as originally enacted, or as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes,' approved May 16, 1938. The provisions of title VI of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended by an act entitled 'An act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes,' approved May 16, 1938, shall remain effective to and including June 30, 1939; and the amendments made by this title shall be effective July 1, 1939.

"TITLE VII—FEES AND FINES

"On and after July 1, 1939, there shall be credited to the District of Columbia that proportion of the fees and fines collected by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, including fees and fines collected by the offices of the clerk of that court and of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia, as the amount paid by the District of Columbia toward salaries and expenses of such court and of the offices of the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia and of the United States marshal for the District of Columbia bears to the total amount of such salaries and expenses; and such proportion of the fees and fines, if any, collected by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, including fees and fines, if any, collected by the office of the clerk of that court, as the amount paid by the District of Columbia toward the salaries and expenses of such court bears to the total amount of such salaries and expenses.

"TITLE VIII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

"SECTION 1. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Sec. 2. The Commissioners shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and request a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 6577, the District of Columbia revenue bill, be instructed to agree to a sum not to exceed $6,000,000 as the Federal contribution to the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few minutes in explanation of my position, a position which is supported by one other member of the House conferees. Personally I want to make it clear that I am not in favor of the so-called formula sponsored by Senator OVERTON, of Louisiana, a gentleman for whom I have a high regard, representing the Senate conferees on the District of Columbia tax bill, a formula which would bring the sum of the Federal contribution to approximately $7,750,000 or $8,000,000 annually. I do feel, however, that I want as an individual to ask this House to express itself this afternoon on a vote authorizing the $6,000,000 instead of the $5,000,000 figure.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the House expressed itself on this matter the other night when it supported the position of the conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. This House, by a vote of 216 to 12, supported the conferees on the appropriation bill and instructed them to stand by the particular item that called for appropriating not more than $5,000,000 to the District budget.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say in answer to the observation of the gentleman from South Dakota, that the statement he makes is correct as to the recent vote. However, that was the position of the House in connection with the District of Columbia appropriation bill, while this is in connection with the 1939 revenue measure for the District of Columbia, a measure which is in conference and on which House and Senate conferees cannot agree, and on an item in disagreement in which I am attempting an honest compromise.

May I say further that I do not believe in the $8,000,000 asked by the Senate under the Overton formula. I believe the $5,000,000 limitation written into the tax measure for the District of Columbia, and supported by this House inferentially by the vote on the appropriation bill, is an amount that is too low. I feel that a higher amount is right and justified for the District to receive from the Federal Government.

I say, however, that it is my feeling always that when a bill goes to conference, the desire of that conference is to bring out a legislative proposal that can be passed and become law. I have never, as an individual, been adamant in holding out in a conference because I feel there is a time for compromise. There must be a give and take.

In past years many, many times this House has agreed with the Senate on a Federal contribution far in excess of $6,000,000 toward the running expenses of the District of Columbia. I feel that this afternoon, if this House—and I doubt if the House will do it—will express itself in favor of the $6,000,000 the Senate conferees would agree and we might bring out even before the end of this fiscal year a revenue measure for the District of Columbia.

As Members of this Congress we are faced with the responsibility of legislating for the District of Columbia. We cannot escape this responsibility, and as long as we have the present system of government here and you and I are responsible for a tax bill for the District of Columbia and all other measures affecting the voteless citizens of this community—we tell them how to spend their money and we appropriate the money for them—I say there is a real responsibility, one which we cannot shirk, of attempting as far as possible to compromise our differences between the House and the Senate and bring out in the closing hours of this day a compromise to which I hope the Members of the House will agree.

I have nothing further to say. I want the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] to be given, of course, some time, because he is in disagreement with the position I take, and I want just a few moments for the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY], who agrees with me in this position. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], the conferees on the minority side, will desire to speak, as they disagree with me on this compromise proposal.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Can the gentleman explain to the House the difference between the tax bill limitation and that of the appropriation bill? The gentleman just stated we fixed $5,000,000 in the tax bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That was by the vote a few days ago when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] brought in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and there was a vote on it in this House.

Mr. DOWELL. But that had the gentleman's approval, as I understand it, in the tax bill. What is the difference between the tax bill and the appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; I did not say it had my approval. I said that I feel the $5,000,000 sum is too low; I also feel the sum of $8,000,000 is too high; and I am trying here this afternoon to effect a compromise of not to exceed $6,000,000 as the Federal contribution to the running expenses of the District of Columbia government for the coming year.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a minute on this. I hardly think it is necessary, because I certainly hope the House will not agree to the amendment offered by my colleague from West Virginia.

If the Senate conferees had agreed that they would accept $6,000,000 as the Federal contribution, there might be a little reason for considering it. That proposition was made to the Senate conferees yesterday during the conference and they refused to accept $6,000,000 as a compromise settlement. Further propositions were made to them on a percentage basis. It so happens that the so-called Overton formula is 20 percent of the present budget of the District of Columbia. It was suggested by way of compromise that we of the House conferees would be willing to come back and submit to the House a proposition of 14 percent, which would make $5,600,000, instead of the 20 percent proposed by the Senate. The Senate conferees refused to accept that as a compromise.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that the committee, headed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], has received an offer from the Senate committee to agree to $6,400,000?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, I do not know. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that on yesterday the Senate conferees said to our conferees on this committee that they would agree to 16 percent instead of 20 percent, which would raise $6,400,000.

Mr. EDMISTON. What amount are the Senate conferees holding out for?

Mr. NICHOLS. The Senate conferees are holding out for the Overton formula, which will raise approximately $8,000,000.

I know that the House is anxious to get away, and I am too, but at the risk of taking an additional minute of your time, I want to point out a thing or two about the Overton formula which the Senate is insisting upon. The gentlemen who sponsor the Overton formula have figured out that Government property in the District occupies 20 percent of the area of the District of Columbia, after you have taken out streets, alleys, and highways, and 40 percent of the park area. The amount left, then, is 20 percent of the entire area of the District of Columbia, which is owned by the Federal Government. Of course, that is real estate. The Overton formula, however, proposes to make the Federal Government pay by way of contribution 20 percent of the entire budget for the District of Columbia. Now, since it is only real estate that the Federal Government owns in the District of Columbia, there might be some reason to the Overton formula if it provided that the Federal Government pay by way of contribution 20 percent of the taxes paid on real estate in the District of Columbia, but let me point out to you what is included in the forty-odd-million-dollar budget that the Overton plan would have the Federal Government contribute to the District of Columbia for the support of its local government. It not only taxes the real and personal property but it includes taxes on intangible personal property, which is money in the bank, stocks, and bonds, and so on.

It also includes a tax on the public utilities, personal tax on motor vehicles, and so on down the line. I might point out that it forces the Federal Government to pay 20 percent of the tax that is paid for dog licenses in the District of Columbia. It goes further than that. It would have the Federal Government pay 20 percent of the $5,000,000 that the Federal Government has already contributed in this present fiscal year toward the support of the District Government. Of course, the thing cannot be feasible at all.

Taxes raised from real estate in the District of Columbia in the last fiscal year amounted to $18,663,949.62. Let us say the Government owns personal property and let us have them pay 20 percent on the personal property. That is $1,331,023.04. The total of those two figures is $19,994,972.66. Twenty percent of that amount is approximately $4,000,000—not yet as much as we now contribute to the Federal Government in the $5,000,000 lump sum.

Certainly there is no justification and no equity in the demand of anyone who would ask the Federal Government to contribute more than $5,000,000 for the support of the local government of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, there are two committees of the House that function in the interest of the District of Columbia. One is the legislative committee, known as the Committee on the District of Columbia, which handles all legislation. The other is the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which prepares the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia.

On last Wednesday, late, a conference report on the appropriation bill was before you and by a vote of 216 to 12 this House very emphatically put itself on record as against any lump-sum appropriation or formula or appropriation in excess of $5,000,000. Now, the tax bill that was prepared after months of labor on this side has finally gone to conference. The Senate has done many things to it, many major things; has made many major changes. One of the major changes was to change the lump-sum formula and adopt a formula named after Senator OVERTON, by which the amount of money to be appropriated to the District of Columbia would be resolved on the basis of the ratio of real estate owned by the United States to real estate in the District of Columbia, with certain exceptions. That formula would produce $7,750,000. I for one believe that $5,000,000 is ample to contribute out of the Federal Treasury to the District of Columbia for the services that we received. The conference report that was adopted a moment ago was brought back here in disagreement, and it is necessary once more for us to sit down with the Senators, but we cannot very well shape this tax bill and determine what to do unless the House once more expresses itself.

I hope here and now that you will very emphatically say to us, the conferees and to the conferees of the Senate, that in your good judgment and wisdom $5,000,000 is enough. We do not want to temporize or compromise with the idea. So when the time comes for the vote, may you say to us and say to the Senate, if it represents your convictions, that $5,000,000 is ample. If we do that, we are consistent and quite in line with the action taken on the conference report on the appropriation bill which was brought back here late on Wednesday night. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Let me say that I, too, am opposed to the so-called Overton formula, the method of taxation that has been described by my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], an active member of the committee and chairman of the Subcommittee on Taxation, but I honestly believe, as the oldest member in point of service on the Committee on the District of Columbia, that if the membership of this House would give adequate attention to the affairs of the District of Columbia, they would better legislate and carry out their duties as legislators for the people of the District of Columbia.

At no time have I heard anyone say that $5,000,000 is the proper amount for the Federal Government to contribute to the government of the District of Columbia. This amount, as far as I can ascertain, is arbitrarily arrived at and could well be either a larger or smaller amount.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell why $6,000,000 is the proper amount?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I will be glad to give my reason for believing $6,000,000 is more like the proper amount than is $5,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is a fact that three of the conferees are opposed to the increase, and two are in favor of some modification?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is true. I might say I talked to one of the three conferees reported as being opposed to the $5,000,000, and he stated that if another form of taxation is agreed upon he will be agreeable to $6,000,000.

I think the Congress owes a duty to the people of Washington because, after all, they retain solely to themselves the right to legislate on this and other matters dealing purely with the local affairs of the people of the District. Let me make you acquainted with some of the history of this tax legislation as it applies to the District of Columbia. At one time the Congress appropriated on a 50-50 basis. Later this was changed to a 60-40 basis and the 60-40 basis continued until just a year or two ago when for some reason that has not been explained so far as I know up until this moment $5,000,000 was fixed as the proper amount for the Federal Government to contribute toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia. I ask any member of this committee or of the House to explain to me now how the figure of $5,000,000 was arrived at as the proper Federal contribution to the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to tell the House how $6,000,000 was arrived at as the proper amount? I might say further that if the Federal Government pays taxes at the rate of $1.75 on its land holdings in the District of Columbia that the amount would still be less than the present contribution.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is not a fact, and I can give the gentleman the exact figures. The gentleman is misinformed, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] is a very able and energetic member of the District of Columbia Committee. I understand that he now makes the statement that the application of the $1.75 rate against the approximate assessable value of the property owned by the Federal Government in the District of Columbia—

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. On the land owned by the Federal Government, that it would be the equivalent of $6,000,000.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It would be more than that.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It would be less than that.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Let me quote the figures. The valuation of the property owned by the Government in the District of Columbia during the year 1934 was $550,000,000.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. How much of that was land?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not have the division.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The land valuation amounts to $340,000,000. That multiplied by $1.75 a hundred is a figure of $5,900,000.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The assessors office in 1934 showed that in that year the total exempt property in Washington was slightly less than 40 percent of the total of taxable and exempt property, whereas similar exemptions in other cities averaged less than 20 percent of that total. United States property exempt—$550,000,000—was found in 1934 to be about 50 percent of the taxable real estate—$1,130,000,000—in Washington.

If the assessed $550,000,000 of Federal-owned real estate in the District were imagined to be taxed like privately owned property, at the $1.50 rate, which then prevailed, that item alone would suggest in equity a lump sum of $8,250,000.

NEW ESTIMATES COMPLETE

The District assessor, for the year 1937, completed new estimates of the amount of tax-exempt Federal property holdings in the District and of the total value of taxable property. These figures show that between 1934 and 1936-37 the property owned by the United States and tax exempt increased from approximately $550,000,000 to $649,728,158, while the total of taxable property decreased from $1,168,252,220 to $1,144,457,153, a reduction of about $24,000,000. Substituting the figures of 1936-37 for those of 1934, the equitable lump-sum payments in lieu of taxation would obviously approximate $9,750,000, or if the prevailing $1.75 rate be applied, such imagined tax on Federal holdings would be about $11,375,000.

Meanwhile the taxable area within the city limits is steadily and in some years largely decreased by condemnation or purchase of privately owned land and improvements for public tax-exempt purposes. When a steadily decreasing fraction of a city's area must bear the burden of a steadily increasing tax, largely to meet the fast-mounting expenses of a great and growing modern capital, and excessive tax burden is inevitable.

The District contributed in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, to the national taxes from which the national contribution to upbuilding of the District is derived, more than any one of over half of the States, more than 9 States combined and less per capita than only 11 of the States. According to the 1935-36 internal-revenue report, the District in that year not only contributed more than any one of the 25 of the States to the maintenance and upbuilding of the National Capital but paid more than one-half of the States to national expenditures in the States, including salaries of Representatives, Senators, and President. Washington's heavy burden, exceeding that of one-half of the States, is coupled with denial to Washington of participation in fixing the amount of these taxes and in collecting and spending them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It must be remembered that the services rendered by the District of Columbia to the Federal Government are far more than the services rendered by the Federal Government to the District government. The Jacobs report estimated that if they were put on a cash basis, the Federal Government would owe the District government $2,000,000 for the extra services rendered by the District government for purely Federal functions in the District of Columbia. You realize, of course, that the District government must supply the water, health service, education, and all the other activities in which the Federal Government participates. Further than that, the District government is required to pay for the upkeep of the streets which cost much more than it does in other cities of comparable size because the streets of Washington are much wider and they are much more expensive to maintain.

I honestly feel that the Federal contribution should be greater. I think the contribution should be at least $6,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 20, noes 223.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. NICHOLS, RANDOLPH, KENNEDY of Maryland, DIRKSEN, and BATES of Massachusetts.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (S. 2065) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, and that they may have until midnight tonight to file a report on House Joint Resolution 329, consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what are the bills?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. One is a bill having to do with an interstate oil compact, and the other has to do with the regulation of certain securities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at the point where I was given time on the stabilization bill this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio and Mr. REES of Kansas asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by the senior Senator from the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the Townsend creed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement of Fred S. Galloway of Indianapolis, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts taken from hearings had before the United States Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, the Neutrality Act of 1939.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 306, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The foregoing provisions of this joint resolution shall not apply to any American republic.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 7, line 13, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in war."

INVITES WAR TO OUR DOORSTEPS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, section 6 is the most neglected, but may easily be the most important, section in this bill. Time should be taken for its consideration. I recall how the Spanish arms-embargo bill was passed. It was at the first session of which I was a Member, the second day of the Seventy-fifth Congress. The eloquent chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee painted for us the picture of a ship, poised in New York Harbor, being loaded with $4,000,000 worth of rifles, ready to run for Spain. We were told that unless we passed the bill that afternoon the boat would be beyond the authority of the United States to stop. The Senate had passed the bill, and the President was waiting to sign it. We did, and one lone man opposed the arms embargo, the then gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Bernard. How surprised he would be were he here today to see who, 2 years later, are working to repeal the arms-embargo portions of the present neutrality legislation and to repeal all reference to civil conflicts.

Then one man stood out against embargoing arms to the forces in Spain. Today look who have become his comrades. I spare you—I shall not call the roll. But I suggest, if I may borrow a phrase from our distinguished Speaker, that some should take counsel of their prudence lest they go one step too far, for the roll will be called and each man here will answer for his position on this bill.

There is plenty of time to discuss and consider this bill well. No ship is poised in the harbor, as it was when the Spanish embargo bill was passed. The President is not in New Orleans or some other southern port, as he was when the conference report on the Neutrality Act of 1937 was whipped through this House on the plea that it had to be rushed to him, so he could sign it before one midnight, lest the country be adrift in the world without a neutrality act or law.

Now, we have a Neutrality Act, and that act provides for an effective embargo on activities that would involve us in war—if enforced. And that act embraces another section which is so decidedly modified by the bill before us that I am taking this time to call it to your sober attention. I refer to section 6. It corresponds to section 4 in the present act, but there is a very notable difference.

Section 4 of the law now on the books says—

This act shall not apply to an American republic or republics engaged in war against a non-American state or states: Provided, the American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in such war.

The corresponding section is section 6 in the pending bill and reads as follows:

The embargo provisions of this joint resolution shall not apply to any American republic.

And, stops right there. It drops the proviso which makes the exception inoperative if an American republic is cooperating with a non-American state in a war.

Why this change? Why drop the proviso—that an American republic must not be cooperating with a non-American state in such war? Bear in mind that this proposed section 6 says "The foregoing provisions shall not apply to any American republic"—without any qualifications whatsoever.

This exempts American republics from the arms embargo amendment that has been tentatively adopted by the House.

This exempts the ships of American republics from the prohibition against travel on vessels of belligerent nations.

This exempts the cash and title provisions of the bill before us from applying, if the sale be made to or through an American republic, regardless of whether that republic is cooperating with a non-American state in a war or not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object if we can have unanimous consent that debate on this section close in 7 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Let us get past this section.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have been trying to get time and first thing you know we will be past all the sections.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman will get time. Would he rather have it now or later?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Later.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in other words, this section 6, as proposed, clearly nullifies all the positive provisions of the act, if the foreign powers but work through some American republic.

In other words, it invites foreign powers to start bidding for the cooperation of some American republic in their wars. If they were to do it openly in a military way, it would mean, of course, a violation of the Monroe Doctrine and would immediately involve us in war. Yet, this bill is proposed as a peace measure.

Today, we have an economic infiltration in South America. Generally, the United States regrets that; then why is it proposed by legislation to invite it? Even, if only one side should initially employ agents—or rely on planted immigrants in Latin American countries—and thereby escape from the positive provisions of this act, the other side would be forced either to do likewise, or to call upon us to assert the Monroe Doctrine, which would mean our involvement in war.

Section 6, as proposed, nullifies the entire act in this manner. It directly invites any nation at war to use Mexico to evade every positive provision and carry their war to our doorstep. Either it should be stricken from the bill entirely or the proviso should be restored that exists in the present act, which exempts American republics: "Provided,

That American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in such a war." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROSSION] for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am against this Bloom so-called neutrality bill. Its major purpose is to repeal the present law that contains an embargo against the shipment of arms, ammunitions, and munitions of war to nations engaged in war. This Bloom bill will permit the shipment of these arms, ammunitions, and war materials from this country to warring nations. This action will involve us in another World War just as it did in 1917. This bill is unneutral and President Roosevelt who is charged with the carrying out of this law is not neutral. The acts permitted under this bill are not neutral. It, therefore, is not a neutrality bill to promote peace but it is rather a bill to promote another World War and involve us in that war. I predict the Senate will never pass this war-breeding bill.

WAR CLOUDS GATHER

June 28, 1939, was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the assassination by a Serbian youth of Archduke Ferdinand and his wife of Austria. The Serbian youth committed that murder because Archduke Ferdinand had led an Austro-Hungarian army and overrun little Serbia and placed the Serbian people under the Austro-Hungarian yoke. That assassination over territory was the spark that started the World War.

June 28 was the twentieth anniversary of the signing of the Versailles Treaty that closed nearly 5 years of World War. On this same twentieth anniversary Premier Daladier of France stated, "The situation in Europe and the world today is the gravest in 20 years." The armies and fleets of Great Britain and France have been made ready for any possible emergency. We had hoped that war would not come, but I am now convinced that we are nearer to another World War than we have been at any time in 20 years. The American people in every walk of life, except the munition makers and two or three small groups, want peace. They are violently opposed to our country becoming involved in another World War. Many veterans of the World War in the House have also spoken against this bill. Labor unions, A. F. of L. and others have urged its defeat.

TERRITORY AND TRADE ARE THE ISSUES

We hear it asserted every day that the impending war is a conflict between democracies and autocracies. This is not true. The real matter at issue is not forms of government. It is not democracy against autocracy. The issues are territory, lands, colonies, trade, and power—the identical issues that brought on the World War. Premier Daladier, of France, declared he expected Germany to march on Danzig. Danzig was a German city on the Baltic Sea. It was taken away from Germany by the Allies in the World War and placed under the control of Poland. Ninety-five percent of the people of Danzig are Germans. They want to be reunited with Germany, but Poland insists on keeping Danzig. England and France have entered into an alliance with Poland, Turkey, Greece, Rumania, and perhaps Russia, against Germany and Italy. Premier Daladier said that if the Germans marched on Danzig, then France would march on Germany, and, of course, England, Russia, and these other countries would also march on Germany. Italy will come to the aid of Germany. These nations are prepared to help Poland to hold the city of Danzig against the will of the people of that city and prevent their return to Germany. The next war may begin at Danzig.

It is not a question of the form of government. Russia, Poland, Turkey, Greece, and Rumania, all allied with England and France, are dictatorships. Russia is perhaps the worst in the world. It is a fight for territory, for trade, and power. Germany's colonies were taken from her by the Allies in the World War and given to France and England and other countries. Germany is demanding the return of those colonies. England and France and these other countries desire to hold these colonies. Italy seeks Tunisia and other territory in Africa belonging to France. There is now a war on between Russia and Japan over territory, and Japan is plundering China.

We asked nothing and received nothing of the spoils of the World War. The great new threat now of another world war is over the spoils of the last World War. The nations that received them desire to hold them; those who lost territories desire to regain them. Our allies of the World War are anxious to have us help them to hold the loot and spoils they received out of the World War. We know now that the World War was not a fight to make the world safe for democracy; it was a fight for territory, lands, trade, and power. It is not now a fight between democracy and autocracy.

I was opposed to the League of Nations, as were many others, because I felt it was impracticable and unworkable. No league has ever been conceived, not even the Holy Alliance, that was able to hold in check any European or Asiatic nation when its own interests conflicted with its obligations to the League or Alliance. Ever since the League of Nations was adopted two or more nations and members of the League have been engaged in war with each other. The Treaty of Versailles in 20 years has been torn to tatters, and the League of Nations is as dead as the dodo bird.

We can see how futile the efforts to write a neutrality act are; we need but to review the record. The Bloom bill before us repeals the neutrality acts passed by Congress August 1935, February 1936, January 1937, and May 1937. I voted against those bills. I am one of the 13 who voted against the act of May 1, 1937. Many of those who are now earnestly and eloquently urging us to adopt the Bloom neutrality bill to keep us out of war argued just as earnestly for the so-called neutrality acts that this measure before us now proposes to repeal. We were told then that it was necessary to pass those acts to keep us out of war; but a very short time after the act of May 1, 1937, was forced through by the administration, the administration and the country generally began to denounce it as being opposed to peace, as being unneutral, and would get us into war. Now the administration in this bill insists that we must repeal that act. The administration has turned about face on the so-called four neutrality acts. There is as much difference between the Bloom bill now backed by the administration and the four neutrality acts heretofore passed as there is between night and day. What caused the change?

HEART OF BLOOM BILL

The act of May 1, 1937, provides that—

Whenever the President finds there exists a state of war between or among two or more nations, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export or attempt to export or cause to be exported arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any such nations.

That and the other so-called neutrality acts placed an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition to any and all warring nations. The Bloom bill before us, backed by the administration, proposes to remove this embargo and take the brake off and furnish without limit arms, ammunition, and implements of war to warring nations. Under this bill the President, through a munitions board that he appoints, will have the power to say who may export these war materials and to what countries they may be shipped.

This bill has a cash and carry provision. These warring nations will come to our seaports and get these war supplies. England and France and their allies with their superior combined fleets will control the Atlantic Ocean. We know that England and France and their allies will receive from us these war supplies.

The President has said in substance time and again that we could not stay out of the next world war. We know that he is not neutral. We know he will favor England, France, and their allies, and I honestly believe that the Bloom bill repealing the embargo on the exportation of arms and munitions, is being forced through in order that we may furnish England and France and their allies these war materials to fight Germany and Italy. The State Department revealed to the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House that the Bloom bill was necessary because Germany had taken over certain munitions factories and works from Czechoslovakia, and England, France, and their allies would need these war supplies.

While the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth was a gracious act and we were glad to have them visit our great country, yet no one is so foolish as not to know the main purpose of their visit. They desired to further cement the cordial relations between the United States and England, France, and their allies. They desired to create the impression in Italy and Germany—and that impression was created—that the United States was lined up with England, France, and their allies. Millions of Englishmen, Frenchmen, and Poles believe and likewise do millions of Germans and Italians believe that we are in alliance with England, France, and their allies.

The purpose behind this bill is to help France and England and their allies.

PROSPERITY FISHED FROM BLOOD AND TEARS

There are those in this country who would not be unhappy if we had another world war. Some of them say frankly that it would bring prosperity to this country. From 1914 to 1917 we went gleefully about sending war supplies to the Allies and rejoiced in our great prosperity and the piling up of huge profits. Those profits seemed attractive at the time, but they were fished out of rivers of blood and lakes of tears across the seas. England, France, and Italy cut off the markets from Germany and her allies. We sent our war supplies to France and England. Germany and her allies became enraged at our lack of neutrality. A ruthless submarine policy was put in force. Some of our ships were sunk, the American people became stirred up, and the next thing we were furnishing billions of credits to England and France and their allies; and then we called 5,000,000 American boys to the colors. We sent our ships and more than 2,000,000 of these to France. Our Treasury was raided. A huge national debt was put upon the backs of our people. Hundreds of thousands of the finest of the young manhood of America were killed in action or lost their lives by disease and exposure. Hundreds of thousands of widows and orphans were made, and before we are through that war will have cost this country over a hundred billion dollars. Yes; in the end we furnished precious blood and scalding tears. Our Nation paid dearly for the profits that we received from 1914 to 1917.

Some leading statesmen of Great Britain after the war in books and articles pointed out how they had led this great democracy into the World War under the guise of making the world safe for democracy. We are now being led into another world war with greater rapidity than in 1914 to 1917, and it will be a more frightful war than the World War. Many great statesmen have expressed the belief that it will mean the end—it will wreck civilization itself—and if we get into it our Nation will emerge with an unbearable debt, with our freedom gone, and our Nation ruled over by a Fascist or Communist dictatorship.

We must avoid another world war. We must not enter another world war to hold Danzig for Poland, or to hold African territory for France, or to hold German islands for France and England, or to settle the territorial controversy between Russia and Japan.

If we remove the embargo and ship war supplies to England, France, and their allies and even though these are delivered f. o. b. at American ports, it will be considered an unneutral act by the other group and it will be an unneutral act, and the injured nations, as they did in 1914 to 1917, will find some way to retaliate against our people. What is there to keep the airplanes of Germany and Italy from bombing our seaports and cities where these munitions and implements of war are stored? Will not their submarines infest our shores and our harbors and bring the war to our very door? After some of these acts of violence, the emotions of the American people will be stirred up and we will find our boys on their way again to fight and die on foreign seas and in foreign lands and we will again see our people burdened with taxes and debts.

And for what? Not for democracy and freedom, but to hold Danzig, the German islands, and territory in Africa.

HISTORIC FOREIGN POLICY

Switzerland was surrounded by warring nations during the World War. Norway, Sweden, Holland, and Denmark were in the war zone. All but Switzerland are maritime nations. Their ships sailed the seven seas, yet none of these nations were involved in the World War. They were neutral. They did not take sides. If these small nations in the war zone were able to keep out of the World War, is there any excuse for this rich and powerful Nation, more than 3,000 miles away from the warring nations, to be involved in one? If we are neutral no nation will assail us and cause us to enter the conflict against it or its allies. We can and we must be honestly and faithfully neutral.

The Father of his Country, followed by Jefferson and other great American Presidents, insisted that our foreign policy should be "Friendship for all the nations and entangling alliances with none." We kept out of European and Asiatic wars and entanglements until 1914 to 1917, when we violated our historic foreign policy and got into the World War. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUSTON and Mr. TINKHAM arose.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not have time to yield. My very honorable and distinguished friends have spoken a number of times on this bill. I have greatly enjoyed their eloquent addresses and agree with them that this is a dangerous bill and ought to be defeated.

The House last night in the Committee of the Whole, by a vote of 159 to 157, adopted the Vorys amendment placing in the Bloom bill an embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and other implements of war to warring nations. The administration that is trying to take the embargo on arms out of the law insists that this amendment destroys the very heart of this so-called Bloom neutrality bill. The administration has the majority in the House and they claim that when the matter comes up for a final vote they will be able to cut out the Vorys amendment. The embargo is the only thing in the bill that tends toward neutrality. The bill in many other respects gives to the President extraordinary and unusual powers. I opposed the League of Nations because it tied the hands of our country and placed its destinies into the hands of foreign countries. This neutrality bill places the destinies of peace or war into the hands of one man—the President of the United States. I want Congress to control the matter of whether or not we shall be involved in another world war. The present law is less dangerous to this country than the Bloom bill, and I shall vote to recommit this bill.

As heretofore pointed out by me, the President himself is unneutral, and with an unneutral law to be enforced by an unneutral President, how can we hope for this country to be neutral and keep out of war?

Notwithstanding the embargo in the act of May 1, 1937, and the terrible destruction of property and human life, helpless women and children in China in one of the cruelest wars that has ever been waged, the President failed to invoke the embargo to enforce the plain provisions of the act and permitted this Nation to furnish to Japan 54 percent of her war supplies and bring about the destruction of billions of dollars and the loss of more than a million lives. It is now generally agreed if the President had enforced the embargo law against Japan and we had not furnished these war supplies, Japan could not have overrun China, killed this million of almost defenseless and helpless citizens and destroyed that country.

With all the President has said and this taken in connection with his acts, I for one am unwilling to place into his hands the destinies of our country on the question of peace or war. I want to help write a real neutrality bill that will keep our country from furnishing arms and ammunition and gather gold from the blood of the men, women, and children across the seas. I know that the munitions workers will be disappointed if we keep the arms embargo in the law and some groups here that desire us to become involved in a world war will likewise be displeased, but our duty is to follow the historic American policy of friendship for all nations and entangling alliances with none. Let us be neutral and thereby help to lead the world into the paths of peace and righteousness. This Nation has given enough blood, has shed enough tears, and provided enough treasure in vain attempts to settle the issues of territory, trade, and power of the countries of Europe and Asia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed and appreciated, as I always do, the speech made by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSON], with whom I had the honor to serve upon a committee when I first came to the House, a committee of which my friend from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] was the chairman. However, I believe the gentleman is unduly excited about this bill and the effect that it is going to have. I believe the effect of this bill will be exactly opposite to what he believes it will be. I am not concerned with what different nations are going to do to each other but I am concerned with what the American people are going to do if a war breaks out. This bill is not to help anybody, it is not to be unneutral but to be neutral, it is to regulate the conduct of our citizens so that if war breaks out we will not become involved. The purpose of this bill is to keep us out of war.

On the question of profits, as I said in my remarks under the rule, if this arms embargo is repealed I shall favor and I believe Congress will pass a law that will entirely take the profits out of dealing in munitions and arms.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No; I do not have time. I must go on to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota and with reference to his amendment that the language contained in the bill as reported by the committee differs from the existing law to which he referred. The gentleman from South Dakota spoke to me earlier in the afternoon and stated that he would offer the amendment, and he asked if I could not get the committee to agree to it. I may say to the gentleman that since he talked to me I have made an investigation, as he requested, and I am told by the State Department that in view of treaties that our Government has with the South American republics the language which he proposes in his amendment to add to the bill would be in contravention of the treaties we have entered into with those 21 countries. For that reason, in the passage of this law we should not nullify or impair the treaties we have entered into with those 21 American republics of South America. The treaties will take care of the situation he seeks to cover, so I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. (a) Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States fuel, men, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217, 221; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security or neutrality of the United States, he shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or any part of the cargo, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state.

(b) If the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, has previously cleared from a port of the United States during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 7, line 22, after the word "state" insert "in violation of the laws, treaties, or obligations of the United States under the law of nations."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly urge every Member to read section 7 as it is before you. It is either amazingly subtle or amazingly stupid.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there so we can have the amendment read again?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The amendment contains the words, which I may state are taken from the law, title XVIII, section 31, and reads—in violation of the laws, treaties, or obligations of the United States under the law of nations.

These are the words taken from the statute which is referred to at the bottom of page 7.

Mr. SHANLEY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to the amendment of the words "and the supreme law of the land"?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I would be willing to accept the amendment, but I suggest it would be well to make this language conform with the other section to which it refers, and that was my reason for choosing the exact language from an existing statute.

Mr. SHANLEY. The amendment itself does not interfere with that confirmation, and the supreme law of the United States is not only our own law, but the constitutional law.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I think the language would be improper in a statute.

Mr. SHANLEY. The chairman authorizes me to say that he will agree to the amendment if you will put in the words "and the supreme law of the land" which follows article VI of our Constitution.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I am perfectly willing to concede an amendment to my amendment although I think it adds nothing to it and is not proper language in a statute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio ask unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I will not object if unanimous consent is requested, although I shall not take the responsibility myself of putting those words in the statute.

Mr. SHANLEY. I will accept that responsibility.

Mr. BLOOM. We offer that as an amendment to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Vorys of Ohio, after the word "nations", "and the supreme law of the land."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 22, after the word "state", insert "in violation of the laws, treaties, or obligations of the United States under the law of nations and the supreme law of the land."

Mr. BLOOM. I believe that is acceptable.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have no objection, and I believe unanimous consent has been asked that it be incorporated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBMARINES AND ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS

SEC. 8. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state, will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine or armed merchant vessel to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. Whenever, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 23, after the word "use" insert "by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, line 1, after the word "States" strike out the remainder of line 1 and "vessels of a foreign state" in line 2.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the spelling of the word "Territorial" in line 24, on page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: On page 8, line 21, strike out all of section 8.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I sincerely hope that the Committee will accept this amendment. The Committee has already moved to strike out section 3, which would prevent the President from deciding where the combat areas of operations are located. This is in reverse of section 3 and supersedes international law, and would permit the President to decide that one armed submarine or an armed merchantman of a foreign state, but not necessarily a belligerent, could enter our waters, and not another one, when the United States is neutral. It seems to me, clearly, that this is section 3 in reverse, and I trust the chairman of the committee will accept my amendment to strike out this section and stand by international law. This is likely to get us into trouble. Under international law a submarine or armed merchantman may be in our port for 24 hours to refuel, and then go out.

Under this the President may decide in effect that a foreign ship is unneutral and unfriendly to us, and therefore this country would be deciding the aggressor nation.

Will the gentleman accept that amendment?

Mr. BLOOM. No. The committee cannot accept that amendment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman state why he is not willing to accept it?

Mr. BLOOM. I will later.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I earnestly hope that the Members will vote for this, because, as I said, it seems to me it is section 3 in reverse, and the Committee struck out section 3. The Committee decided it was not neutral to allow the President to decide the combat area and dangerous. Certainly if the United States was neutral, it would be unneutral to decide that an armed merchantman or submarine of one country could not enter our waters, and still allow the submarine or armed merchantman of another country to come in.

I earnestly hope that the amendment will be adopted. It is far reaching. Section 9 if adopted may well lead us into trouble.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield for a question?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall be glad to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I notice in the latter part of section 8 on page 9 it states:

Whenever, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist.

And so forth. When the President issues a proclamation, as set forth in section 1, will he, at the time the proclamation is issued, set forth the conditions, so that when subparagraph (b) of section 1, and the latter part of the section now under consideration operate, the people will know that the conditions which brought about the proclamation have ceased to exist. In other words, what is our yardstick unless the proclamation carries the conditions?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I suppose there would be no yardstick, but I would strike out the whole section.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is an extremely unneutral dangerous section. It brings war into our own territorial waters. We have a very upset condition in our own country at the present time and with the intense feeling that may be aroused by such an unneutral action we may have race riots, international riots right in our own country.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentlewoman if in her opinion section 1 (a) will require the President to state the conditions which cause him to issue the proclamation? In other words, if the conditions are not stated, how do the people of the United States know that they have ceased to exist when the President decides to change his mind and revoke the proclamation?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. They will not have any information unless he tells them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, this section is in the identical language of the present law on that subject, and has been the law since 1937. I think it is a good provision of law to protect our ports from becoming infested with submarines or armed merchant vessels of foreign states in the event of war. I can readily understand how, if the war became very grave and on a large scale, belligerent nations might seek to use our harbors or our territorial waters to send in their submarines or their armed merchant vessels to escape attack by an enemy. I think the President ought to have the authority, if he thinks, as this section provides, that it will serve to maintain our peace or protect the commercial interests of our citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, to issue regulations forbidding our ports and territorial waters being so used by belligerent nations.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman be willing to amend it to include all foreign nations?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think that is the intention of the act.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will not the gentleman put in a committee amendment to cover that? It does not say so.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. When we were in committee we considered this section very carefully. There were some suggested amendments. I think the language as worked out is best to follow existing law. I cannot see any reason for an amendment, because I think the meaning is clear that it is to be the intention of our Government to protect our country by issuing these regulations if necessity arises for so doing.

Mr. DARDEN. Is there any particular advantage in barring the submarines or armed merchantmen of all powers? Would we not be in a better position if we barred submarines and armed merchantmen of those powers which were at war? In this provision you are closing our ports to all.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It is only against such boats of those countries that are engaged in war. A careful reading of the provision, I think, will disclose it to the gentleman.

Mr. DARDEN. I do not so interpret the language. If that is the intent I am in accord with it.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I call the attention of the gentleman to the language appearing in line 21:

Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state.

It is a war in which the United States is a neutral.

Mr. DARDEN. But the language is so broad that it includes every State; it does not bar only the submarines and armed merchantmen of those States which are at war, which I think would probably be desirable.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. We might say of a belligerent, or foreign belligerent state. I would have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. DARDEN. That would be fine. I would be agreeable to the language so clarified, that is, if it applied only to submarines or armed merchant vessels of a belligerent state.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment on page 8, line 24, to strike out the word "foreign" and substitute therefor "belligerent"; and on page 9, line 3, strike out the word "foreign" and substitute therefor "belligerent."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DARDEN: On page 8, line 24, strike out the word "foreign" and insert in lieu thereof the word "belligerent"; and on page 9, line 3, strike out the word "foreign" and insert in lieu thereof the word "belligerent."

Mr. BLOOM. The committee accepts that amendment. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I have no time; I am sorry.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative from Texas answer a question?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Unfortunately the gentleman from Texas has no time. I would like to if I had time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire recognition on his amendment?

Mr. DARDEN. No; it has been accepted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the Committee for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate on this section and all amendments thereto has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, line 15, insert:

"ARMING OF AMERICAN MERCHANT VESSELS PROHIBITED"

"Sec. 9. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state, named in such proclamation, to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war, except small arms and ammunition therefor which the President may deem necessary and shall publicly designate for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels."

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire to be heard in support of the amendment?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I might say that the situation is this, that the majority members of the committee are opposed to the amendment. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] should be recognized first in support of the amendment, and let the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] answer him.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the essence of this amendment is to forbid the carrying of arms by American vessels. If you will read the last few words you will find that they state:

For any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state named in such proclamation, to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war, except small arms and ammunition therefor which the President may deem necessary and shall publicly designate for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels.

In other words, this section does exactly what a number of amendments yesterday proposed to do, it provides that if Americans travel on American boats they will be safe, inasmuch as the boats may not carry munitions, as I understand, after a very extensive investigation by a munitions committee in the Senate, the conclusion was reached that the carrying of arms by American vessels was one of the principal reasons for our being involved in the World War.

I also understand that the Secretary of State was quoted here a day or two ago as saying that the one thing he feared most was our involvement in war because of American vessels carrying arms. It seems to me reasonable to suppose that that is the thing which would be most likely to involve us in war, if a war occurred, as now seems probable.

Therefore, I believe that this section should be kept in the bill. It is in the present law. In other words, we are simply restating the present law. Furthermore, it was written into the bill by the Committee on Foreign Affairs itself, and is in the bill now before you.

I am appealing to you to retain it in the bill. I do not think that babies and bullets should travel together on American ships and if you take this section out of the bill, babies and bullets may travel on the same ship. It does not seem possible, with this language in the present law and with it in the present bill by action of the committee, that you will now eliminate it from the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman, as a member of the committee, know any good reason why the majority members of the committee now are attempting to repudiate this very important section which was reported in the bill?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not know any reason. I believe the honorable Representative should ask them the reason and that they should plainly explain it to the Committee.

Mr. COOLEY. May I ask the gentleman this further question: Was this provision thoroughly understood by the Democratic members, the majority members, of the committee before the vote was taken in committee?

Mr. TINKHAM. I cannot say whether they understood it or not, but it is in the present law, it was read and offered to the committee, and it was adopted by a roll-call vote. However, I cannot enter into their minds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. When this amendment was put in it was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] and apparently was accepted with great pleasure and willingness by the majority Members?

Mr. TINKHAM. I offered the amendment to the committee and it was adopted upon a roll-call vote.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does that not prove that the whole bill should be recommitted to the committee for further study?

Mr. TINKHAM. Certainly. If this section is removed from the bill, the bill should certainly be recommitted to the committee and I think it should be recommitted to the committee for other reasons as well.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from South Carolina.

Mr. RICHARDS. If the committee will agree to accept this paragraph as it is, would the gentleman be willing to cut out line 21?

Mr. TINKHAM. Why, that would nullify the entire section. It would permit American boats to carry arms and ammunition, which, in my opinion, would be a very tragic thing.

Mr. RICHARDS. But the main purpose of the amendment was different from that, was it not? The main purpose of the section when it was adopted was entirely different from the meaning carried in line 21, was it not?

Mr. TINKHAM. I offered the amendment exactly as it is written in the bill, and it was in that way that it was accepted by the committee upon a roll-call vote.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How many votes were cast against the amendment?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think it was carried by one vote.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not a fact that the bill was reported unanimously with that provision in it?

Mr. TINKHAM. No. It was reported by the majority, and the minority wrote a dissenting opinion.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman was a little smarter than the other members of the committee that morning and pulled a fast one.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. By the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] has proven himself to be a statesman.

Mr. TINKHAM. I thank the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in opposing this amendment I am speaking for the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This amendment, section 9, was offered in committee by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]. At the time of offering the amendment he did not have it prepared, but stated verbally he desired to offer an amendment, if I remember correctly, to prohibit American merchant vessels from being armed; not from carrying arms or munitions as cargo, but inhibiting them from being armed for their own protection.

Mr. CORBETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CORBETT. Is it not true that every member of the committee at that time had a copy of the existing law before him and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] urged the committee to adopt section 10 of the old law as a new section of this bill?

Mr. KEE. No; it is not true that every member of the committee had a copy of the existing law before him. Copies of the law were lying around on the table everywhere. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], as I remember, stated to the committee that he desired to offer an amendment that would prevent American vessels from being armed. The matter was discussed for a few moments and, if I recall correctly, he tore out a page or two from the existing law and passed it up. We took a vote then upon the question whether or not we would incorporate in this act a provision against the arming of American merchant vessels, and I do not think I violate any confidences when I say that one of the members sitting at the table here in this chamber cast the deciding vote. The amendment was agreed to as a measure providing that American merchant vessels would be prohibited from being armed. This page from the old law was passed up to the clerk of the committee and he was directed to perfect the amendment.

The next we saw of it, it appeared in this print in the same form as it appeared in the old law. If you will notice section 9, as it appears in print, it not only inhibits the arming of American merchant vessels, but it prohibits them from carrying any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war. To permit that phrase to remain in the bill would be for us to go back and adopt the amendment which was offered on yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL], which this Committee defeated. If it is the sense of this Committee to inhibit and restrain American vessels from being armed, then it would be necessary for section 9 to be amended by striking out, on page 9, line 20, after the word "armed", the words "or to"; to strike out all of line 21; strike out the word "war", in line 22; and, after the word "except", in line 22, insert "with." This would make the section read:

It shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state, named in such proclamation, to be armed, except with small arms and ammunition therefor which the President may deem necessary.

That was the amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts stated he was offering to the Committee and which the Committee understood at the time it was adopting. Of course, we oppose that amendment today as we opposed and defeated the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri on yesterday. However, if it is the sense of the Committee that American vessels should not be armed, then the amendment should be made to the committee amendment, as I have suggested.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is my earnest hope that section 9 will be retained in this bill. As I said on Tuesday, this section does two things. First, it prohibits arming of American merchant vessels; and, second, it prohibits United States vessels from carrying arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerents. The important part of this section is not whether American merchant vessels should be armed or unarmed but the fact that this section also makes it unlawful for our ships to carry contraband to belligerents.

With the Vorys amendment placing into this bill a limited arms embargo, it is entirely consistent to retain section 9, which prohibits American vessels from carrying such articles to belligerents. If, on the other hand, before final passage the Vorys amendment should be defeated, and with section 3, creating combat areas, already deleted, it is all the more important that we retain section 9 because it would then be the only provision in the entire bill that would prevent our vessels from carrying on this dangerous trade with belligerents.

By this proposed amendment, to strike section 9, we are now being asked to permit our vessels to carry arms, and so forth, to belligerents. If we do so, I know of no surer way to get us into war.

We are told that, under international law, to carry arms and ammunition is to carry contraband. The vessels carrying such contraband, according to international law, do so at their own peril and risk. It is, therefore, claimed that this country would not be involved by the sinking or seizure of such vessels.

The statement that such cargoes are contraband and the vessels must travel at their own risk is true. But the conclusion reached that there is no danger to our country by the sinking of these vessels is absolutely false.

Can we close our eyes to history? If any one thing could be singled out that caused our entry into the World War it would be the sinking of American vessels carrying contraband.

International law has never prevented this trade in the past and international law will not prevent it in the future. International law does not prohibit the citizens of any nation from carrying contraband. All it does is say if you do so it is at your own peril.

If such shipping is not protected under international law then all the more reason for making it unlawful for our ships to carry on such a trade.

Until you make it unlawful, foolhardy American citizens are going to take such dangerous risks on the chance of making huge profits which I would term as blood money.

If it was only their necks that were being risked, I would not care. But they are willing not only to risk their lives and cargoes but risk the peace of our country.

Are you willing to risk the public indignation the sinking of American vessels would arouse?

The hue and cry would be to punish those countries that sank our ships and the fact that they traveled at their own risk would be lost sight of and forgotten.

Let me again repeat what I said last Tuesday. No matter whether you favor the arms embargo amendment or not, the least we can do is to prevent our own vessels from transporting arms, and so forth, to belligerents. If we do adopt such a policy we cannot be accused of being pro-German or Italian or pro-British or French, but just being pro-American.

Section 9 was accepted by the committee on June 19. What has happened in the last 10 days that made the majority members of this committee change their mind? [Applause.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that we should have this controversy at this time over this amendment. I sent to the committee room as soon as this controversy started to see if we had the records to show just what really happened. I now hand to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] what I believe he cut out and handed to the committee.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. While the gentleman from Massachusetts is examining the document, the exhibit which was introduced in evidence, there is no question about this, is there, that the gentleman from Massachusetts offered section 10 of the existing law, striking out the reference to civil strife with a pencil so there was no question in anybody's mind as to what was being offered?

Mr. BLOOM. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes; that was the text of it. It is what I offered, undoubtedly.

Mr. BLOOM. This is what happened in the committee. The gentleman offered this amendment in whole. This is section 10 of the present law. At that time the clerk was instructed to strike out certain parts of this bill.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I refuse to yield. I am going to make my statement, and then if I have time I shall be pleased to yield.

When the clerk was instructed to strike out certain parts of this section he did so in red pencil, striking out only "or any state where any civil strife exists." He forgot to strike out, and we did not notice it until after it was printed, the other part reading "or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war."

We all try to be fair and honest in this matter. I can assure the members of this committee, as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts, that there is no intent on the part of the committee to do anything that is wrong. At that time we still had to find out what section this would be. It is marked on this piece of paper I have here, "Section 10 (a)", because this originally was section 10. We did not know what section it was going to be, and no member of the committee knew what section it was going to be, until practically after the bill was written.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I cannot yield.

It was understood at that time that the committee would amend this section in the way we stated today. I believe this shows that we were honest and that if a mistake was made it was an honest mistake. However, the original thought and intention was to amend it just as we have it here, and that is the original paper and here is the amendment here. I have it before me.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SHANLEY. Is it not a fact that there are two issues involved here? One of them has been already spoken about and the other is the right to arm American merchant vessels.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHANLEY. Unless there is a war, no American merchant vessel has the right to arm, so you are only authorizing them to do something they cannot do until a war arises anyway.

Mr. BLOOM. That is right.

Mr. SHANLEY. There is absolutely no necessity for a law or a self-denying ordinance now.

Mr. BLOOM. We regret very much that this has occurred, but the committee has done everything to correct this. I did not know it until just now. I asked Mr. Barnes, the clerk of the committee, if he had the papers, and he brought this here.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CORBETT. I have a very vivid recollection of the action taken at this time and I recall that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] started to read the section and he was silenced by the statement "We will accept that."

Mr. BLOOM. With an amendment.

Mr. CORBETT. Oh, no.

Mr. BLOOM. There was an amendment and here it is.

Mr. CORBETT. In both cases, I will submit to the gentleman we are relying on our memory.

Mr. BLOOM. No; I have the facts here. If it was not to be amended this would have to go into section 9, the same as section 10 was, and section 9 is not the same as section 10, so it must have been amended.

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman may recall that at that time he was a little puzzled over the fact I did not vote on this section. I had a copy of the present law before me at the time and when the vote was taken I did not vote either for or against.

Mr. BLOOM. Let me ask the gentleman this question. It was all done in a great hurry, was it not? We were just about to adjourn and that explains the whole thing and that is how the mistake happened, but I can assure the gentleman that it was left to the clerk to make the amendment to this section 10, as was spoken of in Committee. Now, that is the fact.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 1 more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. I would be pleased to stay here and answer any questions that I can.

Mr. CORBETT. The gentleman made a statement which I think is very significant and very interesting and very honestly made, and I think it correctly portrays what happened. We were considering this bill with such speed that this accident occurred, just the same as a great many other accidents occur, and that is one of the reasons I am going to be very much in favor of recommitting this bill for more careful consideration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. I think the remarks of the gentleman are entirely uncalled for. As the gentleman will recall, we had practically finished the consideration of this bill. If I recall correctly, we were just about to adjourn, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] was standing near the chairman's seat, and at the last moment, the last thing the Committee did was to take this action, and then the matter was left to the chairman.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. No; I refuse to yield to the gentleman further, because I think his remarks were entirely uncalled for. I am trying to state the case according to the facts as revealed by the documents I have here, and I do not believe the gentleman should take my remarks and twist them around and endeavor to have this Committee believe that all of our work was done in a hurried fashion, because I may state to the gentleman that he could stay here many years and if he always received the same courteous attention that he has received from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, his life in this Congress will be a bed of roses.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. How long did the committee consider this bill before bringing it before the House?

Mr. BLOOM. About a month.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT. I understand it is the intention of the committee this evening to offer a substitute bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, for the first time in 25 years I have heard a deliberate false statement—and I use no harsher words—made by the chairman of an important committee of this House. I have no reason to make a statement that in any way diverges from the truth, even in the smallest degree. When this part of the bill was reached in the deliberations of the committee, I made a motion at the proper point that section 10 of the present law be adopted by the committee.

I made no suggestion and there was no suggestion made of any amendment to that section at that time. If there were any marks on the piece of paper that the honorable Representative from New York [Mr. Bloom] has in his possession, they were not made before section 10 was offered as an amendment, and it is the first time that I have seen that paper or those marks.

It was a clear proposition. I offered as an amendment section 10 of the present law, which became section 9 in the pending bill, and the amendment was adopted by the committee. There was practically no discussion. We were talking about the text. We had reached the exact point in the bill where it was proper to insert this language, and then there was a roll call and it was adopted by one vote. I want to assure the House of the absolute truth of these statements.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. After your amendment was incorporated in the bill, did not the entire majority membership vote for the bill with your amendment in it?

Mr. TINKHAM. They reported the bill out with this amendment in it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. With your amendment in it?

Mr. TINKHAM. With my amendment in it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And perhaps after that action was taken they received some pressure from the bureaucrats and are reversing their position.

Mr. TINKHAM. They have not yet stated to this House why they believe American boats should carry arms and ammunition or why they desire so keenly to eliminate this section.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The point I was trying to make a moment ago was that after this amendment was agreed to the Democratic members of the committee voted unanimously to report the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. They did; absolutely. It is here by their unanimous report.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts and all of the other minority members vote against the bill after his own amendment had been adopted?

Mr. TINKHAM. Oh, I dissented from the bill, of course. I am not in favor of it. I was not in favor of it then and I am not in favor of it today. By eliminating the arms embargo and the language connected with it, the President is given authority which he should not have. In my opinion, this is a very serious matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In reading this committee print I notice a marginal reference to the effect that section 9 as set forth in the bill is essentially the same as section 10 of the present law?

Mr. TINKHAM. It is exactly the same, word for word, paragraph for paragraph, comma, and period.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield to the honorable Representative from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. If the embargo were placed, would it not be an advantage to the Nazi and Fascist nations, under those circumstances?

Mr. TINKHAM. I consider that this bill should contain no provisions except on the basis of what is best for the United States and its peace. I do not believe we should consider whom it may benefit or whom it may hurt. We should consider only the peace of the United States, and the carrying of arms and ammunition on American ships cannot promote that peace.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, may I try to get an agreement on the time for debate on this section?

Mr. HINSHAW. I have an amendment to the committee amendment at the desk, and I would like to discuss that.

Mr. BLOOM. Just to get some agreement on time. It does not make any difference.

Mr. COOLEY. I want 5 minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. I want 5 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman include me for 5 minutes?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that 5 additional minutes may be added to the time previously fixed for debate on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, some controversy has arisen about section 9, particularly as to the committee's intention. I might say that at the time this amendment came up in the committee the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I was inclined to favor it, because it was my understanding that it provided that these ships could not be armed except with small arms and ammunition for the purpose of maintaining discipline.

I have not time now to go fully into my reasons for so understanding, but such was my understanding when the amendment was offered. I do not know where the error was made nor who was the cause of this error in printing. Certainly I would be the last one to accuse my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts of attempting to put anything in here that originally he did not intend to, and I do not make that accusation now. I am just trying to clarify my position, because when his amendment was offered I voted to adopt it. The other Democrats on the committee voted against it. Mine was the deciding vote.

Had I understood that the amendment was to be worded as it finally was I would certainly not have voted for it; and my friend from Massachusetts will tell you that, as soon as I found out the wording of the amendment, I went to him and told him that I could not support it unless he would accept an amendment striking out the last two words on line 20, all of line 21, and inserting after the word "with" the word "except" in line 22. My friend refused to agree to this, and I think he was fully within his rights in so doing, because he understood that the section was to be worded as it now is. It was purely a misunderstanding, and I am here to assure the Democratic Members of the House, particularly, that the Democrats of the committee are all in favor of striking out section 9. I am sorry this misunderstanding occurred, and I want to say that the chairman of the committee, Mr. BLOOM, was entirely correct in the statement he made to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative from South Carolina answer this question?

Mr. RICHARDS. I will.

Mr. TINKHAM. Why does he think it is good policy, and why does he want American vessels in time of war to carry arms and ammunition?

Mr. RICHARDS. That matter has been discussed and will be discussed further at the proper time. The question before us now is whether we can clear up the misunderstanding relative to the wording of this particular section. It is all clearly a misunderstanding and I do not think there is a single Member on the Democratic side of the committee who did not, when it was offered, interpret this amendment in the same way I did.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDS. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is a very intelligent and valuable Member of the House.

Mr. RICHARDS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sure the gentleman does not want the House to believe that he did not know what he was voting for.

Mr. RICHARDS. Oh, no. I knew perfectly what I was voting for.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TINKHAM. With unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the honorable Representative a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to inform the gentleman from Massachusetts that time for debate on this section and all amendments thereto has been fixed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, there has been quite a little controversy regarding how this section happened to be in this bill at this point. I rather think it would be best simply to forget why it happened to be there. Let us consider it an accident; let us consider it a slip, an error, or whatever you please. I submit, however, that, regardless of how the section got into this bill, it is very fortunate that it is included. Let me submit further that in this new section 9, which was a committee amendment, we have written into this bill the "carry-it-yourself" idea, and that is the most safe and sane feature of all the neutrality legislation that has ever been put on our books. [Applause.]

Let me point out in this connection that if we were to allow our merchantmen to carry arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent powers or to neutral powers for transshipment, we would face a highly dangerous situation. In fact, we create a war-provoking situation. Let me point out further that during the next war it will not be simply submarines that will attack our merchantmen, but bombers as well. If we are in the position of delivering lethal weapons to combatants, our vessels are going to be sunk; and if they are sunk with the resulting loss of American lives, the passions of the people of the United States will reach the breaking point and their anger will be impossible to restrain.

I call your attention to an editorial that appeared in the Washington Post of Wednesday last, and read from it the following:

It is hoped that the House leadership will give most serious consideration to the full implications of abandonment of the carry-it-yourself principle before surrendering completely this issue.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I urge you by all means to retain this section in the bill in order to help retain the peace of the United States.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield.

Mr. JARMAN. Did that article in the Washington Post refer to section 3 or to section 9?

Mr. CORBETT. The quotation read applies to the whole carry-it-yourself principle. The entire editorial urged that the combat-area provision be retained in order to preserve the carry-it-yourself principle which is retained in section 9.

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman is very much opposed to section 3.

Mr. CORBETT. Section 3, however, arrives at the same thing from a different angle. Section 3 involves the setting up of embargoes and economic sanctions. This section prevents our boats from leaving our shores loaded with lethal weapons.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Vorys amendment already adopted cover the same thing?

Mr. CORBETT. If retained, yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman want it in twice or just once?

Mr. CORBETT. The Vorys amendment would prohibit any vessels from leaving our ports during time of war which were carrying arms and ammunition. Section 9 would place such prohibition only on American vessels, and therefore would reserve the carry-it-yourself idea.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORBETT. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that time and time again yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], one of the ranking Democratic members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, said that it was not the sale of arms that would get us into trouble; it was the carrying of arms. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] made that statement time and time again.

Mr. CORBETT. He went further than that. He said one of the most dangerous things we could do was to carry arms in time of war. He was never more correct. If the elimination of the arms embargo, and the elimination of the carry-it-yourself idea, and the elimination of the provision preventing travel by American nationals on belligerent ships results in our being involved in war by interventionists and gamblers in the game of power politics, I will be thankful that the blood of the innocent victims is not on my hands. Let us in all this haste and confusion, in all this rush to go on a vacation, at least pause long enough to consider this vital section. Its preservation may be synonymous to the preservation of neutrality and peace.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, this time not to be taken out of the time already fixed, so that I may ask the chairman of the committee or a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the agreement now with reference to time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed at 25 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDS. The gentleman asks for 1 minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked for 1 minute, not to be taken out of the 25 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDS. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs why he believes that American boats in time of war should carry arms and ammunition to warring nations?

Mr. BLOOM. We have been over that so much I do not care to get into a controversy with the gentleman from Massachusetts on anything other than the section we are on now.

Mr. TINKHAM. In other words, the honorable Representative, acting chairman of the committee, declines to answer. [Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the committee amendment which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: Page 9, line 19, after the word "vessel", insert "carrying passengers while", and at the end of line 24 insert "any non-passenger-carrying vessel may proceed at the risk of its owner."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the language I have written in this amendment to the committee amendment is really very good language or not, but I think it carries out some of the ideas that the majority side has as well as the minority side. My amendment provides that it shall be unlawful "for any American vessel carrying passengers while engaged in commerce with any belligerent state—to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war"—and at the end of the section it would insert these words: "Any non-passenger-carrying vessel may proceed at the risk of its owner."

Although the language may not be perfect, I think it covers the subject. I believe this bill would be most sordid, indeed, without a provision such as section 9 in it. It requires an amendment in order to make it acceptable to both sides, and my amendment should be, therefore, accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. DARDEN.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, the feature of this section to which I wish to address my remarks is that part which prohibits our merchantmen from arming. The development of the submarine, which was a formidable weapon in the last war, has been rather extraordinary in the past 20 years. What we will do if this amendment is written into law is to send those ships to sea with no possible means of defending themselves. In the recent Spanish War alone England lost 150 ships. Some of them were sunk without trace of submarines. Our ships are going to encounter the same difficulty if and when war breaks out between two or more great powers. It is not going to make any difference, when they are destroyed, whether they are armed or not, so far as popular reaction in the United States is concerned. We can make up our minds to this fact: When we prohibit them from arming, we are subjecting them to ruthless attack and destruction, without even giving them the slightest chance. If the lesson of the last war means anything, and if the lessons of the wars that are now raging in several parts of the world mean anything, it is that we should not subject these vessels to the chance of being destroyed without the opportunity of defending themselves. This particular inhibition will contribute nothing to the preservation of peace in the United States. It will serve only to sacrifice those who should be protected.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman think an American ship is more likely to be attacked upon the high seas if it is carrying arms and munitions of war than if it is not carrying such articles?

Mr. DARDEN. I am not discussing at all the transportation of the arms. I am discussing the right of merchantmen to arm themselves.

Mr. COOLEY. But this amendment deals with both the right to arm and the right to carry arms.

Mr. DARDEN. That is the reason, I think, that this particular amendment should be rejected and an opportunity given for the consideration of these matters separately.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman believe it would be proper to send our vessels to sea carrying in their bottoms munitions of war without giving them the right to arm?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Supposing they did not carry ammunition, they are still forbidden to arm.

Mr. DARDEN. They are forbidden to arm with a cargo of wheat or a cargo of cotton.

Mr. COOLEY. No; under this amendment—

Mr. DARDEN. Yes, they are; in this bill, with a cargo of wheat or a cargo of cotton or a cargo of anything, they are refused the right to arm for their own defense against even the most ruthless and brutal attack.

Mr. COOLEY. If they are destined for belligerent ports.

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; and that is their right under international law and has been for 150 years. They have a cargo of food. Why should they not have a right to protect themselves?

Mr. COOLEY. But if the belligerent state knows that that ship is not carrying munitions or armament and implements of war, the ship is not likely to be attacked.

Mr. DARDEN. I differ with the gentleman. I do not believe it will make a particle of difference.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman does not only differ with me, he differs with the majority of the committee.

Mr. DARDEN. That may be true; it is simply my own opinion, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. They frankly confess to the House that they wanted to bring in a provision which would prevent the arming of our merchant ships.

Mr. DARDEN. No; I do not so understand that to be their position.

Mr. COOLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. DARDEN. I understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts had that in mind, but I did not gather that to be the view of the committee at this time.

Mr. COOLEY. And the committee agreed and still agree that they did agree to approve that amendment.

Mr. DARDEN. That is not my understanding of it.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Under existing law, are merchant ships permitted to arm?

Mr. DARDEN. No. I believe an act of Congress would be necessary to permit them to arm in time of war. They cannot arm in time of peace.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Does the gentleman recall that prior to our entry into the World War President Wilson asked Congress for authority to arm merchant ships and a filibuster was conducted on the other side of the Capitol, and then the President found there was in existing law authority to arm merchant ships without the permission of Congress?

Mr. DARDEN. With that I am not familiar, but if this is put into law the authority would not exist, there is no question about that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] for 4 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, this is an unfortunate controversy. It is more unfortunate because it arises among the membership of our very important Committee on Foreign Affairs. Of all the committees of the House which should bring to the House for its consideration a bill which represents the considered judgment of that important committee, it is the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Instead of bringing to us a bill which represents the considered judgment of the committee, we have before us a measure which is badly bungled and which is actually a crazy quilt, patched up here and there with committee amendments, some of which the majority of the committee approve and some of which apparently a majority of the committee disapprove. Who can tell by the actions and speeches of the members of the committee just what the judgment of the committee is? The members of the committee cannot even now agree as to what transpired in the committee room or upon the action taken by the committee before reporting the bill. A very important committee amendment has been offered and, although it has been stated on the floor of this House many times during the course of the debate on this measure that the majority members of the committee voted unanimously for a favorable report of the measure we are now considering, we now see majority members of the committee repudiating and disowning the important committee amendment which has been offered.

Some of the members of the committee say that certain things happened before the bill was reported, and other members of the committee say that those things didn't happen. Statements made during the course of the debate on this amendment indicate clearly that the controversy involves either trickery, fraud, and perhaps moral turpitude on the part of one of the very honorable and distinguished members of the committee, or if we take the other side of the argument it clearly involves careless indifference on the part of other very distinguished and honorable members of this very important committee. I do not believe that any member of the committee, all members of which are honorable, upright, honest, and sincere men, could be guilty of trickery, fraud, or moral turpitude, and in my desire to be charitable I prefer to believe that the controversy has arisen on account of carelessness on the part of some of the members of the committee. As I understand, it is suggested here that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts put something over on the Democrats on the committee. If he did that he must have been actuated by some bad motive of fraud or smartness on his part, or he did it while the majority members of the committee were asleep on the job and did not understand and did not know what was actually taking place.

In time of war if a soldier goes to sleep on the job, he is taken before a firing squad and shot. We are here considering a measure pertaining to peace, war, or neutrality, no one seems to know just what it is; but certainly no one would suggest inflicting punishment upon any of the distinguished and honorable members of the committee. The only punishment which may be inflicted will be the righteous indignation and wrath of the American people for bringing in and reporting to this House such a hodgepodge and crazy quilt and calling it a neutrality bill. [Applause.]

The committee stands before us in a hopeless and helpless position. The important committee amendment which is now the subject of much controversy is not the only provision in this bill which the committee has not carefully considered. The chairman of the committee made the statement that the committee had considered the bill for 30 days before reporting it to the House, yet in the very second section of the bill the committee has offered important amendments. When the resolution was reported by the committee section 2 made it unlawful for an American citizen to travel upon vessels of belligerent states.

But after reporting the bill and embarking upon the debate the committee sought to change and did change this very important provision, and when I offered an almost similar provision as that which they reported, seeking to make it unlawful for citizens of the United States to travel as passengers upon American or other neutral vessels carrying cargoes of arms, armaments, ammunitions, and implements of war, they seemed to think that the amendment was outrageously silly, and vigorously opposed, and finally defeated the amendment I offered. At the time they defeated the amendment they knew, and, of course, the Members of the House knew, that there was no provision in the resolution with regard to citizens of the United States traveling upon American or other neutral vessels carrying cargoes of armaments and munitions of war to belligerent states.

Further, the committee opposed, turned upon, and struck out completely section 3 of the bill, which they had, of course, so carefully considered before reporting the resolution to the House. All of this was done without giving any very good or sound reason why the section should be eliminated. Now the committee disowns, turns upon, and seeks to strike out section 9, which likewise no doubt they carefully considered before reporting the resolution. In seeking to strike out section 9, which is a very, very important section, the committee is unable to give any very good or sound reason why the section should be deleted. The first thing we know, the committee will be offering an entirely new bill as a substitute for this great "Tragedy of Errors."

I hope that all of our time will not be taken up with the controversy which seems to have arisen over what transpired in the committee room, and not have time to consider the merits of the committee amendment, which is, of course, section 9.

The Members of the House should be little concerned over the controversy but greatly and deeply concerned over the merits of the amendment we are now considering. I therefore hope that our attention will not be completely diverted and that we may not overlook the fact that the defeat of this amendment will result in a policy and in a program of mixing bullets and babies on the same ships. Everyone knows that when we go to war we will not go to war over property rights, the loss of commerce, or the loss of war profits, but over the loss of human lives. If we return to the day when cargoes of war materials destined for belligerent ports are decorated and covered with human cargoes of innocent men, women, and children solely for the purpose of enabling men to fight and manufacturers of munitions and international bankers to make profits, we may expect to be drawn into the vortex of war. I appeal to you to vote for this committee amendment and contribute at least that much to our own domestic peace and tranquillity. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the amendment in place of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I had not purposed to speak on this amendment at all. I appear here in a neutral capacity, but not in a neuter one. [Laughter.] I say "neutral" because I was not at the committee meeting when all this controversy and war was raging and have no responsibility for it.

I do agree with what was said by the last speaker that this shows that the committee put an amendment in the bill and reported it out and now wants to take out the amendment, and that is one very good reason, and there are many others, why this bill should be recommitted.

Furthermore, this provision in section 9 makes it unlawful for an American ship to carry arms or to arm itself, for that matter, but I am now talking about arming itself. This was one of the greatest controversies that raged before we entered the last war. The controversy arose over the Maclemore resolution. Under international law, of course, merchant ships cannot arm. There are lots of people here, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and others, who have advocated going back to international law. In that respect it is a very good and wholesome law that merchant ships should not be permitted to arm. Of course, as soon as a merchant ship arms it becomes a warship. If you put a 3-inch or a 6-inch gun, one or more of them, on any ship of any size, it becomes automatically a warship. That is why I would like to see this provision remain in the bill as it is.

I want to keep out of war. I know if we go arming our ships we will be attacked automatically by submarines, because no submarine can come up and search an armed ship. Therefore, if this is repealed, it would deny all international law, because you have heard the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY] speak at length on the right of search and seizure by an enemy ship, but a submarine cannot search and seize an armed vessel. Therefore I think in all logic this should remain as it is if you want to keep out of war; and as we sit around here day after day discussing this question of neutrality, this world of ours is on the verge of war. All the great statesmen of Europe are trembling at this very moment that war may break out within 2 weeks or a month. All of them have said so. Therefore, if we want to keep out of war and do something to keep us out of war we ought to leave this amendment in here and abide by international law in that respect and in that way keep out of war.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman referred a moment ago to manning ships with either 6-inch or 3-inch guns. Would the gentleman tell the committee who will man those guns?

Mr. FISH. Well, they will be a part of our armed forces. It will be the Navy or the Marine Corps, or someone in our armed forces, and that just strengthens our argument that these ships will become warships.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If we do not retain section 9, should we not change the title of this bill from the Bloom neutrality bill to the Bloom war-promotion bill?

Mr. FISH. That is what it is, anyhow.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I want to start off these remarks by endorsing, first, wholeheartedly the splendid, courageous, and patriotic statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] in pointing out the lack of wisdom in playing around with something which may jeopardize the peace of the world. With a committee report which is so badly bungled that the committee members themselves are in complete disagreement about what happened in the hurly-burly of the proceedings of that committee.

I submit that this legislation today may be the most important piece of legislation passing this Congress since the declaration of the last war, and unless we settle down to steady business and clear thinking and honest talking this legislation we are about to pass may well become tantamount to the declaration of the next war.

Here we are, on the eve of a holiday, with a few people in the House, with the committee members scattered all over the place, the chairman not in evidence, discussing what happened during the committee hearings instead of talking about what is actually the basic part of this bill.

If I can find the acting chairman of the committee any place I want to send to him by page three questions which I believe the country is worried about and asking that answers be made to before we vote on this important legislation. Is Mr. BLOOM in the place? I think it is unfortunate we are compelled to discuss a bill of this kind when the one man who should be in position to meet these questions with the answers for which the country is yearning is not even in his place at the time the bill is being considered. [Applause.] I repeat so the record may be clear, is Mr. BLOOM in the House?

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I will not yield until I find Mr. BLOOM. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman will not find him unless he walks down to the restaurant where the gentleman is eating dinner.

Mr. MUNDT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, who is genial and kindly, to whom then may I submit these questions to which the people of this country are trying to obtain an answer?

First, how will it contribute to peace or neutrality to permit American citizens to ride on munition-bearing ships—and Mr. BLOOM, since I see you have reentered the Chamber, I am directing these questions to you—can you tell me and, more important by far, can you tell the peace-loving citizens of this entire country how, mixing bullets and babies, men and munitions, women and war implements, all on the same ship at the same time and sailing for a belligerent port?

Second, will it contribute to peace or neutrality to permit American industrialists to sell for short-term credits which inevitably become long-term credits in wartime? Is it conducive to peace to again permit warring nations to buy on credit in America?

The amendment which would have prevented this was driven into defeat by the administration whip last night.

Third, how will it contribute to peace or neutrality to defeat the arms embargo amendment to this bill which I understand is the purpose of your committee today?

Let me suggest that if those three answers cannot be given, this becomes, then, the Bloom "internal-revenue act" instead of the Bloom "international neutrality act," because it is written for war profiteers. It is written to make bigger profits in war and not to protect the lives of a single man, woman, or child in America.

I am going to submit these questions to you in writing, Mr. BLOOM, and I wish you would tell the country and the Congress the answers to those questions, because it is pretty serious business. The administrative whip and the administration floor leader have pleaded on at least two occasions to prevent these important passages being deleted from the bill. I am interested and I think the people of America are interested in a neutrality act and not an act which is likely to be determined as a declaration of war against any group of nations or an alliance with any other group at this time. [Applause.]

I would like to know who is behind this witches' brew that is brought to us by a group of gentlemen who say, "We do not know what happened back in the kitchen where we were concocting the thing in the first place."

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman has referred to the unfortunate situation which confronts us in legislating at this late hour on such an important subject. I want the RECORD to show that it was not the Democratic side which was responsible for that fact. We did not conduct this filibuster this afternoon.

Mr. MUNDT. Will you also please write into the RECORD why this bill has to pass today instead of next week, or some time when we have had an adequate opportunity to consider it?

I would also like to know just what hidden influence is behind this persistent drive on the part of the majority to defeat every move which is made to take the profits out of war and to restrict the traffic in the merchandising of the means of wholesale murder.

Here we are asked to accept this so-called neutrality bill with its authors and its sponsors fighting every amendment and every suggestion which would make it a war-preventive measure. True, my colleagues, the label on the bottle is marked "neutrality," but the contents of the bottle was concocted from equal parts of the ingredients of greed and avarice by the same chemists who make poison gases and death-dealing explosives.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that unless this bill is amended so that satisfactory answers can be given to the questions which I have herein propounded and sent to the desk of the acting chairman, Mr. BLOOM, in writing that this House in passing such a subterfuge for neutrality would be convicting itself of trapping the dove of peace in a cage barred with the outlines of the American dollar sign. Then, indeed, would the munitions makers of this country gratefully look forward to again reaping unrestricted profits in wartime while the mothers of America may well shudder at the likely prospect of again spending their sons across the sea to die in the attempt to collect the debts owed these war lords and to seek vengeance for the destruction of ships plying their bloody trade with nations using our products of war to conduct the wholesale murder of human beings. The responsibility for such disservice to America must rest with the majority party of this House and theirs is the duty to give this country assuring and satisfactory answers to my triumvirate of questions before foisting upon us a bill to protect the profits of war makers under the guise of misusing the sacred name of neutrality.

In conclusion, let me say just a word to my Democratic friends who are having the merciless lash of the whip from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue applied to you to rubber-stamp this Bloom bill without amendments. Last night I walked back to the office with one of you after our midnight adjournment. You, who I shall not embarrass by calling here by name, said to me, "We'll certainly get the heat turned on us plenty tomorrow." You referred to the fine group of patriotic Democrats who joined what was practically a solid Republican bloc to insert the arms embargo amendment—let me urge you on the roll call which will come in a last effort to strike this provision from the bill not to forsake the fine patriotic convictions which you displayed here in this Hall last night for the uncertain rewards and the hollow praises of political cupidity. As I drove down to work this morning I was rejoicing to myself that as a Republican I could vote my individual and sincere convictions on neutrality today with no administrative whip over me and no party pressure prodding me to make one decision or another. As I was reflecting upon this in contrast with the confession made to me last night by my Democratic friend, I devised a little quatrain which I shall use in concluding these remarks.

It is no poetic gem, I assure you, but I wrote it down as it came to me as I believe it does express the facts in the situation as they apply to the Democrats in this House and I feel that the pertinency of its substance far exceeds the poetical quality of its sequence. I give it to you with the sincere hope that each of you on the majority side may vote your own convictions in this important matter and not permit party loyalty or partisan obedience to blind you to your duties to the peace-loving voters of your communities:

Who is this man beholden to
Who would impose his will on you?
For each of you must answer to
The people who elected you!

Good friends, if we will all vote the wishes of the people electing us to this high office, the Bloom bill will be amended to make it a war-preventive measure or it will be defeated as it should be in the interests of peace throughout the world.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the committee amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the committee amendment may again be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON) there were—ayes 49, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOLEY: On page 9, after line 14, add a new paragraph and a new section, as follows:

"CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES TO BE NOTIFIED OF THE PRESENCE OF ARMS, AMMUNITION, OR IMPLEMENTS OF WAR ON AMERICAN VESSELS UPON WHICH THEY ARE ABOUT TO TRAVEL

"SEC. 8. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), and until such proclamation has been revoked, the President or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall cause notice to be given to any citizen of the United States who may apply for transportation as a passenger upon any American vessel which is about to carry out of any port of the United States, arms, ammunition, or implements of war to a port, warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, that said ship has in its cargo arms, ammunition, or implements of war destined for a port, warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that substantially the same amendment was voted upon last night; that this is the reintroduction of matter which the Committee has already voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COOLEY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offered last night when the bill was being considered provided that citizens of the United States seeking passage on American or other neutral vessels leaving any American port which carried cargoes of arms, ammunition, munitions, or implements of war should be put on notice of that fact, and in addition thereto should be prohibited from traveling as passengers upon such vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina kindly point out to the Chair exactly the difference between the language of the pending amendment and the amendment offered last night?

Mr. COOLEY. As I was just saying the amendment offered last night dealt with two things: The first was notice to citizens who were about to embark upon American or neutral vessels of the presence of arms and implements of war in the cargo. It went further than that and provided also that no American citizen should be permitted to travel as a passenger upon any such American or other neutral vessel which was carrying in its bottom arms, ammunition, munitions, and implements of war.

The amendment I now offer provides only that upon the issuance of the proclamation contemplated in the authority of section 1 (a) and until such proclamation has been revoked, the President of the United States or some person thereunto authorized by him shall give notice to all citizens of the United States applying for transportation upon an American ship that the ship is carrying a cargo of arms and implements of war, if it does carry such cargo. The pending amendment deals only with notice to passengers who apply for transportation upon such ships, and does not in any way attempt to prohibit their traveling upon the ships after receiving said notice.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; I have, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair has rather hurriedly, but the Chair feels sufficiently, compared the language of the pending amendment with the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman last night mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] in stating the grounds of his point of order.

The Chair is of opinion that there is a difference in the provisions of the two amendments and, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds I would like to reach an agreement as to time.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close, in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, now that the House by the action just taken seems to have gone on record as favoring the policy of carrying bullets and babies, if I may again use that expression, upon the same ships, I am now asking the House in the name of humanity to insert a provision in this bill which will require the President of the United States, or some person by him designated, to put American citizens on notice of the presence of deadly weapons in the bottoms of American vessels before permitting them to ride upon such vessels.

I think no one will deny the fact that destruction of the lives of American citizens will be the one cause, and the only cause, which will carry this Nation into war. Last night I sought approval of a provision which would have prohibited American citizens traveling upon arsenals. I now ask this House how in the name of humanity can you be willing to permit innocent men, women, and children to walk upon a floating arsenal which is headed for a belligerent port, knowing that they have no way of ascertaining the nature of the cargo being carried in the bottom of the ship; knowing at the same time that in modern warfare the chances are that ships carrying arms, munitions, and implements of war headed for a belligerent port will be blown to pieces upon the high seas?

Yesterday the gentleman from New York suggested that such a requirement would involve a large personnel and tremendous cost. Every man in this body knows that no boat sails from an American port unless some American official is familiar with the kind of cargo it is carrying.

The customs officials or some other officials of the Federal Government must know when arms and ammunition are leaving the ports of this Nation. Having this information, I say it is nothing but rank brutality to withhold it from innocent people who walk on such a boat, carrying above its mast the American flag, which should be some guaranty of protection. All I am asking the Committee to do—and I address myself to the consciences of the Members of the House, their hearts, and their humanity—is to put this provision into the law and let our citizens who seek transportation upon our vessels know when they go upon those vessels that in the cargo there are deadly weapons of war, and that they might be blown to pieces as they sleep on their way across the sea.

I think the amendment is perfectly plain. I do not think any Member of the House or the Committee can go home tonight and say he did not understand the purpose of my amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. Chairman, the amendment the gentleman has offered, while it is not the same as the amendment offered last night, is so closely akin that it can hardly be distinguished except by very careful comparison. The gentleman, by the amendment seeks to impose another burden upon the President of the United States. I think we can all agree that the President has enough to do and, as a matter of fact, there has been a good deal of criticism about putting additional authority and discretion in the President, under this bill. The gentleman, by his amendment, proposes to have the President notify everybody who is going to travel upon a foreign vessel whenever there is ammunition upon that vessel, although they may have notice that it is dangerous to travel on that vessel.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman understand this amendment provides that the President shall give notice or any person designated by the President? Does not the gentleman know that customs officials know the nature of the cargoes leaving our ports and it would be a very small thing for the President to designate the customs officials to notify the passengers?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It reads:

The President or some person thereunto authorized by him.

It would mean that we are going to have a new agency set up in the form of a notification bureau.

Mr. COOLEY. I hope the gentleman understands the amendment.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I think I do. The amendment as it is framed does not contemplate what the gentleman says. It does not say that you shall have a customs official tell the passengers. It says: "The President or someone." Who is going to be the one? It says: "The President or someone thereunto authorized by him" shall give notice to people who are going to travel upon the vessels that those vessels are loaded with arms, ammunition, or implements of war that might cause trouble.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I do not yield.

Mr. Chairman, this subject having been exhaustively discussed when the gentleman offered his amendment last night—and I think he offered two amendments—it is not necessary to say anything further.

Some other amendments have been offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] and others. This subject was gone over very thoroughly last night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I regret I cannot yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have not castigated the committee.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I hope when the time comes to vote on this amendment, even those who have not always voted with me on amendments of this bill, even those who sit on the opposite side of the aisle, will vote with me in turning down this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 59, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: Page 9, line 14, insert:

"ARMING OF AMERICAN MERCHANT VESSELS PROHIBITED"

"SEC. 9. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful, until such proclamation is revoked, for any American vessel engaged in commerce with any belligerent state, named in such proclamation, to be armed, except small arms and ammunition therefor which the President may deem necessary and shall publicly designate for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that debate has expired on section 9 by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invites the attention of the gentleman to the fact that section 9 has been eliminated. This is a new section.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I thought the motion applied to all sections. In the interest of time I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment—the new section, or the old section 9, or anything else that pertains to that subject—be limited.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the majority members of the committee are not opposed to the prohibition against arming merchantmen as they are to having a prohibition on the carrying of arms?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am opposed to both features.

Mr. CORBETT. Maybe the gentleman will change his mind.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his request?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments pertaining to the arming of vessels be limited to 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is nothing more than section 9 with the arms embargo deleted from it. If this amendment is adopted, arming of American merchant vessels will be prohibited should there develop another general war in any part of the world.

Let me take you back to the period prior to our entry into the World War. You will recall German submarines were sinking American merchantmen carrying contraband of war as well as our citizens. President Wilson asked the Congress of the United States for authority to arm American merchantmen. On the other side of the Capitol the measure was filibustered. During that filibuster the President found he already possessed the authority to arm American merchantmen under existing law, and therefore gave permission to American merchantmen to arm themselves.

I can recall my introduction to an American armed merchantman prior to April 6, 1917, with an American flag painted on its side amidships as one form of protection. On its fore-castle, or the bow of the ship, it had mounted a 5-inch gun, with a similar one mounted on its stern. That ship and others so armed went to sea from New York to encounter German submarines and raiders. Many of you recall the S. S. Mongolia, the first American ship to engage a German submarine with exchange of shell fire. You will recall further in this engagement the first American, a member of the United States Navy gun crew manning the guns on the ship, was the first American to lose his life in the World War, even though at that time we had not yet entered the war.

Mr. Chairman, if American merchantmen are permitted to arm themselves, and should a war develop in central Europe as it may in the next few days or weeks, you can expect American armed merchantmen to be one of the contributing factors to drive our country into that war. This amendment simply gives to the American people another war preventive in the form of a real neutrality measure, and for that reason I ask the Committee to accept the amendment. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been discussed for the past three-quarters of an hour. For that length of time we have discussed section 9, which contains the very provision the gentleman is asking us to adopt now. That provision was stricken out by a vote of this Committee. This amendment is only one of numerous amendments being offered to this bill which, if adopted, would have the result of continuing to shackle American ships and American seamen and deprive American sailors and citizens of the rights they have under the law. This amendment is not satisfactory to the Committee and I do not believe it would be satisfactory to the American people. We ask that it be voted down.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Did not the gentleman stand here in the Well of the House and make the statement that if the words I have deleted were deleted from that section it would be acceptable to the Committee?

Mr. KEE. Oh, no. I said if it was the will of the Committee to make that change, it could be made in the manner I suggested, and they would thus accomplish the purpose the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] had in mind when he offered the original amendment. I have been opposed to the amendment consistently and all the time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VAN ZANDT), there were—ayes 52, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MUNITIONS CONTROL BOARD

SEC. 9. (a) There is hereby established a National Munitions Control Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"). The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce. Except as otherwise provided in this joint resolution, or by other law, the administration of this joint resolution is vested in the Department of State. The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions. The Board shall be convened by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

(b) Every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

(c) Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, or implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $100. Upon receipt of the required registration fee, the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment for each renewal of a fee of $100.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States to any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, without first having obtained a license therefor.

(e) All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Secretary of State, or any person or persons designated by him, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Secretary of State shall prescribe.

(f) Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as herein provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this joint resolution or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

(g) No purchase of arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this joint resolution.

(h) The provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the sale of ordnance and stores to the Government of Cuba (39 Stat. 619, 643; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 50, sec. 72), are hereby repealed as of December 31, 1937.

(i) The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. The Board shall include in such reports a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this joint resolution, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder: Provided, That if the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), the Board shall thereupon make public an immediate report containing all the information herein provided, and shall make public a similar report each 90 days thereafter so long as such proclamation shall be in force.

(j) The President is hereby authorized to proclaim upon recommendation of the Board from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 10, line 2, strike out "9" and insert "10."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be rejected because section 9 has been stricken from the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, line 19, after the word "therefor" insert "In the application for license the applicant shall set forth a description of such exports, together with the terms of sale as to credit or payment."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO to the committee amendment: On page 11, line 20, after the words "such exports" insert "or imports."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section. It has nothing whatever to do with the exportation of arms. We do not import arms. The National Munitions Control Board has nothing whatever to do with the importation of arms. The amendment, therefore, is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COSTELLO. I would like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Paragraph (d) refers to exportation, and in the second part it states "or to import, or attempt to import to the United States." This is line 15 of section (d) on page 11.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman. If the amendment is germane, I believe it is all right.

Mr. COSTELLO. The purpose of offering the amendment was merely to clarify the committee amendment so that it would include both exports and imports.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 4, after the word "hereunder" insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That, if the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), the Board shall thereupon make public an immediate report containing all the information herein provided, and shall make public a similar report each 90 days thereafter so long as such proclamation shall be in force."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REGULATIONS

SEC. 10. The President may, from time to time, promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this joint resolution; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this joint resolution through such officer or officers, or agency or agencies, as he shall direct.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 13, line 15, strike out "10" and insert "11."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL PENALTY PROVISION

SEC. 11. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this joint resolution or of any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereto where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 13, line 23, strike out "11" and insert "12."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 12. For the purposes of this joint resolution—

(a) The term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "person" includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

(c) The term "vessel" means every description of watercraft (including aircraft) or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on, under, or over water.

(d) The term "state" shall include nation, government, and country.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 14, line 5, strike out "12" and insert "13."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 13. If any of the provisions of this joint resolution, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the joint resolution, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 14, line 20, strike out "13" and insert "14."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 14. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 15, line 2, strike out "14" and insert "15."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPEAL OF ACTS OF 1935, 1936, 1937

SEC. 15. The act of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), as amended by the act of February 29, 1936 (Public Res. No. 74, 74th Cong.), and the act of May 1, 1937 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), and the act of January 8, 1937 (Public Res. No. 1, 75th Cong.), are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 15, line 8, strike out "15" and insert "16."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, after line 14, insert: "Provided, That such repeal shall not affect the validity of the Proclamation No. 2237 of May 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 1834), defining the term 'arms, ammunition, and implements of war' or of certificates of registration or licenses issued pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the act of May 1, 1937."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 306

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1939

Substitute offered by Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"PROCLAMATION OF A STATE OF WAR BETWEEN FOREIGN STATES

"SECTION 1. (a) That whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between foreign states, and that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, the President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved; and he shall, from time to time, by proclamation, name other states as and when they may become involved in the war.

"(b) Whenever the conditions which have caused the President to issue any proclamation under the authority of this section have ceased to exist, he shall revoke the same.

"TRAVEL ON VESSELS OF BELLIGERENT STATES

"SEC. 2. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), no citizen of the United States shall travel, except at his own risk, on any vessel of the state or states named in such proclamation, unless in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

"FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS AND TRANSFER OF TITLE

"SEC. 3. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any state named in such proclamation, or of any political subdivision of any such state, or of any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government, political subdivision, or person.

"(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to a renewal or adjustment of such indebtedness as may exist on the date of the President's proclamation.

"(c) Whoever shall violate the provisions of subsection (a) of this section or of any regulations issued thereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both. Should the violation be by a corporation, organization, or association, each officer or agent thereof participating in the violation may be liable to the penalty herein prescribed.

"(d) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful, except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, to export or transport, or attempt to export or transport, or cause to be exported or transported, from the United States directly or indirectly to any state named in the proclamation, any articles or materials until all right, title, and interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national. The shipper of such articles or materials shall be required to file with the collector of the port from which they are to be exported a declaration under oath that there exists in citizens of the United States no right, title, or interest in such articles or materials, and to comply with such rules and regulations as shall be promulgated from time to time by the President. Any such declaration so filed shall be a conclusive estoppel against any claim of any citizen of the United States of right, title, or interest in such articles or materials. Insurance written by underwriters on such articles or materials shall not be deemed an American interest therein, and no insurance policy issued on such articles or materials, and no loss incurred thereunder, shall be made the basis of any claim put forward by the Government of the United States. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to trade on or over lands, lakes, rivers, and inland waters bordering on the United States.

"(e) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the state or states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

"SOLICITATION AND COLLECTION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 4. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), it shall thereafter be unlawful for any person within the United States to solicit or receive any contribution for or on behalf of the government of any state named in the proclamation, or of any association, organization, or person acting for or on behalf of such government. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the solicitation or collection of contributions to be used for medical aid and assistance, or for food and clothing to relieve human suffering, when such solicitation or collection of contributions is made on behalf of and for use by any person or organization which is not acting for or on behalf or in aid of any such government, but all such solicitations and collections of contributions shall be subject to the approval of the President and shall be made under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe.

"(b) Whenever the President shall have revoked any proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 (a), the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply with respect to the states named in such proclamation, except with respect to offenses committed prior to such revocation.

"AMERICAN REPUBLICS

"SEC. 5. The foregoing provisions of this joint resolution shall not apply to any American republic.

"USE OF AMERICAN PORTS AS BASE OF SUPPLY

"SEC. 6. (a) Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, fuel, men, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217, 221; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security or neutrality of the United States, he shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or any part of the cargo, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state.

"(b) If the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, has previously cleared from a port of the United States during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

"SUBMARINES AND ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS

"SEC. 7. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state of the ports and territorial waters of the United States will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States, and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine or armed merchant vessel to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. Whenever, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

"NATIONAL MUNITIONS CONTROL BOARD

"SEC. 8. (a) There is hereby established a National Munitions Control Board (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'). The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce. Except as otherwise provided in this joint resolution, or by other law, the administration of this joint resolution is vested in the Department of State. The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions. The Board shall be convened by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

"(b) Every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

"(c) Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, or implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $100. Upon receipt of the required registration fee, the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment for each renewal of a fee of $100.

"(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States to any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this joint resolution, without first having obtained a license therefor. In the application for license the applicant shall set forth a description of such exports together with the terms of sale as to credit or payment.

"(e) All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Secretary of State, or any person or persons designated by him, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Secretary of State shall prescribe.

"(f) Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as herein provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this joint resolution or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

"(g) No purchase of arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this joint resolution.

"(h) The provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the sale of ordnance and stores to the Government of Cuba (39 Stat. 619, 643; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 50, sec. 72), are hereby repealed as of December 31, 1937.

"(i) The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. The Board shall include in such reports a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this joint resolution, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder: Provided, That, if the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a), the Board shall thereupon make public an immediate report containing all the information herein provided, and shall make public a similar report each 90 days thereafter so long as such proclamation shall be in force.

"(j) The President is hereby authorized to proclaim upon recommendation of the Board from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

"REGULATIONS

"Sec. 9. The President may, from time to time, promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this joint resolution; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this joint resolution through such officer or officers, or agency or agencies, as he shall direct.

"GENERAL PENALTY PROVISION

"Sec. 10. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this joint resolution or of any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereto where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"DEFINITIONS

"Sec. 11. For the purposes of this joint resolution—

"(a) The term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia.

"(b) The term 'person' includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

"(c) The term 'vessel' means every description of watercraft (including aircraft) or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on, under, or over water.

"(d) The term 'state' shall include nation, government, and country.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"Sec. 12. If any of the provisions of this joint resolution, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the joint resolution, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"Sec. 13. All rules, regulations, proclamations, and orders made in pursuance of this act shall be in accordance with the principles and precedents of international law and the supreme law of the land.

"APPROPRIATIONS

"Sec. 14. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this joint resolution.

"REPEAL OF ACTS OF 1935, 1936, 1937

"Sec. 15. The act of August 31, 1935 (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), as amended by the act of February 29, 1936 (Public Res. No. 74, 74th Cong.), and the act of May 1, 1937 (Public Res. No. 27, 75th Cong.), and the act of January 8, 1937 (Public Res. No. 1, 75th Cong.), are hereby repealed: Provided, That such repeal shall not affect the validity of the Proclamation No. 2237 of May 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 1834), defining the term 'arms, ammunition, and implements of war' or of certificates of registration or licenses issued pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the act of May 1, 1937."

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may explain what the substitute amendment contains and save the reading of the amendment.

Mr. FISH. I have no objection, but, of course, I shall reserve all points of order.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute may be considered as read and be printed in the Record.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to reserve all points of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have that right.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question for information. Is this a substitute for the entire bill?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes; I will explain the substitute. This request is made simply to save the manual reading of the amendment by the Clerk.

Mr. FISH. Perhaps I should make the point of order now and get it out of the way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] desire to make a point of order?

Mr. FISH. I desire to make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered as a substitute to the bill an entirely new bill which no one has seen or discussed. No member of the minority has even had the advantage of knowing what is in it. It is an entirely new bill. It takes out the Vorys arms-embargo amendment put in by the Committee itself. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it violates the fundamental principles of representative government, that form of government which is now so under attack throughout the world today.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I do.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman stated that the matter is something which the committee has not considered and discussed. Everything in it has been discussed during general debate and under the rule. There is nothing added to it. There are subtractions rather than additions. So it has been discussed.

Mr. FISH. Of course, but we are not mind readers. No one on the minority side has even seen the new bill.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. It might be best for me to state what the substitute is.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman will have that opportunity in a moment, as soon as I have made my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the grounds for his point of order.

Mr. FISH. I state, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered an entirely new bill after the conclusion of the consideration of the bill before the committee and that this practice undoes everything the committee has already done. We have been discussing this bill for 20 hours on the floor and for months in the Foreign Affairs Committee. I submit, irrespective of any previous rulings and precedents, that this action literally destroys representative government. [Applause.] No one can deny that, Mr. Chairman, because the committee has acted upon this bill. It has put in certain amendments after due consideration. Those amendments are taken out, as I understand the parliamentary situation, by the substitute or the entirely new bill offered now by the gentleman from Texas.

Before the Chair rules I want to make a plea for the preservation of representative government because I understand the rules and I understand the precedents that he may be guided by, but, Mr. Chairman, is there not something that is bigger than precedents when the issue may be the perpetuation of popular government and our free institutions?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order, but he has gotten rather far afield. I think his argument probably might not be germane and would not be relevant if he knew what the substitute was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. FISH. I am asking a little latitude, I admit, Mr. Chairman. I waived the reading of the substitute bill, which would probably have occupied half an hour, in order to save time and expedite a vote on the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the embarrassment of the Chair. The Chair may feel that he must be guided by certain precedents that have been rarely used in the House of Representatives, but, after all, this may be the last representative body in the world. We may be Members of the last Congress in any republic in the world, and if we are to undermine representative government, such as the ruling of the Chair may well do, it will support everything that has been said by Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin, that democracy has failed, and that representative government has failed in America and all over the world.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is not discussing the point of order. He is getting pretty far afield when he gets into Germany, Italy, and Russia. I respectfully request that the gentleman discuss the point of order.

Mr. FISH. That is just where you are taking us, into Germany, Italy, and Russia.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I have not seen the substitute. I have not read it. I know, as a matter of fact, practically nothing about the original bill, but I think if the gentleman has a point of order it would be upon the idea that this substitute eliminates amendments which have been adopted in the committee.

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. MAY. And the only way by which those amendments can be gotten rid of, under the rules of the House, is by a vote when we go back into the House?

Mr. FISH. Yes. Mr. Chairman, this is a very unusual procedure. It is one of the most unprecedented procedures that the House of Representatives has dealt with in many years. I think in the 20 years I have been here it has been invoked once or twice only, but not on such a vital issue as this—war or peace—affecting the lives of millions of Americans. If the Chair rules in accordance with the precedents which I am afraid he will be forced to do, it will mean that the Vorys amendment, put in by the will of the Committee, will be taken out of this bill, without the possibility of a vote by the members themselves in the Committee. Now, if the Committee wants that done I have no complaint. If that is the will of the majority, I have no complaint, but I think it is hardly fair to force the Chair to abide by some old precedents and thereby deprive the members of the Committee from voting on the Vorys amendment which you yourselves have adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is this not just an ingenious way of avoiding a record vote on the Vorys amendment?

Mr. FISH. The majority side is afraid of a direct vote on the Vorys amendment, and this is a device to avoid it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is exactly what I meant.

The CHAIRMAN. This is all within the discretion of the Chair. The Chair regrets to have to invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is not helping the Chair in the consideration of the point of order.

Mr. FISH. I will conclude in just 1 minute, Mr. Chairman. Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman from New York contend that under the rule and under the precedents a substitute offered after the reading of the bill is not in order?

Mr. FISH. I do not.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman does not contend that.

Mr. FISH. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. FISH. I do not. Mr. Chairman. Let me say this, I know of no fairer presiding officer than the gentleman himself. [Applause.] The gentleman has been absolutely fair in the consideration of the bill before us in the last 20 hours. He has been one of the best presiding officers I have ever known, because he has actually leaned over backward to be fair, and I regret that the gentleman is forced on this momentous occasion to comply with the precedents of the House and literally permit, through a most unusual and unfair device, the disfranchising of Members of Congress who voted for the Vorys arms embargo. This deplorable procedure will strike out the Vorys amendment without any vote being permitted on it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCORMACK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order and then will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the House when an amendment is adopted, a motion to strike out that amendment is not in order. That is the general rule. Several amendments have been adopted to this bill by the Committee. Aside from these amendments, as I understand, this substitute is identical with the bill that has been before the House; consequently, the only effect of this substitute is to strike out the amendments, something which cannot be done directly. This substitute inserting every word of the other part of the bill strikes out the amendments that have already been adopted.

It seems to me that the principles of our parliamentary procedure is so fixed and so certain that this substitute cannot strike out the amendments that have already been adopted.

I think the substitute is not in order and that the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I want at the outset to call the attention of the Chair discussing the point of order to the fact that the substitute amendment that has been offered is not the same as the bill as adopted by the Committee of the Whole up to the present time. I invite the Chair's attention to one change on page 4 of the pending bill, Section 4, the proviso starting in line 8 and ending in line 18 is eliminated in the substitute amendment, that is the language of the present bill which relates to the 90-day credit. There are other changes.

We have heard the gentleman from New York talk about "the destruction of representative government" because of this particular motion being made. Nobody takes any stock in that statement because it is pure propaganda; but if it were otherwise it started with pretty good authority on the Republican side of the House. From Cannon's Precedents, volume 8, paragraph 2904, I read the following:

Substitutes for an entire bill may be offered following the reading of the first paragraph or at the conclusion of the reading of the entire bill.

A substitute offered after the reading of a bill has been concluded is in order regardless of whether it includes language stricken from the bill or inserted in the bill when read for amendment.

What are the facts? Destruction of American Government on a point of order.

On June 28, 1922, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (S. 3425) to continue certain land offices.

During the reading of the bill for amendment various modifications were agreed to, some striking out language and others inserting provisions as new paragraphs.

The reading of the bill having been concluded, Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois—

Republican leader at that time and a great parliamentarian—offered a substitute for the entire bill which in effect proposed the original bill with modifications changing amendments previously agreed to.

Mr. Louis C. Cramton, of Michigan, made the point of order that the substitute was in contravention of action already taken by the committee.

The chairman, Horace M. Towner, of Iowa, and certainly he was not a Democrat, an outstanding parliamentarian also, held:

There are two methods by which substitutes for the entire bill may be offered. The first is to offer, after the first paragraph has been read, a substitute for the entire bill, with the notice that with regard to the succeeding sections of the bill, as they are read, a motion will be made to strike them out. That method has been used in a good many instances. In that case gentlemen will notice that, of course, there is no opportunity for amending any subsequent section of the bill, provided the substitute is agreed to.

The other method is to offer the substitute for the entire bill at the conclusion of the reading of the entire bill, as was done in this instance by the gentleman from Illinois. Of course, in that case all of the amendments that have been adopted by the committee, whatever they may be, are stricken out if the substitute is adopted. If the substitute contains, in effect or in actual language, some of the amendments that are already agreed to, that does not deprive the mover of the substitute of the consideration of his substitute. That applies practically to the case that we have before us, in the opinion of the Chair. No matter what the effect of this substitute may be, it is the right of the Committee to vote down or to support the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. The point of order is therefore overruled.

A more recent authority in my own time—I remember in my early years here a census bill—is found in paragraph 2905 of volume 8 of Cannon's Precedents, and the decision in that case occurred within the time of service of the gentleman from New York. Nobody on the Democratic side charged at that time that the motion made by the Republicans would result in the destruction of representative government. I read:

On June 6, 1929, the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (S. 312) to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress.

At the close of the reading of section 22 of the bill, and after two amendments to the section had been adopted, Mr. John Q. Tilson, of Connecticut—

Republican floor leader at that time—offered as a substitute for section 22 an amendment practically identical with the original section, with minor modifications, but omitting the two amendments just agreed to.

The chairman in that case was the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Chindblom, who happened to visit the House this afternoon. Mr. Chindblom was an outstanding parliamentarian.

Chairman Chindblom, on June 6, 1929, considering this case, cited the authority of the Towner ruling of June 28, 1922, overruled the point of order and sustained the motion.

Mr. Chairman, the precedents are absolutely in support of this substitute being in order. The hysterical argument about violation of representative government has no place in the point of order, and has no place in this matter at all. I do not contend when those motions were made in the past by distinguished Republicans of bygone days that they were employing any other than proper parliamentary tactics, and I did not charge that they were endeavoring to destroy representative government. No such charge can properly be advanced on this occasion. The precedents are clearly in support of the substitute amendment offered, and I respectively contend that the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Texas offered a substitute to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending resolution and insert a new provision.

The gentleman from New York made a point of order against the substitute.

The Chair has been pleased to hear the argument presented in support of the point of order by the gentleman from New York and the argument advanced in opposition to the point of order by the gentleman from Massachusetts. While the Chair has been interested in the observations made by the gentleman from New York with respect to parliamentary procedure in popular government, and so forth, the Chair has not been convinced by that type of argument and certainly it is not in line with the decisions rendered by most eminent chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and Speakers of the House as shown by the precedents.

The Chair has examined the decisions referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and is of the opinion that these decisions are directly in point with the situation now presented by the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. The present occupant of the Chair happens to have been a Member at the time the second point of order referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts was made on June 6, 1929, and has a personal recollection of the situation existing at that time. That situation, as well as the one contained in the first decision cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts, are both directly in point with the situation now presented on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

The Chair feels, of course, that he is bound by the precedents of the House of Representatives and the decisions heretofore rendered, and upon the ground included in the decision cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chair is definitely of the opinion that the amendment offered here, if germane to the pending resolution, is clearly in order. No question has been raised with reference to the germaneness of the amendment. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that the amendment is in order and overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As the matter now stands, as I understand it, the substitute is subject to amendments so long as you do not violate the third-degree amendment principle? That is, the resolution or substitute as it now stands might be amended twice?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. It is subject to all amendments provided and authorized by rule XIX of the House.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RABAUT. The substitute that has been placed here has been brought before us with surprise. Is it in printed form? Is it numbered so that it may be amended? What form is the substitute in?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is at the Clerk's desk, and, of course, may be examined by any Member interested who desires to do so.

Mr. RABAUT. Is it going to be read?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the reading of it has been dispensed with.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it would be possible now to agree on some time for debate on this substitute?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I am ready to agree on time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am wondering if 30 minutes would be satisfactory?

Mr. FISH. That would be ample. I am going to ask, however, that the time be equally divided by the Chair, although I rely on the Chair to divide it.

Mr. RAYBURN. We can leave it to the Chair, I am sure.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this substitute and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, the time to be allotted in the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this substitute and all amendments thereto close in not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this substitute and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. May I inquire whether there is any way in which we can have this bill in its amended form read to the Members of the Committee so that we may understand clearly what we are expected to vote on?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the reading of the substitute was dispensed with.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We are asked after 30 minutes of discussion to pass the neutrality bill and throw the so-called Bloom bill out of the window. Where can we obtain a copy of the new so-called neutrality bill?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a copy of the pending amendment at the Clerk's desk, where it may be examined by any Member interested and desiring to examine it.

Under the limitation of time heretofore fixed by the Committee, there will be 20 minutes of debate on each side.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS], a member of the committee for 3 minutes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, when I was in the Ohio Legislature we had an institution called the duck pond, where members could duck when they did not want to take the rap. That is what you have got here in this substitute—a duck pond where you think you can duck without taking the rap on standing up and being counted when your name is called on whether you want to send means of murder overseas. [Applause.]

Before I came here I read of how your great leader sent a bill down here and had it read at the desk and nobody saw it, and gave you orders to put it through.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I refuse to yield.

And a lot of those people who rubber-stamped messages sent down Pennsylvania Avenue, are not here any more.

Do not forget, though, you are going to get a chance to stand up and vote on whether you want to help one side or the other or to stay neutral; to vote whether you want to go back on this American principle that you voted for, of not sending means of murder to those who are murdering each other, or whether you want to stand by what you voted for only yesterday before they turned the heat on. Think of this and remember when you vote on this question that you are voting on just one thing.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I refuse to yield.

The rest of this is simply camouflage. You are voting on a polite way to get around the question of an arms embargo. An arms embargo does not tie any President's hands. It ties the hands of munitions makers in this country. There is nothing in the arms embargo about the President. It simply imposes limitations that experience has shown, experience that you men know about, gets us into war.

If you want to stay out of war vote down this last-minute substitute. If you want to give the President the chance to take that desperate gamble of throwing our weight into the balance of power in Europe, then vote for this pending amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DEMPSEY). The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I take this time simply to reiterate the questions which I asked the chairman of the neutrality committee some 45 minutes ago, three definite questions which are just as significant to the American public under this substitute bill as they were under the former bill.

First, how do you expect to contribute to the peace or the neutrality of the world without an arms embargo which limits the United States from selling the implements of war to foreign countries?

This is a fair question and it seems to me is entitled to an honest answer, not to me, but to the mothers of America whose sons' lives depend upon our judgment in making this decision tonight.

The second question is, How do you expect to contribute to the peace or the neutrality of the world unless we restrict American citizens from sailing on ships which are carrying munitions; unless we restrict the ships themselves from carrying those munitions and also passengers on the same boats?

The third question is, How do you expect to contribute to the peace of the world or to neutrality, if we permit American industry to sell arms, ammunition, and implements of war to the belligerents of the world, unless this is to go down in history, I repeat, as the Bloom Internal Revenue Act for War Profiteers? If it is to become, in all sincerity, the Bloom International Neutrality Act, we must rewrite it so as to permit honest and hopeful answers to the direct and determined questions which I have two times asked, and which have two times been answered only by an eloquent and expressive silence.

From the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] the country awaits honest answers to these questions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, it is rather gratifying to come from this side of the House and advocate something which does not belong to the Dark Ages. We were charged some time ago with belonging to the "horse and buggy" age. Now, we come here with a proposition which has received the overwhelming sanction of this Congress within recent years and of most of the membership except the 75 Members who did not return from the last Congress. Not one of those Members was defeated because of the stand he took upon this measure—I think I can vouch for that from what I saw on the hustings—a measure which has been designed to keep us out of war, which has been sold to the country upon that basis. I challenge anyone to read out of any of the debates during the 5 years this measure has been here to show that that has not been the major motive animating those who have sponsored this legislation, until the last time only one Member dissented in our vote for an arms embargo, and that was the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Bernard, who has not returned here this year.

Now we are suddenly told by some mysterious influence that this new idea is all wrong; that we should go back to international law. International law did not keep us out of the last war. There is no reason to think it will keep us out of the next one. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] has repeatedly asked how are we led down the road to war under international law. He has repeatedly said that no one has shown any way in which that has come to pass. We all know the past. We all know how the munition makers pour out hundreds of millions of dollars of munitions for which the people of Europe cannot possibly pay. We know how our country is transformed to a war economy. This does not prevent the shipment of food. This does not prevent the shipment of raw materials. It simply says we shall not become the munitions makers of the world.

It still gives to any Nation who can come to our shores all the food and clothing they may desire, or for which they can pay, but it does mean when war is over we are not dislocated from our peace economy, and can more quickly recover the things that we desire.

Meanwhile, there always around the corner lurks the insidious influence of those who profit out of war. They seek fool's gold. Let us place in the balance the youth of the United States. They are not privileged to be heard here tonight, and yet their lives may be the forfeit if we make a mistake.

An invisible army watches us tonight—the mothers of America. They gave 50,000 boys on the altar of the last war. Let us ponder well that we shall take no step calculated to send 50,000 more American boys down the path to the grave that opened to receive their brothers 20 years ago.

Let us sell food and clothing. Let us embargo arms. Against such there is no law. No international law requires us to sell munitions to the nations overseas. So certainly as we take that course, so certainly we shall be opening wide the door that once before led America into the holocaust of war. Let everyone, as he casts his vote, have the mothers of America ever present in his mind. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Chairman to now recognize some speakers on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, for 4 days we have been considering and debating this resolution, fraught with interest to the American people, and the passage or defeat of which may affect the peace of the world, and now, within 30 minutes, we shall be called to vote upon it.

So important do I regard it, and so anxious am I to secure its passage that I have, with the concurrence and approval of the Democratic members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, offered the substitute now pending and which will be first voted upon.

The substitute does not differ materially from the resolution as reported to the House, except in one or two minor particulars, and these changes have been made to meet the objections of some of those who have opposed it, in the hope that by so doing the resolution may have their support.

Republican Members, instead of being appeased, seem to have become angered that the substitute has been offered. Their action is in keeping with the bitter political opposition they have waged against this measure, both before it was reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee and during its consideration in the House.

It is unthinkable that partisan politics should be injected into an issue like this, and I am glad that two of the Republican members of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEARNS], have risen above party politics, and have cooperated with the Democratic members on this resolution, designed to keep our country out of war and to discourage the outbreak of another world war.

The pending substitute offered by me, instead of making the opponents of the resolution mad, should palliate some of the so-called conscientious scruples upon which they have claimed their opposition was based, but the bitterness of their opposition is such that they will not even concede this.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VOYTS] who is my friend, even if we do belong to different political parties, when he spoke a few moments ago, was so enraged, or was playing the role of being so angered that he refused to yield to me or anyone else. He should be pleased by that provision of the substitute which limits the power of the President with reference to credits. The substitute eliminates that portion of section 4, giving the President power to grant short-time loans or credits. It does not, however, affect the remainder of section 3, by which credit is denied to warring nations, and by which governments at war are forbidden from selling their bonds either to our Government or to our nationals, and my substitute still leaves an inhibition against our country or our people extending loans or credits or financing in any way foreign wars.

With the exception of section 9, which is eliminated, all other provisions of the resolution are not changed from the resolution as reported.

The substitute retains the provision prohibiting American citizens from traveling upon vessels of belligerent nations, except at their own risk; also requires a transfer of title of all goods shipped from this country to foreign consignees before the same leave our shores, and also makes it unlawful for collections or contributions to be solicited from American citizens in behalf of either belligerent nation at war. These features are all designed to prevent the happening of incidents which might involve us in a foreign war. Our involvement in such controversies is more likely to arise from the destruction of American lives or the destruction and confiscation of American property upon the high seas, and these provisions will make less likely the happening of such events and thereby minimize the chance of our involvement in wars between other countries.

With reference to the arms embargo, I think my position on that has been made clear in the several speeches which I have made during the debate upon this resolution. I am in favor of the repeal of the arms embargo for five distinct reasons:

First, because the testimony before our committee disclosed that it has been most difficult to enforce it, even in two minor wars of Albania and the Spanish civil war. It would be exceedingly more difficult to enforce in a conflict between major powers.

Second, because the arms embargo does not prevent or tend to prevent our involvement in foreign wars. In all the debate on this resolution no one has pointed out wherein this statement is not correct.

Third, because arms embargo, under conditions as they now exist, is in violation of international law and is therefore an unneutral act. I think before war breaks out we should conform to international law with reference to such an embargo, so that it cannot be claimed that our law is unneutral.

Fourth, because I can conceive of a situation after war breaks out where the American people may want the arms embargo repealed, and if we are going to repeal it afterward, or if there is any likelihood of it, let us repeal it before war breaks out. I am in favor of it for the fifth and last reason, and that is the principal reason that appeals to me. I believe that the repeal of the arms embargo now will have a tendency to help prevent the outbreak of war in Europe. The best insurance for peace in America is peace in Europe. Repeal of the arms embargo is the one effective contribution that we can make at this time to insure world peace.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is this not significant, that each member of this committee should bear in mind that William R. Castle, Assistant Secretary of State under three Republican administrations, Henry L. Stimson, and now Cordell Hull, our own Secretary of State, have all declared that if this arms embargo remains in the act, it is an inducement for the aggressor nations to continue their aggressions and thereby provoke war?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman is exactly right. Three Secretaries of State have so held, and I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy, which I will not have time to read, but which states that after consideration by the Navy Department, that Department feels that an arms embargo is undesirable, and is calculated to get us into war.

Many witnesses, both Government officials, our diplomatic representatives and others all testified before our committee that the repeal of the arms embargo at this time would be the most constructive and helpful thing that could be done to prevent the outbreak of war.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman kindly tell me why we should have an arms embargo in time of a war in which we are not involved that would prevent neutrals that love their freedom, nations like Norway, Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Belgium, and Holland from coming over here to get arms, ammunition, and implements of war to protect their own independence?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. That is right. The smaller democracies would be at the mercy of the aggressor nations. I trust that once again we shall go back to the time-honored principle we have followed since the days of George Washington.

As our able Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, than whom there is no one more anxious to preserve peace, stated in his letter of May 27, if embargoes are to be invoked at all, they should be upon all commodities. Let me quote from that portion of his letter and other portions of his letter upon this subject.

If we go in for embargoes on exports, for the purpose of keeping ourselves out of war, the logical thing to do would be to make our embargo all-inclusive. Modern warfare is no longer warfare between armed forces only, it is warfare between nations in every phase of their national life. Lists of contraband are no longer limited to arms and ammunition and closely related commodities. They include not only those items which contribute toward making warfare possible, but almost every item useful in the life of the enemy nation. A nation at war is no less anxious to keep cotton or petroleum, or, indeed, any useful product, from reaching an enemy nation than it is to keep guns and airplanes from reaching the enemy's armed forces. I doubt whether we can help ourselves to keep out of war by an attempt on our part to distinguish between categories of exports. Yet a complete embargo upon all exports would obviously be ruinous to our economic life. It therefore seems clear that we should have no general and automatic embargo inflexibly and rigidly imposed on any class or group of exports.

Our conclusion that embargo on export of arms is undesirable is not new, and experience has confirmed our belief.

On August 31, 1935, on the occasion of his signing the Neutrality Act of 1935, the President made the following statement:

"The latter section (providing for an embargo of export of arms) terminates at the end of February 1936. This section requires further and more complete consideration between now and that date. Here again the objective is wholly good. It is the policy of this Government to avoid being drawn into wars between other nations, but it is a fact that no Congress and no Executive can foresee all possible future situations. History is filled with unforeseeable situations that call for some flexibility of action. It is conceivable that situations may arise in which the wholly inflexible provisions of section I of this act might have exactly the opposite effect from that which was intended. In other words, the inflexible provisions might drag us into war instead of keeping us out. The policy of the Government is definitely committed to the maintenance of peace and the avoidance of any entanglements which would lead us into conflict. At the same time it is the policy of the Government by every peaceful means and without entanglement to cooperate with other similarly minded governments to promote peace."

On November 6, 1935, I made the following statement with respect to neutrality legislation:

"Any discussion of the avoidance of war, or of the observance of neutrality in the event of war, would be wholly incomplete if too much stress were laid on the part played in the one or the other by the shipment, or the embargoing of the shipment, of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. * * * To assume that by placing an embargo on arms we are making ourselves secure from dangers of conflict with belligerent countries is to close our eyes to manifold dangers in other directions. * * * We cannot assume that when provision has been made to stop the shipment of arms, which as absolute contraband have always been regarded as subject to seizure by a belligerent, we may complacently sit back with the feeling that we are secure from all danger."

Our involvement in controversies is more likely to arise from destruction of American lives. In this regard we can effectively diminish our risks by keeping our nationals and ships out of areas in which there is special danger. The rights of our nations under international law may properly be restricted by our own legislation along certain lines for the purpose of avoiding incidents which might involve us in a conflict. In indicating certain restrictions upon the exercise of our rights as a neutral I do not wish to be considered as advocating the abandonment of these, or indeed, of any, neutral rights; but there is reasonable ground for restricting at this time the exercise of these rights.

For the reasons heretofore stated, it is my firm conviction that the arms-embargo provision of the existing law should be eliminated. I furthermore believe that the most effective legislative contribution at this time toward keeping this country out of war, if war occurs, would be made by enacting or reenacting provisions on lines as follows:

To prohibit American ships, irrespective of what they may be carrying, from entering combat areas;

To restrict travel by American citizens in combat areas;

To provide that the export of goods destined for belligerents shall be preceded by transfer of title to the foreign purchaser;

To continue the existing legislation respecting loans and credits to nations at war;

To regulate the solicitation and collection in this country of funds for belligerents;

To continue the National Munitions Control Board and the system of arms export and import licenses.

Provisions on the suggested lines would, I think, help to keep this country out of war and facilitate our adherence to a position of neutrality. They would make easier our twofold task of keeping this country at peace and avoiding imposition of unnecessary and abnormal burdens upon our citizens.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

The pending substitute substantially meets the suggestions of Secretary Hull, including the repeal of the arms embargo.

Let no one contend that repeal of the arms embargo will inure to the advantage of the munition makers in this country, for, if the repeal is effected, I have assurance from a high source that such a heavy tax will be placed on the profits of munition makers that there would be no profiteering and no advantage from the sale thereof.

Failure to repeal the arms embargo will cause rejoicing in the capitals of the dictator nations and will encourage the dictators to commit further acts of aggression upon the democratic nations, and may mean the outbreak of another world war.

There is no one who hates war more than I, and I would not knowingly vote for any legislation that would in the slightest degree tend to encourage or cause our involvement in war, but, speaking from the depths of my heart, after having given long and serious consideration to this most important matter at this critical hour, I believe with all my heart that the passage of this resolution at this time is the most constructive effort toward world peace, and certainly the most effective means of preventing our involvement in any foreign war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, we have reached the point in our deliberations where we have separated the babies from the bullets, we have not called out the firing squad, and we are right down to the one important issue of whether we are going to continue to furnish arms and munitions of war to murder innocent people with whom we are at peace. That is the sole remaining issue.

Throughout this debate no Member of this House has come on this floor and said that the selling of arms and munitions of war between 1914 and 1917 was not an important factor in our becoming involved in the World War.

Yesterday I listened to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON], describe what would happen in case of another war. He said that the war would be brought into the homes of every American that had a radio. I could almost hear the steeples of the cathedrals of Europe crashing. He described the screams of women and children, and said the American people would demand the lifting of any embargo. Perhaps they would, but let them decide that when the occasion arises. The thing that concerns me today is that as the American people listen to the screams of the women and children who are being bombed from the air, the radio may not announce that these bombs were made in America. [Applause.]

It has been claimed, and undoubtedly rightly so, that we manufacture in the United States the most poisonous gas manufactured in the world. It would surely be considered a munition of war and without an arms embargo would be shipped from the United States. I had occasion to be in a hospital not far from the front during the first battle of the Argonne and I saw American men, some of them brothers, some of them now possibly Members of this House, coming in, their eyelids burned, their bodies burned from what was then the most torturous gas known, but that gas was as nothing compared to what we manufacture now. I cannot believe that the Members of Congress are more interested in protecting the profits of the manufacturers of poisonous gas than they are in protecting the prospective victims of gas in the next war, whether they be citizens of this country or some European nation. [Applause.]

I wish I had time to touch on the high lights of the findings of the Nye committee. When its findings were first made public I never dreamed that this Congress would ever seriously consider doing away with the embargo on arms and munitions of war during time of war. Apparently, however, we have forgotten some of the findings of the Nye committee. I may say in passing that while the Nye committee exposed a rotten business, in many cases they went too far, as such things always do, and indicted many loyal manufacturers who were simply doing their best to provide for the national defense of this country.

I hope no parliamentary subterfuge will be used to prevent the roll from being called sometime between now and the Fourth of July, and I am willing to stay even beyond the Fourth of July to get a roll call to find out whether the Members of this House will vote to limit the shipment of arms. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] for 6 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I was a Member of this House on April 6, 1917, when war was declared at 3 o'clock in the morning. That was to me the most serious hour of my life, and the vote I cast upon that occasion gave me more pause than any other vote I have cast. I say to you this evening that I think we are upon another serious and far-reaching vote; and, as God is my judge, in the vote that I shall cast tonight against the Vorys motion to recommit this bill and for the passage of the bill containing a repeal of the arms embargo, I am thinking first of my own America and next for the peace and happiness of the world. [Applause.]

I think no worse news could go from the Capital of this great democracy to all nations of the world tonight than for us to vote down the proposal carried in this bill and say that we will stand in crises, it matters not how many may come, as the Vorys motion would have us stand.

I was interested in the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut when he said that when bombs were dropping and people were dying, probably men, women, and children, the innocent being maimed, he did not want it said that those bombs were manufactured, or those planes were built, in the United States of America.

Let me call his attention to the fact that the Vorys amendment does not prevent the sale of airplanes, and when bombs are dropped from the airplanes that we send across the water they will be dropped because the Vorys amendment did not prevent it.

Mr. Chairman, we talk about immorality in connection with the exportation of arms. Is it immoral to ship a gun to China so that a Chinaman may protect his sacred fireside from invasion, or from the murder or ravage that may be committed upon his wife and upon his children? When great governments, ambitious men who have a desire to control the earth, attempt to stamp out liberty and democracy, is there any immorality in supplying arms to a little weak country so that it may let the dictators and the autocracies of the earth know that it can somewhere, even though it does not have a factory within its own boundaries, get arms to protect its liberty? [Applause.]

Is it immoral to stand up in this great democracy and say that we believe in freedom, that we believe in self-determination of people, or that we want in a world conflict the democracies of the earth to survive that conflict? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as God is my judge, and because I love peace and love America, I propose to vote for the motion to recommit, to put back in the bill the Vorys amendment, which provides for an embargo on arms and ammunition. [Applause.]

I am convinced that if this unneutral Bloom bill passes without such an embargo on arms, ammunition, and deadly weapons, it will mean that the United States of America will follow our arms traffic for blood money and war profits into the war itself. [Applause.]

Who is asking us to do away with this arms embargo? Has the American Federation of Labor and the wage earners of this country asked us to wipe out the arms embargo? Have the farmers or the National Grange asked us to do away with the arms embargo? Have the veterans who followed the arms traffic into war in 1917 opposed the arms embargo? Why, the last four speakers urging a ban on arms and ammunition are World War veterans. Have the church people and the rank and file of the peace-loving people of America manifested any desire to repeal the arms embargo? Ninety percent of all these groups want an embargo on arms. The only ones who have asked to do away with all arms embargoes are the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the House leadership, and some members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the entire Communist Party and Communist press. I agree with only one thing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] said, and that is that the world is on the verge of war. I believe that statement is true.

You can almost hear the beating of the wings of the angel of death as she hovers over England, France, Germany, Italy, and Poland tonight. I have been informed within the last hour that some of these nations have called back their officers from America. They are on the verge of war. Yet we propose to pass a law without an arms embargo, that will put us exactly where we were 22 years ago, and launch us into another World War. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have only one concern, and that is for the interest of my own people and my own country. I want to do everything I can to keep America out of war. [Applause.]

But if we must go to war, it must be in defense of the United States of America and not in defense of the munition makers and the war profiteers of America. [Applause.] It must be in defense of the interest of all of our people and not in the defense of blood money and war profits. That is exactly what this Bloom bill without an arms embargo does. It is an interventionist and a war-making bill. This is a great American issue; I hope there will be enough courageous Democrats who will vote with us to put the Vorys arms embargo back into the bill. But I can assure you that regardless of partisanship the people themselves in the last analysis will decide this issue, no matter what we do. The next Congress will be composed of representatives of the people who believe in an arms embargo and will vote for one in order to keep the United States of America out of all foreign wars. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama, the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with very great interest to the remarks just made by the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in which he seemed to conclude his argument with the proposition that his opposition to the pending bill would keep the United States of America out of war.

I desire to undertake to express my sentiments in a very few words with reference to modern warfare as a human institution. Like my beloved friend from Texas who has just spoken, I was a Member of this body when we had to make that memorable decision on the 6th day of April 1917 which carried our country and all of its resources and all of its manpower and all of its patriotism into the World War. Those of us, sir, who had to make up our minds upon that fateful night, all of us on both sides of the aisle—and at that time this House was controlled almost equally by both of the great major parties—all of us underwent, if I may so term it, almost a spiritual crucifixion before we cast our votes upon the resolution that carried us into the World War.

I despise war as a human institution. I believe that a great majority of the American people of all classes are passionately devoted to the great desire that this beloved country of ours shall keep out of war and shall not be drawn into its terrible vortex. After due consideration, one of the major reasons that I am supporting the proposed bill in contradiction to the conclusions of the gentleman from New York is that I honestly and fervently believe that in adopting this law we will be making a great gesture to keep the United States of America out of any world war. [Applause.]

I believe we should be realists upon this situation, and not sentimentalists. What is the situation abroad in world affairs today, not in our country, because fortunately we are still in a position of peace. But look abroad in other parts of the world and what do you see? You see the tramp, tramp, tramp of marching arms. Every account that you see, particularly from Europe, deals with the preparation for some impending conflict at arms.

It would not be becoming for me here tonight to make any reference, and I am glad that all Members who participated in this debate so far have refrained from any particular personal reference, to any of the great nations of Europe; but let us be realists. Where, if at all tonight—and I ask you to search your souls on both sides of this House to answer this question—where tonight or tomorrow, in what countries of the world will war be started, if at all? What have been the tendencies of some of the modern governments in Europe with reference to this question of imperialism and power, the tramp of marching arms, the great preparations in armament and otherwise for enforcing their will and their jurisdiction upon their neighbors? Answer that question. How many pictures do you see in the magazines, the newspapers and the newsreels, coming out of some countries about the activities of the populations of some of these governments to which I have referred? In which of them do you ever see pictures of the home and of the fireside and of the family altar and the useful and tranquil pursuits of the ordinary vocations of life? Where, on the contrary, do you see the flaunting of banners, threats of invasion against enemies, and threats of danger to the peace and security of the world?

This proposition we have pending tonight comes back home. I want to conclude my argument from the standpoint of a citizen of the United States of America. I want to say to you, after a very careful and, I trust, prudent observation and investigation of this whole question of neutrality, that we made a supreme and colossal mistake in policy, in national policy, if you please, when we departed a few years ago from the time-honored and time-tested constitutional principle of leaving the management of our foreign and diplomatic affairs in the hands of the President of the United States and of the State Department of this country. [Applause.] It had been lodged there securely and definitely for 145 years. Every incursion that we have attempted to make by these various neutrality laws in the last 3 or 4 years does but serve to teach us that it is absolutely impossible for the genius even of the Congress of the United States to enact a statute that contains real neutrality.

For this reason, as has definitely been pointed out by able arguments made on the floor of this House, it seems to me that on the whole case, upon the traditions of our Government, on a logical analysis of our constitutional system, time-tested in the years past as it has been, although we may have made some temporary mistake in assuming that Congress had the capacity to violate the constitutional principles with propriety and wisdom, it is best to return this night, by passing this law, to a practical repeal of all those futile efforts we have made to transcend and to displace the great constitutional principle which our fathers founded and which in the years past has been our sanctuary and our refuge in all our international relations.

I wish I had time to develop some other phases of this proposition. I think there have been very many arguments that have been made here from a sentimental standpoint that may have made some appeal to the hearts and maybe to the prejudices of the Members of this House. But remember that we are dealing tonight with probably the most stupendous and the most important legislative problem that has been submitted to the Congress of the United States since the World War.

I trust we will reach our decision tonight not upon the basis of sentimental appeal, and not upon the basis of resolutions that may have been received from certain organizations all over the country, although I appreciate their humanity and their good purposes. Rather, let us decide this question, this great, imperious, paramount question affecting the safety and security of the United States of America, on the basis of logic and on the basis of past experience.

It is my earnest belief, and I assert it, after undertaking to give to this proposition the sincerest and most earnest consideration of which I am capable, that if we pass this law tonight and lift this inhibition against the shipment of arms and ammunition to those who need them—who need them, as the gentleman from Texas pointed out—to defend their liberties, to defend their homes, and to defend their principles of self-government and personal liberty—and this is not a fight for the munitions makers, although that argument has been made—I feel that the safest and surest way for us to proceed is to remove the shackles and impediments now resting on the President of the United States and the Secretary of State and give them absolute freedom of action, as the founders of our Constitution conceived they should have, to govern from day to day and from hour to hour the incidents that may occur in this storm-tossed and tempestuous world.

The Congress of the United States is losing nothing of its power by the passage of this bill. There is still reserved to us the constitutional power to declare war. Nothing can take that away from us. Even this bill under one of its present amendments gives to the Congress of the United States the right to declare when a state of war exists between certain nations.

In conclusion, my friends, I appeal to you, on the basis that I have in such fragmentary fashion suggested to you, to return to the safe moorings of the Constitution and leave to him who is charged with that responsibility, whether he be Democratic or whether he be Republican, always the President of the United States of America, the right in the first instance to control and manage our diplomatic and foreign affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion offered by Mr. THILL:

"Mr. THILL moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out."

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, this is the most serious moment of my life. I have not talked on this measure for the last 3 days, and I offer this pro forma amendment so that I may speak to you for a few minutes.

I was astounded, I was amazed at the speeches of the majority leader and the Speaker of the House. I took occasion to read the debate in this House on April 5 and April 6, 1917; and the speeches made tonight by the majority leader and the Speaker so closely parallel the speeches made on that night that I can well see that the men on my right are now mentally inflamed and disturbed, as were those Members of Congress on April 6, 1917, when they were bombarded with the same type of emotional appeal. Note well, neither of these distinguished gentlemen said anything about the pending substitute amendment.

When President Wilson came before this House on April 2, 1917, he used these historic words:

We are glad, now that we see the facts with no veil of false pretense about them, to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German peoples included; for the rights of nations, great and small, and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and of obedience. The world must be made safe for democracy.

In the light of history that idealism has been shown to be impractical. This Nation is not powerful enough, it is not endowed with sufficient wisdom, in the present stage of civilization, to regulate and control all the nations of the world.

The majority leader mentioned the fact he was here on that memorable night of April 6 when this House voted on the resolution to declare war.

Here are the names of some gentlemen who are still with us in this House who voted for that declaration of war: MESSRS. SABATH, EDWARD T. TAYLOR, DOUGHTON, MAPES, RAY-

BURN, SUMNERS of Texas, TREADWAY, VINSON of Georgia, STEAGALL, TINKHAM, BANKHEAD, MARVIN JONES, LEA, MANSFIELD, SULLIVAN, DARROW, DOWELL, ROMJUE, WEAVER, ASHBROOK, and McANDREWS. The only man still here on the floor of the House who voted against war is the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. [Applause.]

Many of these men are now disillusioned. The respected gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] spoke yesterday and with all of the wisdom at his command, and in quiet, solemn dignity he announced that he was going to vote against the Bloom bill as written.

Now, in conclusion, let me read a poem, written by one of my constituents, which I feel we should adopt as a prayer tonight:

AMERICA'S OUR FATHER

Our Father who art above,
Instill in our hearts a greater love,
For the glorious liberties we have today,
Before it's too late and they're taken away.

Continue to give us our daily bread,
And grant us the power to keep our head
When radicals rave of their favorite "ism,"
With which they'd displace our Americanism.

Forgive us for meddling in foreign affairs;
Teach us to mind our business, not theirs;
To tend to our problems, and ours alone;
To better conditions right here at home.

Lead us not into war with the modern-day Neroses,
That would cost the lives of American heroes,
And wipe out democracy, or worse still,
Subject us all to a dictator's will.

Deliver us, our Father who art above,
From the loss of these rights we cherish and love,
So that each night when we kneel and pray,
We can say, "Thank God for the U. S. A."

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 173 and noes 146.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON and Mr. VORYS of Ohio to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 176 and noes 180.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. This substitute having been defeated by the will of the Members, I understand we now go back to the original proposition, the so-called Bloom bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise and report the bill with amendments.

Mr. FISH. With the Vorys amendment in it?

The CHAIRMAN. As one of the amendments.

Pursuant to the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the resolution, House Joint Resolution 306, pursuant to House Resolution 227, he reported the resolution back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the so-called Vorys amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 2, after line 15, insert the following:

"(c) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 (a) it shall thereafter be unlawful to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms or ammunition from any place in the United States to any belligerent states named in such proclamation."

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLOOM), there were ayes 195 and noes 187.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. There was so much confusion I would like to know if a vote "aye" is for the Vorys embargo amendment?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Vorys amendment, which has been read to the House. All Members are capable of drawing their conclusions with reference to the purport of the amendment.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 173, answered "present" 1, not voting 42, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BANKHEAD, and he answered "nay."

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Martin of Massachusetts (for) with Mr. Sabath (against).
 Mr. Andrews (for) with Mr. Warren (against).
 Mr. Short (for) with Mr. Cummings (against).
 Mr. Plumley (for) with Mr. Patrick (against).

 Mr. Summers of Texas with Mr. Connery.
 Mr. Fitzpatrick with Mrs. Norton.
 Mr. Kelly with Mr. Dies.
 Mr. Starnes of Alabama with Mr. Cartwright.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, my name was not called the second time.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from West Virginia present in the Hall and listening?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I was present and listening. I qualify.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman vote?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I vote "nay."

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from West Virginia is one of the most distinguished Members of the House and knows his rights.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] that he was present and his name was not called. The Chair must rely upon the integrity of the statements of all Members of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" but I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] demands a recapitulation of the vote.

The vote is extremely close. The Chair feels that in order to establish the accuracy of the record a recapitulation should be made.

The Clerk will call the names of those Members voting in the affirmative.

The Clerk called the names of those voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now call the names of those voting in the negative.

The Clerk called the names of those voting in the negative.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, my name was not called in the recapitulation or, if it was, I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as having voted "nay."

The Clerk will call the names of those Members who answered "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SABATH.

The SPEAKER. On the recapitulation of the vote the yeas are 194, and the nays are 196.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLOOM and Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 187, answered "present" 1, not voting 41, as follows:

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, once again I wish to announce that I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MARTIN, and desire to withdraw my vote, having voted "yea," and be recorded as being "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 345. Joint resolution providing an appropriation for the month of July 1939, for the Petroleum Conservation Division, Department of the Interior.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6791) entitled "An act making additional appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 326) entitled "An act making appropriations for work relief, relief, and to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940."

FEDERAL JUDGES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 237

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5939, a bill to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

THE FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT LIBRARY

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 238

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 118, a joint resolution to provide for the establishment and maintenance of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Library, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE AND SHIPPING ACTS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 224

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6746, a bill to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS

House Resolution 239

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5999, a bill to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the parole system.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a telegram sent to the Philadelphia Inquirer stating my views on neutrality and related subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (H. Rept. No. 1022) a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the manuscript submitted to the Senate by Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD on June 7, 1939, and referred to the Committee on Printing, containing a general description of the Army of the United States, its components, its arms, services, and bureaus, its military and nonmilitary activities, be printed with illustrations, as a public document; and that 10,700 additional copies shall be printed, with illustrations, and bound, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 copies to each of the Committees on Military Affairs of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to know what this refers to. It is now midnight.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged resolution. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, we can have a quorum and pass it. Will the gentleman explain the resolution? I do not like bringing up, at midnight, matters we know nothing about. I would like the gentleman to explain what this important matter is that he is bringing up at this late hour. No one knows anything about it. It is privileged, but we may have to have a quorum to pass it.

Mr. JARMAN. I assure the gentleman there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Printing to put anything over on anyone. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RICH], on the gentleman's side of the aisle, has agreed to this resolution, and I have taken the matter up with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who I do not believe is here at the moment, and he is in thorough agreement with it. This is a resolution that has passed the Senate. It is not necessary, but it is rather in order that it pass today rather than tomorrow. As far as the disposition of the documents is concerned, they are to be distributed in accordance with the gentleman's ideas of how such things should be distributed. I assure the gentleman I have been trying to get recognition on this resolution for 2 or 3 days, and I have no desire to put anything over.

Mr. MICHENER. The only question is, has the gentleman talked with the minority leader and the minority member on the committee about this matter?

Mr. JARMAN. Oh yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And they have consented to it?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes; both of them.

Mr. MICHENER. They have consented to bring it up at this time?

Mr. JARMAN. Not at this particular time, because they did not know when I would be recognized; any time when I did get recognition.

Mr. MICHENER. They agreed that it should be passed?

Mr. JARMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania agreed the day before yesterday, and the gentleman from Massachusetts agreed this morning, that it should be passed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Just why should this resolution be agreed to? Will the gentleman please explain it briefly?

Mr. JARMAN. I will explain it briefly, and then I do not care to yield further on that.

If the gentleman was listening he heard that this resolution referred to a document presented by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and descriptive of the Army of the United States. I have forgotten the number of copies the resolution provides for, but it is the resolution that has passed the Senate and has been sent over here with the request of the Senate Committee on Printing and of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs that it be agreed to. I have been trying for 2 or 3 days to get the resolution considered.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This is not propaganda?

Mr. JARMAN. I told you I was not trying to put anything over.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table of R. E. A. allotments by States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have a unanimous-consent request on the Clerk's desk, which I ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAYBURN asks unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Clerk be authorized to receive messages from the Senate and that the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled bills of each House and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell us what is expected to be brought up on Wednesday and Thursday of next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I intend to prefer another unanimous-consent request with reference to Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand the statement of the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have asked unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understood there would be no particular business tomorrow as a great many persons desire to be away.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is thought that there will not be any business tomorrow unless some emergency matter comes up. The Senate is still in session, but I do not believe we will have any business tomorrow.
